INCREASE OF CAPITAL AND LENDING POWER OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF WASHINGTON (H. DOC. NO. 881)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

To the Congress of the United States:

As a result of the war in Europe, far-reaching changes in world affairs have occurred, which necessarily have repercussions on the economic life both of the United States and of the other American republics. All American republics in some degree make a practice of selling, and should sell, surplus products to other parts of the world, and we in the United States export many items that are also exported by other countries of the Western Hemisphere.

The course of the war, the resultant blockades and counter-blockades, and the inevitable disorganization is preventing the flow of these surplus products to their normal markets. Necessarily this has caused distress in various parts of the New World and will continue to cause distress until foreign trade can be resumed on a normal basis and the seller of these surpluses is in a position to protect himself in disposing of his products. Until liberal commercial policies are restored and fair trading on a commercial plane is reopened distress may be continued.

I therefore request that the Congress give prompt consideration to increasing the capital and lending power of the Export-Import Bank of Washington by $500,000,000, and removing some of the restrictions on its operations to the end that the bank may be of greater assistance to our neighbors south of the Rio Grande, including financing the handling and orderly marketing of some part of their surpluses.

It is to be hoped that before another year world trade can be reestablished, but, pending this adjustment, we in the United States should join with the peoples of the other republics of the Western Hemisphere in meeting their problems. I call the attention of Congress to the fact that by helping our neighbors we will be helping ourselves. It is in the interests of the producers of our country, as well as in the interests of producers of other American countries, that there shall not be a disorganized or cutthroat market in those commodities which we all export.

No sensible person would advocate an attempt to prevent the normal exchange of commodities between other continents and the Americas, but what can and should be done is to prevent excessive fluctuations caused by distressed selling resulting from temporary interruption in the flow of trade, or the fact that there has not yet been reestablished a system of free exchange. Unless exporting countries are able to assist their nationals, they will be forced to bargain as best they can.

As has heretofore been made clear to the Congress, the Export-Import Bank is operated by directors representing the Departments of State, Treasury, Agriculture, and Commerce, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and is under the supervision of the Federal Loan Administrator, so that all interested branches of our Government participate in any loans that are authorized, and the directors of the bank should have a free hand as to the purposes for which loans are authorized and the terms and conditions upon which they are made.

I therefore request passage of appropriate legislation to this end.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 22, 1940.

LAWS OF PUERTO RICO

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying document, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 23 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith certified copies of laws enacted by the fourth regular session of the fourteenth Legislature of Puerto Rico, February 12 to April 15, 1940.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 22, 1940.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

STONY POINT LIGHT STATION RESERVATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to further amend the act of July 30, 1937, authorizing the conveyance of a portion of the Stony Point Light Station Reservation to the Palisades Interstate Park Commission, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

GUY F. ALLEN, CHIEF DISBURSING OFFICER, TREASURY DEPARTMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of Guy F. Allen, Chief Disbursing Officer, Treasury Department, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

EXTENSION OF VOCATIONAL EDUCATION AND CIVILIAN REHABILITATION TO THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to extend to the Virgin Islands the provisions of certain laws relating to vocational education and civilian rehabilitation, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

ACQUISITION OF ADDITIONAL LAND ALONG MOUNT VERNON MEMORIAL HIGHWAY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for the acquisition of additional land along the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway in exchange for certain dredging privileges, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at Astoria, Oreg., by the sixth annual convention of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, favoring the enactment of House bill 8616, to provide for cooperation with the States for the relief of unemployment, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at Astoria, Oreg., by the sixth annual convention of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, endorsing the position taken by the Congress of Industrial Organizations for the solution of the problem of reuniting the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and all labor into one organization, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at a mass meeting held under the auspices of the United Lithuanian American Societies of Essex County, at Newark, N. J., protesting against the Communist invasion of the Baltic States of Europe, and favoring withdrawal of the recognition of the Soviet Union of Russia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Department of Massachusetts, United Spanish War Veterans, at Northampton, Mass., favoring increased Federal investigation of "fifth column" activities in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Lions Clubs of Gibsland, La.; Frederick, Md.; Van Buren, Ark., and Lott and Waxahachie, Tex., favoring the adoption of an adequate national-defense program and the suppression of all subversive activities in the Nation, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Fred W. Klasey, precinct committeeman of Covington precinct, South Sioux City, Nebr., remonstrating against the confirmation of Ralph Kilzer to be postmaster at South Sioux City, Nebr., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Department of Massachusetts, United Spanish War Veterans, at Northampton, Mass., favoring the enactment of a compulsory selective-service law, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Theta Delta Chi Fraternity, Chicago, Ill., favoring immediate development of the Nation's military, naval, and air forces, including all necessary material, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the United States, praying that a day be set aside for prayer and repentance, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Local No. 88, United American Artists Union, Congress of Industrial Organizations, of San Francisco, Calif., favoring the adoption of an adequate national-defense program, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Democratic Youth Federation of California, San Francisco, Calif., protesting against the so-called Smith Act, providing for fingerprinting of aliens, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of members of the Yo-Ma-Co Club, of San Diego, Calif., praying for the adoption of an adequate national-defense program, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOLT presented the petition of Cabin Creek Post, No. 80, American Legion, of Cabin Creek, W. Va., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 134) providing for continuing retirement pay, under certain conditions, of officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability while in the service of the United States during the World War, and for other purposes, and remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 409) to protect American labor and stimulate the employment of American citizens on American jobs, which was ordered to lie on the table.

S. 4119. An act to provide for the transfer of certain land in the De Soto National Forest to the Secretary of War for use for military purposes.

BILL INTRODUCED

Mr. SHEPPARD introduced a bill (S. 4203) to provide for the employment on active duty of retired personnel of the Regular Army, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INCREASE OF CAPITAL AND LENDING POWER OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] I introduce a bill to increase the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I also ask that a statement of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and referred as requested, and the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 4204) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The statement presented by Mr. GLASS (for Mr. WAGNER) is as follows:

STATEMENT OF ROBERT F. WAGNER, CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY OF THE SENATE

Developments in Europe have made us more aware than ever of the necessity of strengthening our ties with the countries of the Western Hemisphere in meeting the common problems of economics and defense. Accordingly, I am today introducing a bill which will lift restrictions of existing law on loans to or transactions with foreign countries insofar as they affect the dealing of the bank with the countries of the Western Hemisphere and permit the Export-Import Bank to make loans to assist in developing the resources, in stabilizing the economies, and in furthering the orderly marketing of the products of such countries.

These additional powers are to be exercised only upon the request of the Federal Loan Administrator with the approval of the President and subject to such conditions and limitations as they may impose. The bill also increases from $200,000,000 to $700,000,000 the amount of loans which the bank may have outstanding at any one time and authorizes the R. F. C. to provide the bank with funds not to exceed $500,000,000.

FINANCIAL STATEMENTS AND OTHER INFORMATION CONCERNING CERTAIN GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Mr. BYRD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 292), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed (1) to prepare and transmit to the Senate forthwith or as soon as practicable a complete financial statement for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1940, of each of the agencies and corporations enumerated in Senate Resolution No. 150, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, agreed to June 27, 1939; and (2) to secure and transmit to the Senate immediately a copy of the last annual report of each such agency and corporation, whether or not such report, pursuant to law, is required to be made to the Congress. The financial statements of such agencies and corporations herein required for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1940, shall be of the same character and shall include similar information for such fiscal year as the financial statement of such agencies and corporations for prior fiscal years heretofore transmitted to the Senate pursuant to such resolution and printed in Senate Document No. 172, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session.

ORDER FOR SECRETARY TO RECEIVE MESSAGES, PETITIONS, BILLS, AND REPORTS

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the adjournment following today's session the Secretary of the Senate may receive messages from the President of the United States or the House of Representatives for appropriate references; and that petitions, reports of committees, and bills may also be received by the Secretary for appropriate reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

VOLUNTARY ARMY ENLISTMENTS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, underlying the question of conscription or universal service is the primary question of whether or not enlistments are proceeding on a voluntary basis at a satisfactory pace. I have been seeking information from the War Department on that subject. I present a letter from Major General Adams, Adjutant General of the Army, and ask that it be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 15, 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR VANDENBERG: Replying to your inquiry of July 11, 1940, and in response to your specific question, "Does the present experience of the War Department justify the belief that its personnel requirements under the national-defense program as at present authorized will be provided by voluntary enlistment through regular existing channels and methods?" it is the opinion of the Army recruiting service that under present conditions the additional enlisted personnel required under the national-defense program to raise the strength of the Regular Army to 375,000 men can be procured by voluntary enlistment within a period of approximately 5 months from the time the complete task is assigned to the recruiting service for execution. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 11, 1940, on page 14396, contains recently compiled figures furnished by me.

The importance of the time factor presents the great problem of the War Department under a system of voluntary recruiting. It is the desire of the Chief of Staff to obtain men as quickly as possible for the organization of new units and to bring existing units up to full strength.

Respectfully yours,

E. S. ADAMS,
Major General,
The Adjutant General.

PROPOSED DEPORTATION OF HARRY R. BRIDGES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have received many letters regarding House bill 9766, to deport one Harry Renton Bridges, complaining that the Senate Committee on the Judiciary has not favorably reported that bill to the Senate. The bill to deport Bridges was not referred to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, but to the Senate Committee on Immigration. Had the bill been referred to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary it would have been reported favorably.

An enemy within the gates and hammering on the gates from within may be, if not more dangerous, equally as dangerous as an enemy outside the gates hammering from without. The recent melancholy and bloody history of Norway, Belgium, Holland, and France is evidence too convincing as to the danger of an enemy hammering upon the gates from within. All too long has the hospitality of the United States been violated by this man Bridges, who is an alien and therefore is a guest of the United States. All too long have the American people been tortured by that evil, unhappy man. I hope the Senate Committee on Immigration will, at an early date, report the bill proposing his deportation.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I was very happy, indeed, to hear my distinguished colleague from Arizona make mention of the Bridges case. As we all know, a bill designed for the deportation of Bridges was introduced in the House of Representatives and was passed by that body. It came over to the Senate several weeks ago and was referred to the Committee on Immigration. At that time the chairman of that committee of the Senate designated a subcommittee of three Senators to consider the bill. I understand the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is a member of that subcommittee. Several days ago when the Senator from Arizona was interesting himself in the subject upon which he spoke a moment ago, the Bridges case, I made inquiry of the Senator from Utah, who was then in the Chamber, as to what disposition, if any, had been made of the bill. I was informed then, according to my recollection, that up to that time the committee had not held a meeting, but that they proposed to meet within a week. I sincerely trust that the Senator from Utah and the other members of the committee designated to serve with him as a subcommittee will give immediate attention to the subject, in which particularly the members of the American Legion have been primarily interested since the bill was first introduced. As a matter of fact, in fairness to the American Legion, and to give praise where praise is deserved, I may say that the probabilities are that had it not been for the activities and interest evidenced by virtually every American Legion post throughout the country, the bill never would have been introduced, and, doubtless, if it had not been for the very fine, thorough, and patriotic American activities of the Legion, the bill never would have been passed by the other House. Now that progress has been made to the extent of having brought about the passage by the other House of the bill, and since it is pending in the Senate of the United States, I believe that the American people are looking to this body certainly to give the bill consideration. I hope that they will do so without delay. It appears that we are going to be here for many months to come, and that is well, because the American people are interested to have us stay here and look after their business.

As soon as I am able to ascertain when the committee will meet I shall be very happy indeed to advise other Members of this body and those who are not Members of the Congress of the United States as to its meeting, because, according to the letters I have received in the form of inquiries, many persons are desirous of appearing before the committee. We have too long coddled Communists and Nazis and Fascists and alien criminals and those who are enemies of the American Government. The people are becoming tired of such coddling and want action. I believe they are desirous of action in this particular instance. The people of America want to know whether or not we are to get rid of this man Bridges, who certainly is not friendly to our form of government and who has evidenced that fact in San Francisco on innumerable occasions. Once upon a time, not so many years ago, his activities cost the taxpayers of America a great deal of money, and particularly they cost money to the investors of America who were interested in shipping; and they were not all millionaires. I surmise, as in the case of all other corporations of that nature, that many widows and orphans had their funds invested in shipping. His activities in holding up the American mail, virtually lowering the American flag on the coast, constituted an outrage; and yet the American people have not as yet been aroused to his activities and the harm he has done to this country.

A few moments ago I met in the hall my colleague from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and my colleague from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. They asked me if I was going to talk today. I said, "Yes." "What are you going to talk about?" I said, "I am going to talk about communism, the Nazis who are overrunning the country, and un-American activities." They said, "The same thing?" I said, "Yes; the same thing." I said, "Speaking of the same thing, you will recall that almost every day for 5 long years I have spoken on the floor of the Senate urging the Congress for God's sake to pass a law providing for the mandatory registration and fingerprinting of aliens. For 5 long years I have talked about that; and, thank Heaven, the Congress of the United States has finally passed a law, for the protection of the American people, making it mandatory upon aliens in this country to register and be fingerprinted in order that we might know how many there are here, where they are, what they are doing, what they have been doing, where they came from, how long they have been here, and so forth."

So I am going to talk today about Communists. I am going to talk about the activities of the Nazi bund. I am going to talk about the Fascist organizations which we believe to be un-American. I want to say to my colleagues that if I get a chance I propose to talk about that subject every day for the next 5 years, or until such time as we can outlaw the Communist Party, the bund, and all similar organizations. I shall not apologize to my colleagues for doing so.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. That will not be necessary, because I recognize that the able Senator from Arizona, who now wishes to interrupt me, is equally interested in the subject. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, when I rose it was not to make explanation concerning myself. My philosophy of public life has been not to explain, because when you once undertake to explain you will tomorrow be explaining your explanation; but I believed it was due to the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I happen to be chairman—and I am proud to have that honor—I believed it was an act of courtesy due to the members of the committee as well as due to the Senate, to say that the bill proposing to deport this evil and unhappy man Bridges, who has tortured the American people far too long, was not sent to the Committee on the Judiciary but was referred to the Committee on Immigration. I am not to be understood as criticizing the Committee on Immigration, because I have no doubt they will give the bill careful consideration, and make a report at an early date; but I say again that the melancholy and bloody recent history of Norway and Holland and Belgium, and particularly France, demonstrates to any man who thinks into things instead of around things that an enemy hammering on the gates from within is even more dangerous than the enemy hammering from without.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator immensely for that contribution. In response thereto, I desire to say that I am 100 percent in accord with every single word that fell from his lips. I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate the Senator from Arizona, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate of the United States, because it was his committee which gave immediate consideration to the bill which the House sent to the Senate relative to the mandatory registration and fingerprinting of aliens. When it reached the committee presided over by the able Senator from Arizona it was given immediate attention. I think the American people are indebted to our distinguished friend for the fine service he has rendered to them in immediately passing upon favorably and reporting to this body that bill, which was forthwith passed without hesitation or delay.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to yield to my distinguished colleague from the State of Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is not necessary for any Member of this body to make any excuse or defense upon behalf of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], who is chairman of the Committee on Immigration; but, for fear that there might be some who would consider that what has been said could be construed as a criticism of the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, I should like briefly to state the situation.

When the bill came over from the House the Senator from Georgia immediately, as is the custom of committees of this body, referred it to the department involved, the Department of Justice. Within 1 day after the report came back from the Department the Senator from Georgia called a meeting of the Committee on Immigration, and a subcommittee was appointed to consider the bill. That happened just 3 days before the Republican Convention met. There have been a number of efforts upon the part of the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], to arrange for a meeting of the subcommittee; but since that time events have occurred which have made it impossible for the subcommittee to meet.

I wish to assure the Senator from Arizona and the Senate that there is no desire upon the part of anybody in the Committee on Immigration to delay the bill, and particularly to give assurance that the chairman of the Committee on Immigration has acted with all possible expedition with respect to the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, after that explanation I desire to say that I am happy to have had the opportunity of yielding to my distinguished colleague. I assure him that there was no reflection upon the part of the Senator from Arizona or myself relative to the chairman of the Immigration Committee, because we happen to know personally as well as generally that no committee of this body has a more able chairman than the junior Senator from the State of Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. I know, just as the Senator from Washington has stated, that the day following the arrival of the bill here it was dispatched to the proper official of the Government for comment, according to my recollection, and that immediately after the return of the Senator from Georgia he designated a subcommittee to consider the bill, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] being the chairman thereof. There was not the slightest idea of casting any reflection upon the Senator from Georgia. We know that he is a fine chairman, and I think we know how he stands on this subject. All congratulations to him for the fine work he has done. In pursuance of that thought I may add, in fairness to the Senator from Georgia, that I have introduced in this body a number of bills which have been referred to his committee, and I have always received prompt action in the committee so far as those bills are concerned.

Mr. President, at this time I ask unanimous consent that there be published in the Appendix of the RECORD an article by the pen of Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, entitled "Is There a Spy Menace?" Mr. Hoover says "Yes." This is a brief article. I happened to observe it recently in the magazine section of the New York Herald Tribune, entitled "This Week." I thought the readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would find interest in the article, because we hear so much about the "fifth column," and alien enemies, and spies, and saboteurs, and so forth. I introduce it at this juncture of my remarks, because I expect to speak briefly pertaining to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

(The article appears in the Appendix.)

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am brought now to the activities of the Kiwanis Club of Graham, N. C.

When I returned to Washington from Chicago I found on my desk printed resolutions. I desire to read those resolutions. They were adopted by the Graham (N. C.) Kiwanis Club. They are as follows:

> Whereas the United States of America, realizing that the present war is becoming a world-wide conflict involving the Western Hemisphere without its consent, has renounced her policy of neutrality in favor of a policy of nonbelligerency, as compatible with conditions as they exist; and
> Whereas our defense at this time consists in sending all possible aid to the Allies, consisting of all types of materials of war, and sustenance; and
> Whereas this makes it apparent that at this time America's first line of defense is the army of men and women who constitute our industrial organizations—

The next word is "Therefore," but before proceeding with the remainder of the resolution I wish to digress to insist again, in reference to national defense, that those in authority, and particularly those connected with the State Department, give immediate attention to two resolutions I offered in this body many months ago pertaining to a subject about which I have spoken many times, which subject I first approached several years ago, to wit, the acquisition of islands in the Caribbean and in the north Atlantic and in the far North, approaching the Arctic, which are possessed by Great Britain and France.

Months ago, as many of my colleagues know, I submitted resolutions authorizing the President of the United States to enter into negotiations with the heads of the Governments of Great Britain and France to endeavor to acquire the island possessions in the Western Hemisphere belonging to those countries. Those resolutions were forthwith referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the very able chairman of that committee sent the resolutions to the State Department for comment, and, according to information which I have but recently received, the State Department has never responded to the suggestions set out in the aforementioned resolutions.

Mr. President, I approach this subject from a national-defense standpoint in view of the fact that the resolution to which I refer as having been adopted by the Kiwanis Club of Graham, N. C., mentions our first line of defense in connection with our industrial organizations, insofar as labor is concerned.

I say that we should provide for ourselves a physical first line of defense. At this session we have appropriated, according to the tabulation made a few days ago by my beloved friend the able senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], about $17,000,000,000 as a total for national defense.

With the expenditure of that vast amount of money we can acquire for ourselves a real physical national defense, in the form of outposts, without it costing us anything, if we will act. Some may inquire how? By negotiating with the Governments of France and Great Britain to let us obtain their island possessions in the Western Hemisphere, with the understanding that the amounts agreed upon, whatever they might be, shall be struck off from the several billion dollars those governments have owed us for a number of years past.

I know, of course, that we of America are in sympathy with the last democracy remaining upon the face of the earth outside the Western Hemisphere, that we are grieved over the falling of France as a result of the advance of the totalitarian countries. But the time has arrived when we must consider primarily and profoundly and seriously the interests of our own Government at home, which soon will unquestionably be in peril as a result, first, of the enemy from within; secondly, from a war of commerce in the Western Hemisphere; and, thirdly and lastly, from the enemy without.

France owes us about $4,000,000,000; Great Britain owes us about $5,000,000,000. I cannot recall the exact figures, but they total into the billions. Now, while we are making expenditure of $17,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' money, while we are considering the Burke-Wadsworth bill to conscript millions of young men in this country for the purpose of handling the arms we are to provide, we should consider the welding of a steel band of defense around the United States extending from the coast of South America, from Port-of-Spain, the capital of Trinidad, northward through the Caribbean to Bermuda, and from there northward, approaching the Arctic, to St. Pierre and Miquelon. Then we should go westward to Alaska and should fortify the Alaskan coast, which is now being given consideration, and concerning which appropriations have been made. Then we should proceed southward through the Pacific to the Hawaiian Islands, down by Costa Rica, the Panama Canal, and as far south as the islands, just south of the Equator, which belong to the Republic of Ecuador.

If we do that, in the acquisition of those island possessions we will have done as much without cost toward the protection of the United States and the protection of the Panama Canal, as we will have done virtually in making expenditure of $17,000,000,000.

Trinidad belongs to Great Britain. Proceeding to the Windward and the Leeward Islands, and we find a number of islands which belong to Great Britain and France. Proceeding northward and we find Bimini, only 50 miles off the coast of Florida; we find Nassau, only 150 miles off the coast of Florida; we find, further north, Bermuda, 500 miles off the coast of North Carolina; and it will be remembered that we have no outposts in the North Atlantic.

Proceeding northward toward the Arctic, we come to the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, which belong to the French. If we are to undertake the protection of Canada, as well as Central and South America, unquestionably, eventually we will want to make arrangements by which we can establish outposts in Newfoundland, because, as we know, in Newfoundland has been constructed one of the finest airports in the world for the use of planes which hop the Atlantic by way of the northern circle.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Speaking of crossing the Atlantic from Newfoundland, it was my pleasure recently to accompany a delegation from Botwood to Ireland and then to Southampton and London. We learned much of the value of air bases along the Atlantic coast.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Did the Senator fly the northern route?

Mr. LUNDEEN. We flew the northern route. Of course, these bases are tremendously important.

Mr. REYNOLDS. My recollection is that Signor Balbo, the real ace flier of the Italian air force, who recently lost his life in North Africa, when flying the North Atlantic with a squadron of planes proceeded to Alaska by way of Labrador and other points. As I was about to say, perhaps at some time we shall enter into negotiations with Canada for the establishment of some bases in that northern country. Of course, we could fly directly across the North American Continent and no doubt establish a base at Point Barrow, which is the northernmost point in the Western Hemisphere. Then we would come to the Little Diomede Island and the Big Diomede Island. I may state at this point that information has reached me, information which I conveyed to The Assistant Secretary of War, Col. Louis Johnson, that the Russians are now fortifying the Big Diomede Island, which they own. We own the Little Diomede, and they are separated only by a mile of ocean. In addition to that, I have other information to the effect that the Russians are fortifying their coast more strongly than ever before, and that is not far from the American coast.

Before I leave a discussion of the Arctic let me point out another matter, which I hope will be remembered, and I hope that these words will reach the State Department. Two years ago I submitted a resolution in the Senate authorizing the State Department to ascertain the legal status of the possession of an island called Wrangell Island. This year I offered a similar resolution. Wrangell Island is directly between Point Barrow and the Siberian coast. Wrangell Island is the size of Jamaica. Wrangell Island within a quarter of a century will be one of the most important islands in all the world, because the time may come when we shall experience difficulty with the Soviet Union; the time will come when we shall fly directly from New York City to the capital of the Philippines, Manila, and in so doing we will fly directly across Wrangell Island; and the only stop, no doubt, will be Wrangell Island, where factories can be established and where places for the taking off of passenger planes can be provided without any difficulty or expense.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will yield in a moment. My resolution was forwarded by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to the State Department, and I am informed that in a year no word has come from that Department. I am thoroughly of the opinion, as are innumerable others, who have been in the Arctic and have studied conditions, that that is going to be one of the most important of points if we should become involved in war with the Soviet Union. But if we should never become so involved, it would certainly be an important point from the standpoint of modern air transportation.

Now I yield to the able Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wonder if the distinguished Senator, who has given so much time and research to this subject of land bases, airplane bases, and sea bases, for which he should be highly commended, and I know the public appreciates it, as well as the Senate—I wonder if the Senator would agree with me that there should be a great airplane base and seaplane base at Dutch Harbor as well as at Anchorage and Kodiak?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, certainly.

Mr. LUNDEEN. We are now building a great airfield at Fairbanks, inland, and we are building at Nome, and one base north of Nome. I notice on the map, of course, the enlargement of the base at Sitka, and one or two others, and then going to Anchorage, but I find nothing being done at Dutch Harbor or Unalaska, which is farther west, and there should be a strong base there.

Mr. REYNOLDS. For some time we have had a Coast Guard station at Dutch Harbor and at Unalaska across from Dutch Harbor, and appropriations have been made to the extent of about $12,300,000 for the establishment of a base at Unalaska. The establishment of a base at Unalaska is virtually the establishment of a base at Dutch Harbor, because they are just across a little body of water from one another. You can see from one to the other.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I know, but I wonder whether that appropriation provides for improvements there for a first-class air base as well as a sea base.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes, it does; because that is not going to cost very much.

Mr. LUNDEEN. A recent map published in the press gave the Anchorage and Kodiak bases but did not show anything at Unalaska nor did it show anything at Dutch Harbor.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Surveys have been made for Dutch Harbor.

Mr. LUNDEEN. But I am asking the able Senator, has anything been done about it except surveying?

Mr. REYNOLDS. My understanding is that only surveys are in contemplation so far, but they have in mind at the same time—and it is well that they have—the creation of establishments of defense farther westward toward Russia and Japan; in other words, the establishment of defense bases along the Aleutian Islands, which extend for about 1,200 miles westward beyond Unalaska. The island that is farthest west in the Pacific is Attu, and Attu, as I stated a while ago, is only one-half hour by plane from Japanese territory, and Attu is only about 1 hour and 45 minutes from Russian territory.

I agree with the Senator that certainly now, in view of the situation all over the world, matters being as chaotic as they are, we should in this great national-defense program provide for the establishment of bases in the section that the Senator referred to.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Will the Senator permit me to venture the statement that these billions of dollars we are appropriating now are being put into some weapons, and that is very well, provided we do not give them away to somebody; providing we keep them for American defense. But weapons become obsolete. They disappear. But if we acquire these bases that the Senator has so ably described here, we will have them and they will not become obsolete, and these bases, whether naval, air bases, or land bases will serve for American defense. If we acquire these island bases on the Pacific and the Atlantic, both north and south, they will be used in the interest of hemispherical defense, Monroe Doctrine defense, the American hemisphere defense, as I should like to call it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The American defense.

Mr. LUNDEEN. And that is American defense. If we build these bases we can show America some actual results, something concrete and definite, and not a lot of weapons which in a short time will become obsolete. Even a warship in a short time becomes obsolete and is taken out of service, and one wonders what became of the billions of dollars we appropriated. But if we establish bases at these points, and make them permanent, they will stay there down through the centuries for our protection.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In other words, arms soon get out of date, they are worn out, but these island possessions that I mention now, will form a steel band of defense around the United States, and will be there as long as the world remains. Proceeding southward from Attu, the most western island of the Aleutian group, we come to the Hawaiian group.

At this time I wish to state again that I think we should endeavor to bring about negotiations between the Republic of Mexico and the United States for our acquisition of the Mexican Peninsula, because on that peninsula, and particularly toward the tail end of it, as a matter of fact, we can establish both seaplane bases and airplane bases without great difficulty or without a great deal of expense.

Lying between the peninsula of Mexico and the main body of the Republic of Mexico there are deep waters capable of concealing swift gunboats and submarines and portions of battle fleets.

Farther southward we should get Goose Island, which belongs to Costa Rica, and Cocos Island, likewise one of its possessions, and as I stated a moment ago, farther south, below the Equator, some of the Dry Tortugas Islands, which belong to Ecuador now.

For several years I have been talking about the acquisition of the island possessions of France and Great Britain in this hemisphere. I am sorry indeed that my suggestions were not considered and passed upon and proceeded upon, because if they had been considered, and if actual progress had been made in carrying them out, unquestionably we could have obtained the possessions of France in the Western Hemisphere, to be credited to their indebtedness to our country, and had we done that before France fell, before she was devoured by the totalitarian powers, there would not have been the embarrassment that perhaps we should now experience, regardless of the Monroe Doctrine. And why? Because France was then an independent republic. France then could have negotiated with us for the transfer of these islands, and no doubt would have been glad to have done so if she had been properly approached in a friendly manner.

Now, as the result of our not having taken that action, what do we find? We find that France owns Devil's Islands—I say "islands," because there are three main ones—upon which her prisoners are located, about 5 miles off French Guiana. The French owned—I put this in the past tense, because we do not know what is going to happen to them now since France was conquered by the totalitarian powers—French Guiana, north of Brazil, Martinique, and other islands in the Carribbean, and among the Leeward Islands. In addition to that the French owned St. Pierre and Miquelon.

All those islands, from South America northward, are absolutely essential to us in order to establish a real permanent defense in the Atlantic. Since we did not take advantage of that opportunity, no doubt we shall now experience embarrassment and perhaps trouble in trying to get them. We now know that we need them and we want them. We know that they are not going to be profitable from an economical standpoint. We have studied the statistics with respect to all those islands. The Virgin Islands have not been profitable from the economical standpoint, nor has Puerto Rico, but we need them for defense. The American people are demanding defense for this country, and I say we ought to have these other islands now for that purpose.

If ever, unfortunately, we are called upon to give the blood of American sons in battle to defend the shores of America, let that blood be spilt in the Atlantic or in the Pacific, and let not one drop of it be spilt upon the fertile soil of America. To assure us of that we must of necessity be the possessors of these islands, so that if fighting ever takes place by the forces of America, the fighting will occur outside the continental United States. Let us prepare for ourselves not alone an adequate national defense but such a perfect national defense that it cannot be penetrated by battleships or by airplanes. To do that we must have the outposts that the Senator has mentioned, and that I have described.

Now so much for national-defense outposts.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the able Senator yield further?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will say that the Senator's able argument would apply also to the islands belonging to the Netherlands and those belonging to Denmark also, would it not?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; certainly.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I do not believe the Senator would advocate taking a defeatist position, now that events have transpired as they have, but that we should still endeavor to negotiate to get those islands, and if we do not succeed, if we run into difficulties, we should proceed in the interest of national defense and go down there with the armed forces of America and protect this country.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I make the point that we could have done it with less difficulty had we acted sooner, and, insofar as I am personally concerned, I wish to say that I would never permit the totalitarian powers abroad to come here and establish bases, or claim possession of anything in the Western Hemisphere—and let that be well understood. We could not, as a matter of fact, permit such a thing under the Monroe Doctrine.

Insofar as the resolution by the Kiwanis Club of Graham, N. C., is concerned, I left off reading at the word "Therefore." I continue:

Be it resolved, That the Kiwanis Club of Graham, N. C., petition the Governor of North Carolina, and the Congress of the United States, through our Representatives in the National Congress to—

What?—

to insure the efficient working of this vast army of American labor—

By outlawing all anti-American organizations.

At this juncture I ask to have printed in the RECORD a bill which I introduced on May 28 entitled "A bill to outlaw the Communist Party, the German-American Bund, and all organizations, groups, or individuals associated therewith, who seek to overthrow the Government of the United States by force or violence through the advocacy of criminal anarchy, criminal communism, criminal nazi-ism, and criminal fascism." Instead of reading the bill, I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 4132) is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That criminal anarchy, criminal communism, criminal nazi-ism, or criminal fascism are doctrines that existing forms of constitutional government should be overthrown by force or violence or by any other unlawful means, or by assassination of officials of the Government of the United States or of the several States. The advocacy of such doctrines either by word of mouth or writing or the promotion of such doctrines independently or in collaboration with or under the guidance of officials of a foreign state or an international revolutionary party or group is a felony.

SEC. 2. Any person who——

(a) By word of mouth or writing advocates, advises, or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of overthrowing or overturning existing forms of constitutional government by force or violence; of disobeying or sabotaging or hindering the carrying out of the laws, orders, or decrees of duly constituted civil, naval, or military authorities; or by the assassination of officials of the Government of the United States or of the several States or by any unlawful means or under the guidance of or in collaboration with officials, agents, or representatives of a foreign state or an international revolutionary party or group; or

(b) Prints, publishes, edits, issues, or knowingly circulates, sells, distributes, or publicly displays any book, paper, document, or written or printed matter in any form, containing or advocating, advising or teaching the doctrine that constitutional government should be overthrown by force, violence, or any unlawful means; or

(c) Openly, willfully, and deliberately urges, advocates, or justifies by word of mouth or writing the assassination or unlawful killing or assaulting of any official of the Government of the United States or of the several States because of his official character or any other crime, with intent to teach, spread, or advocate the propriety of the doctrines of criminal anarchy, criminal communism, criminal nazi-ism, or criminal fascism; or

(d) Organizes or helps to organize or becomes a member of or voluntarily assembles with any society, group, or assembly of persons formed to teach or advocate such doctrines; or

(e) Becomes a member of, associated with, or promotes the interest of any criminal anarchistic, communistic, nazi-istic, or fascistic organization, or helps to organize or becomes a member of or affiliated with any subsidiary organization or associated group of persons who advocates, teaches, or advises the principles of criminal anarchy, criminal communism, criminal nazi-ism, or criminal fascism;

Shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof be subject to imprisonment for not more than 10 years or a fine of not more than $10,000, or both.

SEC. 3. Whenever two or more persons assemble for the purpose of promoting, advocating, or teaching the doctrines of criminal anarchy, criminal communism, criminal nazi-ism, or criminal fascism, as defined in section 1 of this act, such an assembly or organization is unlawful, and every person voluntarily participating therein by his presence, aid, or instigation shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be subject to imprisonment for not more than 10 years or a fine of not more than $10,000, or both.

SEC. 4. No owner, agent, superintendent, janitor, caretaker, or occupant of any place, building, or room shall willfully and knowingly permit therein any assemblage of persons prohibited by section 3 of this act, and if such person after notification that the premises are so used permits such use to be continued, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof subject to imprisonment for not more than 1 year or fine of not more than $1,000, or both.

SEC. 5. Every editor or publisher of a book, newspaper, or serial, and every manager of a partnership or incorporated association by which a book, newspaper, or serial is issued, is chargeable with the publication of any matter contained in such book, newspaper, or serial. But in every prosecution therefor the defendant may show in his defense that the matter complained of was published without his knowledge or fault and against his wishes by another who had no authority from him to make the publication and whose act was disavowed by him so soon as known.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the able Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wonder if the Senator would include organizations which occupy whole pages in American newspapers advocating that we give away our weapons to foreign powers and strip Uncle Sam of his defenses in the interest of foreign nations. I think they are un-American, pro-European, and disloyal.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much. My bill at present includes the Communist Party, the German-American Bund, and similar Fascist organizations. However, I will say to the Senator that I have in mind additional bills which will cover other organizations in the United States which are preaching certain principles in reference to neglecting the American flag and the best interests of the United States.

Continuing with the resolution which I was reading:

By registering all aliens in this country and requiring periodical reports by aliens at local police stations.

By appropriate action to be taken to insure against the continuous action of known agents, or persons, fomenting conditions calculated to hinder America in any way, during this period of national emergency; by imprisonment, deportation, or detainment in State or Federal concentration camps: Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be furnished all members of the Graham Kiwanis Club for enclosure with a personal letter to their Senators and Congressmen; that copies be sent to all civic clubs of the State and to our President of these United States of America.

Upon motion duly seconded, adopted June 17, 1940.

GRAHAM KIWANIS CLUB,
DAN M. RADER, Secretary.

In that connection, several days ago I introduced a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 275) to provide for the national defense by prohibiting labor organizations from employing certain persons as officers or agents. I read:

Whereas it is common knowledge that "fifth column" activities in various European countries contributed largely to their defeat; and

Whereas such activities consisted in part of sabotage in key industries and propaganda disseminated among the workers of such industries; and

Whereas such activities are now being carried on in this country and will gather more momentum in the future, thus undermining our national defense; and

Whereas because of their key positions in our industrial mobilization plans, officers and agents of labor organizations should all be American citizens whose allegiance to their country is unquestioned and who can be depended upon to cooperate with the Government in stamping out such treacherous activities: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any labor union or other labor organization which represents, or purports to represent, in any manner the interests of any persons employed by any business enterprise which is engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or in the production of goods for such commerce or for national-defense purposes, to have as an officer or agent any person who is not a citizen of the United States, who is a Communist, Fascist, or member of any Nazi bund organization, who has been at any time within the past 2 years a member of or affiliated with any Communist, Fascist, or Nazi bund organization, who is ineligible to hold public office, or who has lost his rights to United States citizenship by reason of conviction of a felony.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of each such labor union or other labor organization to use due diligence to determine whether any of its officers or agents is a person who is prohibited from being such an officer or agent under the provisions of section 1 of this joint resolution.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this joint resolution the term "labor union or other labor organization" shall include any group which is a part of or affiliated with any labor union or other labor organization which is national in scope or whose jurisdiction extends to more than one State.

SEC. 4. Any labor union or other labor organization willfully violating any of the provisions of this joint resolution shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000; and each such violation shall be deemed to be a separate offense.

Of course, we know that labor organizations in the United States are highly desirous of ridding themselves of anyone who may be pointed to as being un-American or who is engaging in subversive activities; and certainly no labor organization in this country wants as an officer, agent, or representative an alien, or, for that matter, an American citizen who has been deprived of his American citizenship by reason of conviction of a felony.

Relative to subversive activities, we now have pending a bill which is designated as H. R. 10094, which is being sponsored in this body by the able junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. It is a bill to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States, and for other purposes. The enactment of such legislation would mean that the Communist Party, the German-American Bund, and similar organizations, would be required to register and to provide the Government of the United States with information pertaining to their officers, their membership, and the sources from which they obtain money to carry on.

In connection with House bill 10094, I recall that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] was present before the committee when public hearings were held. As I recall, Mr. G. Wilhelm Kunze, of 178 East Eighty-fifth Street, New York City, national commander of the German-American Bund, protested against the enactment of such legislation. Likewise, in reference to my bill, which would outlaw the Communist Party and the German-American Bund, he protested in the form of a telegram, which he sent to me on July 9, reading as follows:

We protest against the adoption of bill S. 4132 on the grounds that it is an attempt to enact bill-of-attainder legislation, which is expressly prohibited by the Constitution. Refer to my testimony before Judiciary Committee Monday, July 8—

That is the time which I mentioned a moment ago—clearly showing that above bill is Government violence in the name of law. The German-American Bund has never been convicted of any crime. This bill is all vicious and un-American.

He says the bill is un-American. I say that it is not. I say that it ought to be enacted into law.

In passing, while speaking of Mr. Kunze, yesterday while in my office reading a number of daily and weekly newspapers from North Carolina, I happened to glance at an article from the pen of the publisher of the Wilmington Post, a weekly periodical at Wilmington, N. C. Under the heading "Heard on the streets, by Col. Allus Buttenin," which I assume is one of the features of his paper, he says:

[From the Wilmington (N. C.) Post of July 19, 1940]

HEARD ON THE STREETS

(By Col. Allus Buttenin)

Last week when I wrote about Mr. G. William Kunze, German bund leader, I was under the impression that he was either a foreigner or a naturalized citizen. Further investigation reveals the fact that he is a native-born citizen of the United States. This makes a difference. Therefore I apologize to every loyal citizen of the United States. Had I known that I was writing about a traitor instead of about a foreign saboteur, I would have said something different.

When Delilah betrayed Sampson, when Judas Iscariot betrayed Christ, when Benedict Arnold betrayed the Continental Army, when Quisling betrayed Norway they were but setting the stage for Kunze to betray his native land. Delilah perished ignominiously, Judas Iscariot hanged himself, Benedict Arnold was shot, and Quisling is an outcast. Kunze but follows in their path. If he wins, he will be considered by those whom he served as one branded with dishonor. If he loses, he will be shot as a traitor. His usefulness, if it ever existed, has ceased. He is either a fool or a traitor, or both. Win, lose, or draw, he will go down in history as being the ignorant tool of the greatest conspirator of all time. Poor, ignorant fool, he follows the lead of one who has plainly stated that he uses men as his tools, and upon cessation of their usefulness discards them as one discards any other useless object. He follows a will-o'-the-wisp, a false light of hope, that he may be made into a grandee, a margrave, or some other titled person who can shine in the reflected glory of the "imperator to be."

This country nurtured him and gave life and liberty to those whom he loves. Now he, a traitor, comes to the forefront and demands that liberty, upon which he fattened his slimy soul, guarantee him the right and privilege to destroy. He would destroy the very roots of that liberty under whose aegis his parents found asylum. He would defame the character of his native land so that he may shine in the glory of the leader. Just a plain, simple renegade, a traitor to humanity, the most accursed traitor.

Yet he should teach us a lesson, a lesson of preparedness against those within our midst, be they natives or foreigners, who would sacrifice the welfare of this Nation that they may attain unto power and riches. Quisling betrayed Norway, and instead of winning the confidence of his liege lord, he fouled his own nest and became a pariah, an outcast of society, distrusted of the one to whom he sold his soul. Kunze would do the same to America, to you, to me, to all who would stand in the way of his morbid desires. Yet we grant him the rights and pivileges he tries so hard to kill, and we know that there are many others who have the same wizened, stunted, and shrunken mentalities which would lead them to destroy their liberties in their greed for power.

We should take Kunze, and all the others of his ilk, study them, and find what it is that makes them traitors to humanity, then discard them as useless specimens of inhumanity. Then, with this knowledge, proceed to clean house and make this land the bright asylum of the oppressed which it can be.

There is value in everything, even in Kunze, if we but find the filth in which he lives and apply the disinfectant in proper quantities, so that there can never be a recurrence of these subversive acts. But this value will be nil, it will be worse than nothing if we allow him to continue his termitish actions. If we allow him and his followers to continue to bore from within, we will soon find that the dry rot of treachery has rotted our structure and that we are living in a fool's paradise. We will find that our own mental lethargy is the nostalgic poison that is allowing these leeches to suck our very life's blood. Unless we learn our lesson from these subversive movements within the body politic, we will soon find that their filth has destroyed our stamina and our blood stream is lecherous with the pus of their suppuration.

If we do not cure or cut out this cancerous growth, it is but a matter of time until death shall overtake our liberties and we will be but menials under the heel of the oppressor.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. I regret that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is not in the Chamber at this moment. I understand that while I was unavoidably detained the Senator from Arizona was rather critical of the Committee on Immigration for not reporting a bill to which he referred. That bill is the measure, which has already passed the House, providing for the deportation of one Harry Bridges.

The bill has been treated in the Committee on Immigration just as any other piece of legislation would have been handled. It was referred to the Departments for report on the day after it was messaged to the Senate from the House of Representatives. As soon as reports were received from the Departments, a meeting of the Committee on Immigration was called, and the bill was referred to a subcommittee consisting of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and the present presiding officer of the Senate, the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH]. I know that the Senate has been very irregular in its meetings recently and that many Members of the Senate have been unable to be constantly in attendance in Washington. However, I do not undertake to make any apologies for the subcommittee or for the full committee, because I do not think any apologies are in order.

The committee has proceeded as it proceeds in all other legislative matters. Two of the three members of the subcommittee are members of the committee presided over by the Senator from Arizona. If he would have expedited the bill at the terrific rate of speed which he indicated—as I understand from a verbal report of his remarks, which did not purport to be verbatim—he might have chosen either of the two Senators who were selected to handle the bill in behalf of the Committee on Immigration.

The chairman of the Judiciary Committee has always been an earnest advocate of the antilynching bill. I have always opposed that bill, but I am also opposed to lynching, whether it be legislative or otherwise. The bill in question will in due course be considered by the committee, and if the majority of the committee sees fit the bill will be favorably reported to the Senate. If the distinguished Senator from Arizona desires to expedite the bill any more rapidly than it is being handled, I suggest that he see the chairman of the subcommittee and arrange for a hearing in that forum, which in the present situation is the proper place to express his views.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, with regard to the remarks of my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], I am absolutely confident the Senator from Arizona had not the slightest idea of reflecting upon the activities of the Senator. The junior Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], who now presides, made some remarks on the floor of the Senate complimentary to the junior Senator from Georgia, the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, and at that time the Presiding Officer will recall that I also made a statement in regard to the matter. I am sure that the able Senator from Arizona meant no reflection whatever upon the Senator from Georgia, because it was explained by the Senator who is now presiding and by myself that the very day the bill came to the Senate from the other House and was referred to the committee, the chairman sent it to the proper department for a report, and that as soon as it came back a subcommittee was appointed. The able junior Senator from Georgia, who is chairman of the Committee on Immigration, had always given unusually prompt attention to every matter coming before his committee.

I, too, am sorry that the Senator from Arizona is not now present, but I feel that I can speak for him after listening to him and knowing, as we all do, that he would not, for anything in the world, let a word drop from his lips that would reflect upon the junior Senator from Georgia, for I know the esteem in which the junior Senator from Georgia is held in the estimation of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. President, getting back now to the matter of outlawing the Communist Party, yesterday in my office—and I usually devote Sundays to reading newspapers and getting what I can therefrom in order, to be perfectly frank, that I may be able to back up some of my ideas—I happened to pick up a copy of the New York Enquirer of the issue of July 8, 1940, the editor and publisher of which is my friend, Mr. William J. Griffin. In that issue there is an editorial entitled "Presidential campaign of Communist Party is a challenge to Republic." Having glanced over that editorial, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD at this juncture of my remarks. I shall read only the last two paragraphs:

Browder's respect—

Browder of course is the nominee of the Communist Party for President of the United States.

Browder's respect for the highest judicial tribunal in this land, which he now desires to relieve him of the status of a sentenced felon, was evinced on October 23, 1938, when he affirmed that if the Supreme Court did not cease endeavoring to dictate economics and social security (that is, if it did not hand down its decisions in accordance with Earl Browder's conception of its functions) the number of Justices will be increased from 9 to 20, with 11 good Farmer-Labor Justices on the bench."

The editorial continues:

There has just been passed by the House a measure intended to compel the Communist Party and the Nazi bund to register with the Department of Justice.

That is the legislation that I spoke of a moment ago as being sponsored in this body by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The editorial continues:

Such legislation is absurd—

I do not agree with Mr. Griffin that it "is absurd"; it is, indeed, a step forward, and it will certainly, by bringing about registration, reveal the names of their officers and also the source of their revenue. Certainly the legislation is not "absurd." We had to start somewhere, and it is a start—

The "reds" and the "bunders" must be completely destroyed. It will be a national disgrace if the present session of the Seventy-sixth Congress comes to a close without both of these anti-American forces having been annihilated by statute.

I send the editorial to the desk and ask that it be returned to me from the Public Printer, as I want it for future reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In conformity with the request of the Senator from North Carolina, the editorial will be printed in full in the RECORD at this point.

The editorial is as follows:

PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN OF COMMUNIST PARTY IS A CHALLENGE TO REPUBLIC

It is ludicrous on the part of the United States to spend billions of dollars upon national preparedness against external attack and at the same time decline to take prompt and adequate measures against the forces of assault from within.

Congress should not permit its present session to come to an end without having enacted the legislation necessary for the suppression of the Communist Party.

Surely our national lawmakers have superabundant evidence as to the peril in which the Republic stands by reason of the workings of that organization here and its ramifications abroad.

In spite of this, and in spite of all the talk and action as to national defense, the party of Josef Stalin is permitted to continue its operations upon American soil. It has already named as its candidate for President of the United States, Josef Stalin's vice fuehrer, Earl Browder, who also has the distinction of having been convicted of passport fraud last January.

When it comes to insolence, the Communists are in a class by themselves. Here we find them deliberately selecting as their choice for the job of painting the White House a crimson Moscow red a man who has been sentenced to jail for 4 years and fined $2,500 by a Federal court. In running Browder for the Presidency the upholders of sovietized America are operating behind the Constitution of the United States, impudently asserting their constitutional rights, brazenly using our fundamental charter as a medium whereby to bring about its own destruction.

A service which calls for the warmest praise has been performed by Representative ROBERT G. ALLEN of Pennsylvania, by his exposure of the methods resorted to by Josef Stalin's henchmen in their Presidential election campaign, and by the scathing attack to which he subjected the Communist Party, in a communication sent to Comrade Charles Gwynn, the party's chairman in western Pennsylvania. This important missive is published in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Its initial paragraph states:

"I have received your telegram of June 20 stating that the Dies committee is sending letters to all signers of the Communist Party nominating petitions in Pennsylvania. You state you consider this action an invasion of State rights and an intimidation of Pennsylvania citizens. If Mr. DIES wishes to send letters to the Communists in Pennsylvania, he has a right to do so. Pray tell me what is wrong with that. You suggest that Mr. DIES is attempting to coerce my constituents. I assure you that you and the members of your party are not my constituents; you are Josef Stalin's. I do not want you and you do not want me. The feeling is perfectly mutual."

Representative ALLEN then tells this minion of Moscow that his organization is not a political party working in the Keystone State, and continues:

"You are part of a foreign conspiracy working under orders emanating direct from Moscow. Your avowed purpose is the overthrow of this Government by force. You are traitors to this country, and if I had my way you would be dealt with as such. You are abusing the privileges granted by our Constitution. The result has been pure, unadulterated license. Despite your subversive activities, you have been treated with kindly tolerance in this country. In the face of a serious crisis this extreme tolerance is a luxury which we can no longer afford. If you do not like this country and its institutions, I suggest that you get out. Go to that Muscovite utopia which you are trying to establish over here."

In closing his letter, which uses language that Josef Stalin's champions fully understand, the patriotic, able, and wide-awake Pennsylvanian declares:

"I sincerely trust that the Dies committee will investigate the manner in which you secured names for the Communist Party nominating petitions. Your solicitors repeatedly lied to poor and ignorant people who thought they were signing a petition to keep this country out of war or a petition requesting jobs, etc. The whole procedure was a shameful and cowardly act for which you should be held responsible. Instead of protesting to Mr. DIES as you request, I am going to urge him to press the case against you more vigorously than ever. Let me repeat that there is no room in America for you and your kind at this time. I deeply regret that we have permitted you such unrestricted freedom as you have enjoyed in the past."

Vice Fuehrer Browder, for whose attempt to enter the White House the "reds" are campaigning in true Stalinite style, is appealing to the Supreme Court of the Republic to revoke his conviction for passport fraud. In doing this he has ample funds at his back and is making ample use of the American legal processes provided by the very Constitution which he and his followers are seeking to destroy in favor of the despotism of Soviet Russia.

Browder's respect for the highest judicial tribunal in this land, which he now desires to relieve him of the status of a sentenced felon, was evinced on October 23, 1938, when he affirmed that if the Supreme Court did not cease endeavoring to dictate economics and social security (that is, if it did not hand down its decisions in accordance with Earl Browder's conception of its functions) "The number of Justices will be increased from 9 to 20, with 11 good Farmer-Labor Justices on the bench."

There has just been passed by the House a measure intended to compel the Communist Party and the Nazi bunds to register with the Department of Justice. Such legislation is absurd. The "reds" and the "bunders" must be completely destroyed. It will be a national disgrace if the present session of the Seventy-Sixth Congress comes to a close without both of these anti-American forces having been annihilated by statute.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In further pursuance of the resolution of the Kiwanis Club of Graham, N. C., I read:

By registering all aliens in this country, and requiring periodical reports by aliens at local police stations.

I desire to advise the members of the Graham Kiwanis Club of North Carolina, to whom these resolutions have been sent, that recently the Congress enacted a registration and fingerprinting law. Of course, we know that there are aliens in this country who came here in violation of our law, who entered the country illegally, and it is reasonable to conclude that they will not voluntarily register and give themselves up to the authorities, because, on so doing, perhaps, they can be immediately deported. It is likewise my argument, and it is reasonable to conclude, that those who entered legally, and have remained here illegally, will not voluntarily register, because they will be subject to deportation, and they will be more frightened now than ever before since the enforcement of the immigration laws has been transferred from the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice. As a result thereof, we will have to wait to see how the law works out in its registration feature from September 1 until the convening of the next Congress. At that time, I wish to say to the Members of this body, I propose to introduce additional legislation which I believe will strengthen the present registration and fingerprinting law, so that we may eventually gather into the net all the alien criminals in this country we are desirous of deporting.

Speaking of deportation, in conjunction with the islands whose acquisition I mentioned awhile ago as being desirable from the standpoint of the national defense, we might use some of those island possessions which we want to acquire upon which to detain alien criminals until we can get the countries from which they came to take them back.

The resolution continues:

By appropriate action to be taken to insure against the continuous action of known agents, or persons, fomenting conditions calculated to hinder America in any way, during this period of national emergency; by imprisonment, deportation, or detainment in State or Federal concentration camps.

I prefer to employ the words "detention camps" rather than "concentration camps," because once I employed the word "concentration camps" on the floor of the Senate, and was severely criticized by many people who have not the same attitude as I have toward aliens, Communists, bunders, and others engaged in un-American activities. The resolutions from the Graham Kiwanis Club conclude:

Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be furnished all members of the Graham Kiwanis Club for enclosure with a personal letter to their Senators and Congressmen. That copies be sent to all civic clubs of the State, and to our President of these United States of America.

Upon motion duly seconded, adopted June 17, 1940.

GRAHAM KIWANIS CLUB.
DAN M. RADER, Secretary.

I acknowledged receipt of the resolutions to Mr. Rader, and told him, in my acknowledgment, that I proposed to present the resolutions for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. President, in reference to communism, I have before me a very interesting ticker dispatch which was obtained in New York and is under the heading "Interpretation of war news by J. W. T. Mason, United Press war expert." I bring it to the attention of the Members of this body particularly at this time because I think Mr. Mason's interpretation is really worth something. At least, I insert it for what it may be worth, and for the further reason that I have been furnished a printed telegram dated July 16, 1940, by Mr. Gustav Danzis, of 111 East Twelfth Street, New York City, which I bring to the attention of this body in connection with the "interpretation of the war news" dispatch, and which refers to the fact that the former republics of Latvia, Estonia, and Lithuania have, at last, been enveloped into the Soviet fold. The "interpretation of war news," by Mr. J. W. T. Mason, reads:

[Over the ticker on July 19]

[Interpretation of war news by J. W. T. Mason, United Press war expert]

Count Ciano's arrival in Berlin today for renewal of secret conferences with Hitler coincides with Italian newspaper warnings to Stalin that if the Kremlin accepts British offers of conciliation and cooperation, Russia's fate will be the same as Poland's. Hitherto Italian and German journalistic comment on Russia's wartime forwardness has been worded cautiously. The open suspicion of Russian treachery now voiced in the Fascist-controlled press implies a Slav situation may be developing which Mussolini considers dangerous.

Only a sudden matter of serious importance would seem to justify this second visit of the Italian foreign minister to Berlin so soon after his earlier conference this month with Hitler. Italy's suspicions of Russia are more sensitive than Germany's because of Mussolini's claim to paramount interests in the Balkans and the Mediterranean.

Of course, we know that in a sense the claims and interests of Russia in the Balkans and the Mediterranean are a much more serious danger to Mussolini than they are to Hitler.

At the same time there can be no doubt Germany must be much concerned by this week's overwhelming pro-Soviet plebiscites in Latvia, Estonia, and Lithuania, which in effect give Stalin complete control over the armies of the three Baltic countries. Germany has broken the French encirclement of the Reich but a new Slav encirclement is now being strengthened.

At this point I ask that there be inserted the printed telegram to which I have referred directed to the President of the United States of America, Washington, D. C., and to the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C., in reference to the flagrant violations of treaties and fraud on the part of Soviet Russia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

JULY 16, 1940.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C.

THE HONORABLE CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

By flagrant breach of treaty obligations by treachery and fraud Soviet Russia has taken possession of the Republics of Latvia, Estonia, and Lithuania, overrunning all of their territories by overwhelming military forces. A pro-Soviet Government has been installed in Latvia whose only sordid task it is to provide camouflage for the actual annexation of Latvia by holding fraudulent and Russian-controlled elections on July 14 and 15 in an atmosphere of red terror, expropriation, and martial law. Soviet aggression is again on the march threatening to engulf the whole world in revolt and anarchy and we appeal to you to refuse recognition of Soviet aggression against Latvia, to refuse recognition of present usurpatory pro-Soviet Government in Latvia, and to withdraw recognition of the godless dictatorship of Soviet Russia.

Copies to members United States Senate Foreign Relations Committee, New York Senators, Massachusetts Senators, New York Congressmen.

Please reply to Gustav Danzis, 111 East Twelfth Street, New York, N. Y.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask that the remainder of the ticker dispatch, as I have edited it, may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the same time Russia not only is pressing Turkey for joint control over the Dardanelles but is also trying to stimulate a new wave of communism in the eastern Balkans from the vantage ground of Bessarabia, coupled with these developments so adverse to Italian and German interests the Italian press now reveals fears that Russia is moving toward some form of rapprochement with Great Britain.

The British Government has associated its closing of the Burma road with suggestions for peace between China and Japan. Here is a possible opportunity for Great Britain and Russia to work together in the Orient, out of which might come a mutual pact of coordination in Europe, such is the way the intricacies of European diplomacy operate beneath the surface.

Certainly, Russia has now become the war's enigma for Germany and Italy—no dictator can trust any other indefinitely—it is difficult enough for two dictators to cooperate for long—when there are three, mutual faith becomes impossible—each must judge the others by his own standards of conduct—so Hitler and Mussolini are right in looking askance at Stalin uneasily trying to calculate the direction of his next ambitious move.

Especially must Germany and Italy keep close observation on Russia at the present time when the two belligerents are considering how to deliver what they hope will be a crushing blow against Great Britain—reports are circulating in Europe that the German high command lacks unanimity concerning the outcome of an invasion of the British Isles, and Hitler is said to have been advised by some of his leading generals that failure must be anticipated.

If that were to happen, and if at the same time Russia were to seek further territorial expansion, the whole complexion of the war might go into reverse almost overnight—Count Ciano and Hitler will have problems such as these to discuss this weekend in Berlin—the uncertainties of warfare were never more apparent than they are today in Europe.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in conclusion, I desire to commend the members of the American Legion. I have done so at one time upon the floor of the Senate today, when I spoke of their activities relative to their endeavor to bring about the deportation of Harry Bridges. I again am provided an opportunity to pay tribute to that great legion of World War veterans, and am happy for the opportunity. They are alive to our national-defense problem. They and each of them are interesting themselves therein, not only from the standpoint of sponsoring legislation and standing behind proposed legislation in which they believe, but physically they interest themselves in national defense.

The American Legion of North Carolina are now sponsoring rifle meets which they propose to hold annually. The first meeting is to be held at Fort Bragg, N. C., one of our Army posts, on the 28th and 29th of this month, in which they are offering cups to the winning team for marksmanship. The contesting teams will come from virtually every Legion post in North Carolina. They are preparing themselves physically, and they are getting ready for any balloonists or parachutists who may come to this country. I think the American Legion are to be commended.

I have here a letter from Mr. J. A. DuBois, chairman of the marksmanship committee of the American Legion located at Whiteville, N. C. I shall read part of the letter, which is directed to me. I shall eliminate the first and second paragraphs, as they contain personal references to me. The remainder of the letter is as follows:

> The Legion of North Carolina has, as yourself, always taken a firm stand for preparedness. Since the recent tragic turn in European affairs it has reaffirmed and greatly strengthened its stand for adequate national defense.
> Our marksmanship program is just a small but important part of the Legion defense program. Its objective is the organization of rifle clubs in every Legion post for the purpose of again familiarizing veterans with use and care of firearms, and to stimulate interest in the oldest and cleanest of sports, marksmanship.
> The Legion program for national defense in North Carolina is not being carried out with eloquent and patriotic speeches, but with silent and determined action. The 2 days of rifle training to be held at Fort Bragg are exemplary of this determination to act and act now, not next month or next year, and in a like manner the rest of the Legion program is being put into effect. Legionnaires are not only asking others to act but they are showing by their own example what can be accomplished with close cooperation between local and Federal law-enforcement authorities, Red Cross, and relief organizations.
> In addition to rifle teams amongst Legionnaires, in the past year a large number of sons of the Legion Rifle Clubs have been organized. In these clubs hundreds of boys are being taught by experienced instructors the proper care and handling of firearms, safety precautions, target shooting, and last, but not least, observance of game-preservation laws. Youth's response to this training has been enthusiastic, and marksmanship has proven its worth in the making of good sportsmanship.
> Very truly,
> J. A. DuBois, Chairman.

I ask that there be printed in the RECORD, for the benefit of other patriotic organizations and other veterans' organizations, an enclosure in the letter in reference to the inauguration of that program in North Carolina, which I am sure is an added and a worthy feature of our preparedness program, and particularly the volunteer preparedness program on behalf of the volunteer services of the people of America.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TENTATIVE PROGRAM FOR RIFLE MEET AT FORT BRAGG

(The number attending and the amount of ammunition we have been issued may necessitate some changes in program.)

- 5 P. M. Mess and presentation of medals and of the Reynolds Preparedness Trophy.

I ordered a 15-inch cup with proper engraving. Many thanks.

BOARD OF FUNERAL DIRECTORS AND EMBALMERS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 254)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, S. 3720, "To create and establish a Board of Funeral Directors and Embalmers for the District of Columbia and to prescribe its powers and duties."

This bill creates a board of nine examiners appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Six of the members of the board would be drawn from those engaged in the business of embalming and funeral directing within the District of Columbia. Of the remaining three members two would be selected from practicing physicians within the District of Columbia, and one from the staff of the Health Officer of the District of Columbia.

Within sixty days after approval of the bill, the board would license, without examination as to qualifications, all those now engaged in doing business in the District of Columbia, while those who would thereafter desire to enter such business would be required to qualify under such examination as might be determined by the Board. The bill also provides for suspension and revocation of licenses for cause subject to court review and for reciprocal arrangements with other States. Apprenticeship fees would be $5 per annum, funeral and embalmer license fees $10 per annum, and examination fees $25, not returnable. At the close of each fiscal year, any funds to the credit of the board in excess of $1,000 would revert to the District of Columbia, and all accounts of the board would be subject to audit by the District Auditor.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia recommend disapproval of this bill for the following reasons:

This bill is proposed, according to its preamble, "For the purpose of protecting the public health." A study of its subsequent provisions, however, appears to indicate that its primary purpose is to place certain restrictions on those desiring to enter the business of embalming and funeral directing in the District of Columbia. The first purpose is already cared for by present health laws which grant full authority to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make and enforce, through the Health Department, such regulations as may be necessary to protect the public. A second result of the bill would be to create, outside the control of the Commissioners, another independent District establishment, armed with the power to restrict membership in the guild of funeral directors and embalmers.

The present system of quasi-private examining boards in the District of Columbia, with their lack of uniformity in the appointment and pay of examiners, in the rules and regulations governing the examination and licensing of applicants, in the enforcement of the laws, and particularly in the control of their finances and accounts, has, in recent years, been the subject of no little criticism. Recent surveys of the government of the District of Columbia, including studies by citizens committees, have censured the increasing number of independent District boards of examiners. As a consequence, legislation proposed by the District Commissioners for the reorganization of the District of Columbia government provides that all these examining boards and commissions would become advisory agencies only, and function under a single license department.

In view of these objections of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, I am withholding my approval of this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

FURNISHING POTOMAC WATER TO CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 255)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3870, "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to furnish Potomac water without charge to charitable institutions, and so forth, in the District of Columbia', approved February 23, 1905."

The act of February 23, 1905 (33 Stat. 742), provides as follows:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and are hereby, authorized to furnish Potomac water without charge to charitable institutions and such institutions as receive annual appropriations from Congress, to an amount to be fixed in each case by the said Commissioners, not to exceed a rate of 100 gallons per day for each inmate of said institutions; and for all water used beyond such an amount, to be ascertained by water meters installed and maintained at the expense of the consumer, the institution shall be charged at the prevailing rate for the use of water in the District of Columbia, which shall be collected in the manner prescribed for the collection of water rents. The said Commissioners are further authorized to furnish Potomac water without charge to churches to an amount to be fixed in each case by the said Commissioners, and any amount used in excess of the amount allowed, to be ascertained in the manner aforesaid, shall be charged and collected as hereinbefore described. For the purposes of this act a charitable institution is one whose objects are primarily eleemosynary; and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to include educational institutions other than charity schools wholly supported by voluntary contributions or institutions supported wholly or in part by congressional appropriations.

It is the purpose of this bill to add, after the word "churches", in the second sentence of the above-quoted paragraph, the words "and to charitable institutions which do not have inmates", and thus authorize the furnishing of free water to institutions which do not now come within the terms of the existing statute.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are opposed to the approval of this measure, in part because of the loss of revenue involved, but also on account of the difficulty of determining the institutions that would be entitled, and the extent to which each would be entitled, to the free-water privilege. The Commissioners believe not only that the approval of the bill would increase largely the number of institutions receiving water free of charge, but would be likely to result in the furnishing of free water to some agencies, the status of which, as eleemosynary institutions, would be difficult of determination.

It seems to me that in spite of the well-intended purpose of the measure that the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia have taken the right position with respect thereto, and that I am therefore justified in accepting their recommendation that the bill be not approved.

LETTER FROM THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE—VETO MESSAGES

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Senate, which was read, as follows:

JULY 22, 1940.

HON. JOHN N. GARNER,
President of the Senate.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Under the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution 86, the Senate adjourned on Thursday, July 11, 1940, until 12 o'clock meridian today, July 22.

On Wednesday, July 17, 1940, the President of the United States returned to the Senate by delivery to the secretary of the Senate the following enrolled bills, together with his reasons for returning them without his approval. These bills had been presented to the President by the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the Senate on the dates shown and were returned within the 10-day period prescribed by the Constitution.

Presented on July 5, 1940:

S. 2413. An act granting a pension to Arminda Bauman;

S. 3502. An act for the relief of the Epes Transportation Corporation;

S. 3769. An act for the relief of Jerry McKinley Thompson; and

S. 3978. An act for the relief of certain former employees of the National Reemployment Service.

Presented on July 8, 1940:

S. 1810. An act for the relief of the Citizens State Bank of Marianna, Fla.;

S. 2817. An act for the relief of J. H. Churchwell, Wholesale Co., of Jacksonville, Fla.;

S. 3351. An act for the relief of I. M. Cook, J. J. Allen, and the Radiator Specialty Co.; and

S. 3794. An act for the relief of certain Navajo Indians, and for other purposes.

I now present the President's veto messages, with the accompanying bills, for disposition by the Senate.

Sincerely yours,

EDWIN A. HALSEY,
Secretary of the Senate.

ARMINDA BAUMAN—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 257)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, S. 2413, "Granting a pension to Arminda Bauman."

It is the purpose of the bill to authorize and direct the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Arminda Bauman, widow of Jacob K. Bauman, late of Troop H, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

Jacob K. Bauman, the husband of the beneficiary under the bill, enlisted in the military service of the United States November 17, 1883, and was honorably discharged July 10, 1885. The veteran served over 30 days in the Apache campaign of New Mexico. His death occurred August 21, 1936.

Mrs. Bauman's first marriage to the veteran July 21, 1887, was terminated by divorce granted July 14, 1924. She was remarried to the veteran February 6, 1926. While not entitled to service pension under laws pertaining to the Indian War service, as her second marriage to the veteran occurred subsequent to March 3, 1917, her claim for pension under the general pension law, where the marriage date is immaterial, depends upon whether or not the death of the veteran is attributable to service-connected disabilities. Mrs. Bauman's original claim under the general pension law was denied, but upon reconsideration and review by the Veterans' Administration since the passage by the Congress of S. 2413, it has been determined that the death of the veteran was attributable to service-connected disabilities and that the widow is entitled to receive a pension under the general pension law. Therefore approval of the bill is not only unnecessary but is objectionable, because it would arbitrarily place and continue the claimant on the pension rolls at a specified rate of pension, which may be more or less in amount, in the initial and subsequent adjudications, than would be allowable under the provisions of general law.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

EPES TRANSPORTATION CORPORATION—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 260)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3502, an act for the relief of the Epes Transportation Corporation, of Virginia.

This bill is substantially the same as S. 1042 (76th Cong., 1st sess.) with respect to which I withheld my approval. The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury "to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Epes Transportation Corporation the sum of $6,537.95 in full satisfaction of all claims of such corporation against the United States, such sum (it is alleged) representing taxes (with interest and penalty) paid to the United States by such corporation on account of certain cigarettes and tobacco products which were withdrawn from bonded warehouse in Winston-Salem, N. C., by such corporation (it is alleged) for export to foreign consignees, but which were not exported due to the fact that such cigarettes and tobacco products were stolen from the trucks of such corporation en route to the intended exportation point."

The cigarettes and tobacco products were in fact withdrawn without payment of tax by the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. from its factories for exportation and were delivered to the Epes Transportation Corporation, a common carrier, under contract for transportation, in its trucks to Norfolk, Va. During transit the trucks were hijacked and the cigarettes and tobacco products were stolen. As the products were not in fact exported, the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. paid the internal-revenue tax due on such products, and through litigation it has been finally established that the tax was legally due. The transportation corporation, apparently because of its liability as a common carrier for hire, has reimbursed the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. for the amount of the tax and penalties paid by such company and now seeks reimbursement from the United States.

The Government had no dealings with the carrier. The carrier has merely made good on its contract with the shipper for proximate damages resulting from failure to perform its contract. Other circumstances might occur to damage or destroy such articles and prevent exportation and thus subject the shipper to a tax on goods that failed to reach the market at all, e. g., a railway wreck, or a fire, or bad weather, or damage in transit. The Government cannot be expected to honor claims of insurers and carriers in all such cases where they are required by the shipper to respond in damages to the extent of his resulting loss of tax exemption. Obviously the carrier's loss is primarily an incident of his business and grows out of his broad liability as a common carrier. To recognize such a claim would, it is believed, constitute a precedent and establish a policy that might eventually prove embarrassing and burdensome.

I regret, therefore, that I do not feel justified in giving my approval to the bill.

JERRY M'KINLEY THOMPSON—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 261)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3769, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, entitled "An act for the relief of Jerry McKinley Thompson."

This enactment would release Mr. Thompson from any liability to the United States incurred by reason of the receipt by him of dual compensation from the Post Office Department and the Navy Department during the period from June 16 to September 15 of each year from 1929 to 1937, inclusive, in contravention of section 6 of the act of May 10, 1916, as amended.

Information regarding the provisions of the act of May 10, 1916, has been repeatedly disseminated throughout the Postal Service by the published bulletins of that Service, and it is my opinion that the granting of the relief here sought would not only encourage the presentation of claims for similar relief but would also tend to induce a future disregard of this and other laws enacted for the purpose of limiting and restricting the expenditure of public funds. Moreover, the claims of many other Government employees for dual compensation have been denied, and the granting of the relief contemplated by this enactment would, accordingly, represent, it seems to me, discriminatory action of a wholly unwarranted character.

I do not, therefore, feel justified in approving the enactment.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN FORMER EMPLOYEES OF NATIONAL REEMPLOYMENT SERVICE—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 263)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3978, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, entitled "An act for the relief of certain former employees of the National Reemployment Service."

The enactment would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay specified sums of money to the several persons therein named in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for accrued annual leave while claimants were in the employ of the National Reemployment Service—it appearing that the involved employees were separated from the service of the United States without having taken all of the annual leave which had accumulated to them at the time of separation.

The Annual Leave Act of March 14, 1936 (49 Stat. 1161), makes a grant of leave in kind only; that is, the right to be absent from duty for the prescribed period without loss of pay while retaining a status as one of the "civilian officers and employees of the United States" included within the purview of the law. There is no provision of law for payment of the commuted value of leave not taken before separation from the service. It is understood that many similar claims have been disallowed by the Government. Hence the approval of relief legislation upon behalf of the former employees named in this enactment would be giving them preferential treatment and, no doubt, would result in a flood of similar relief bills in respect to other former employees similarly situated. For the reasons stated herein I do not feel justified in giving this enactment my approval.

CITIZENS STATE BANK OF MARIANNA, FLA.—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 256)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, a bill (S. 1810) for the relief of the Citizens State Bank of Marianna, Fla.

This bill would relieve the Citizens State Bank of Marianna, Fla., from liability to the Government in the sum of $692.09, constituting the aggregate amount of Government checks which were honored and cashed by the bank, although the endorsements thereon had been forged.

Whether the bank is liable to reimburse the Government under such circumstances is a question for judicial determination. A suit to collect this claim has been brought by the United States against the bank and is now pending. If the bank is not liable, it is reasonable to assume that the courts will so hold. If liability exists, no reason is discernible why the bank should be relieved of it by legislative action.

Similar claims have arisen against other banks which have been prosecuted in the courts and collected. I do not feel warranted in approving legislation which would extend preferential treatment to a single institution, while other financial institutions have been required to meet the obligations that the law imposes on them in such matters.

In view of these considerations, I am impelled to withhold my approval from this bill.

J. H. CHURCHWELL WHOLESALE CO.—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 259)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 2817, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, entitled "An act for the relief of J. H. Churchwell Wholesale Co., of Jacksonville, Fla."

This enactment would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to J. H. Churchwell Wholesale Co., of Jacksonville, Fla., the sum of $1,100 in full satisfaction of the claim of such company against the United States for remission of liquidated damages assessed against such company under the provisions of contract numbered ER–W–647–eng–38 and unnumbered contract (Invitation numbered 647–36–33) entered into by such company with the War Department under dates of September 12, 1935, and September 18, 1935, respectively, for the delivery of a quantity of sheets and blankets to the United States District Engineers Office, Camp Roosevelt, Ocala, Fla.

It appears that the contracts provided for the assessment of liquidated damages in the event of delays in delivery beyond the time specified therein; that there were delays in delivery of the articles; and that the sum here involved was properly and legally deducted from amounts otherwise due the claimant in accordance with the provisions of the contracts.

It is not unusual for Government contracts to contain provisions with respect to liquidated damages similar to those contained in the contracts executed by the claimant; and the courts have held that such provisions are to be enforced in accordance with their terms. The contracts here involved were freely entered into by the claimant and the liquidated damages were withheld in accordance with the agreement of the parties. There is no authority under existing law for the allowance of claims of other contractors under similar circumstances and the allowance of this claim would, in my judgment, be entirely unjustified as according preferential treatment to this claimant and as establishing an undesirable precedent.

I. M. COOK AND OTHERS—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 258)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3351, "For the relief of I. M. Cook, J. J. Allen, and the Radiator Specialty Company."

This bill proposes to provide for the payment of the sum of $10,890.54 to I. M. Cook, the sum of $9,275.34 to J. J. Allen, and the sum of $1,500 to the Radiator Specialty Co., all of Charlotte, N. C., as compensation for losses sustained by them by reason of a fire which destroyed a building near that city, which was owned by Mr. Cook.

It appears that Mr. Cook had rented part of the space to the Works Progress Administration for use as a warehouse and offices. The available facts indicate that at the insistence of Mr. Cook the offices of the Works Progress Administration in the building were heated by portable heaters, as he objected to the installation of any stationary stoves, for reasons which he deemed proper.

The building was set on fire on the night of December 9, 1938, by flames from a portable heater. It seems likely that if Mr. Cook had not insisted on the use of portable heaters and had permitted the installation of permanent stoves, the unfortunate occurrence would not have taken place. Under the circumstances I am unable to find any moral obligation on the part of the Government to reimburse Mr. Cook for his loss.

It seems, however, to be claimed that the night watchman employed by the Works Progress Administration was not as prompt as he should have been in endeavoring to extinguish the flames. Assuming this to be the fact, it is entirely within the realm of speculation whether he could have succeeded in subduing the fire under any circumstances. Moreover, the proximate cause of the fire seems to be the use of portable heaters, which were employed at Mr. Cook's insistence.

The other two claimants appear to have been tenants in the same building, whose personal property was destroyed in the fire. While their losses are to be greatly regretted, the facts summarized above indicate that there is no reason why the Government should recompense these two claimants for their unfortunate losses. It may well be that the facts have not been fully developed. In such event it may be appropriate to permit the claimants to bring suit against the Government in the Court of Claims or the United States District Court. A different problem would be presented if the instant bill accorded such a remedy, instead of proposing a direct appropriation in payment of the claims.

In the light of the foregoing statements I am constrained to disapprove the bill.

CERTAIN NAVAJO INDIANS—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 262)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3794, "For the relief of certain Navajo Indians, and for other purposes."

This bill appropriates $30,000 as compensation to the heirs of six Navajo boys who were killed, and $3,000 as damages on account of injuries sustained by two boys, when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a train near Wingate, N. Mex.

While the record indicates negligence on the part of the driver, thereby warranting claims for compensation, it seems to me that the proposed payments in the death cases are somewhat excessive. The six children killed were between the ages of 10 and 15 years, and the two injured boys were 12 and 14 years of age. They were all wards of the Federal Government and were being educated in schools maintained by the Government. They were not wage earners, and those killed left no actual dependents. Those killed were buried at the expense of the United States, and those injured received medical attention and hospital care at Federal expense.

It is stated that the two injured boys have fully recovered, but since the record fails to disclose the extent of their injuries, it is impossible to say whether the payments proposed are, or are not, excessive.

I am withholding my approval of the bill in the belief that the Congress should, in the light of the above suggestions, and upon the basis of such additional information as it may obtain, give further consideration to these claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 22, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Again, gracious Heavenly Father, in the dispensation of Thy providence we have seen the birth of a new day. We thank Thee. Be Thou unto us the wisdom that makes error difficult, the light that makes the darkness fade away, and the bread of heaven that quickens the best impulses of our souls. Consider us, O Lord, and bless the bonds of fraternity, the ties of friendship, and the affections of our homes. Blessed Lord God, the world gives peace to reward toil; give us Thine to prepare us for toil; it gives peace to exhausted energy; give us Thine to inspire action; it gives peace as a rest from labor; O give us Thine to arm us for today. Impress us that there is no armament so potent and enduring as that of the observance of moral, spiritual, and religious obligations of a great people and without that sanctuary there can be no perpetuation of the decencies and securities of any civilization. We pray for the Great Comforter that He may become our shield and buckler, our wealth and power, our preparedness, our love of liberty, and that He may forever make America unconquered and unconquerable. May no failures, no regrets, no afflictions, and no sin follow in the wake of this day. In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, July 11, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Pursuant to House Resolution 552, on July 12, 1940, the Clerk of the House received from the Secretary of the Senate the following message announcing that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 4165. An act to provide, in cooperation with the Port of New York Authority, for the construction in New York Harbor of a graving drydock large enough to accommodate the largest naval ships built or building.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10030. An act increasing the number of naval aviators in the line of the Regular Navy and Marine Corps, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to announce that pursuant to the authority granted him on July 10, 1940, he did on July 12, 1940, sign the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 6056. An act for the relief of Antal or Anthony or Tony Zaicek or Zaiczek;

H. R. 6884. An act to encourage travel in the United States and for other purposes;

H. R. 7696. An act to amend the United States Grain Standards Act, to provide for the grading of soybeans, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8372. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Chester, Ill.;

H. R. 9877. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder power plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes.

H. R. 10100. An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 582. Joint resolution making an appropriation to enable the United States Maritime Commission to establish the marine and war-risk insurance fund.

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had, on July 12, 1940, examined the foregoing bills and a joint resolution and found them truly enrolled.

The Speaker also announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 3046. An act to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled, "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939;

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on two subjects and to include in one an article on the proposed national parks in Oregon, and in the other a resolution adopted by the Townsend convention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I wanted to prefer a request for some time after the legislative program, but I have no notion as to what the program may be today.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot inform the gentleman as to whether or not the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] has any bills to call up. This is District of Columbia Day, and the gentleman from West Virginia is entitled to the call. The gentleman from West Virginia can answer the gentleman's question, perhaps.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, in answer partially, at least, to the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois, I believe it has been the rather general understanding and agreement that there would be no legislation this week of a highly controversial nature. I think this agreement was entered into between the majority and minority leaders. In view of the fact that the legislation on the District of Columbia Calendar at the present time is of a highly controversial nature I would want to go along with the leadership and the general agreement of the House and not call up those bills.

I may say to the Speaker, however, that I shall ask time under the District of Columbia Calendar, approximately 10 minutes, to discuss a matter which is of interest to the District and, I believe, the country at large.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the statement made by the gentleman from West Virginia as to an understanding about not taking up controversial legislation I want to say that I am perfectly anxious to cooperate in every way with the considered judgment of the leadership of the House, but we have this sort of situation: The Congress practically unanimously feels that it should stay in Washington to take care of important national-defense items. There is an extremely urgent, vital, and necessary national-defense item that we should get up, consider in the House, and act upon. It has been recommended by the Advisory Council on Defense, and the Appropriations Committee was told a week or 10 days ago that it was necessary, and that even days counted. I am now told that we cannot get a quorum of the Committee on Rules, and that it would be impossible to get it up for consideration. To say the least, I am forced to express my disappointment.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I would like to say to the gentleman from Virginia that the House Committee on Military Affairs finds itself in about the same attitude as the gentleman from Virginia. We have the hearty cooperation of the floor leader, who has been doing everything he could to facilitate it, of course, but we have had on the calendar for several days the bill to authorize the President to call the National Guard for training. We also are conducting hearings on the bill to provide compulsory military training. Both these matters I regard as considerably more important and more essential right at this time than even the bill about which the gentleman from Virginia is talking, because that bill involves construction, whereas the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs relates to matters that will be done within the next 6 months.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am not criticizing anybody for anything; I am merely stating facts. I believe that individual Members of Congress ought to stay here and attend to the business that Congress is staying in session to transact. We are not staying in Washington this summer just for a picnic or because we like the beautiful Capital of the Nation, but because it seems to be necessary to stay here. I feel that the individual Members of Congress ought to stay here and attend to these matters of much moment.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—EXPORT-IMPORT BANK (H. DOC. NO. 881)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

As a result of the war in Europe, far-reaching changes in world affairs have occurred, which necessarily have repercussions on the economic life both of the United States and of the other American Republics. All American Republics in some degree make a practice of selling, and should sell, surplus products to other parts of the world, and we in the United States export many items that are also exported by other countries of the Western Hemisphere.

The course of the war, the resultant blockades and counter blockades, and the inevitable disorganization, is preventing the flow of these surplus products to their normal markets. Necessarily this has caused distress in various parts of the New World, and will continue to cause distress until foreign trade can be resumed on a normal basis, and the seller of these surpluses is in a position to protect himself in disposing of his products. Until liberal commercial policies are restored and fair trading on a commercial plane is reopened, distress may be continued.

I therefore request that the Congress give prompt consideration to increasing the capital and lending power of the Export-Import Bank of Washington by $500,000,000, and removing some of the restrictions on its operations to the end that the bank may be of greater assistance to our neighbors south of the Rio Grande, including financing the handling and orderly marketing of some part of their surpluses.

It is to be hoped that before another year world trade can be reestablished, but, pending this adjustment, we in the United States should join with the peoples of the other republics of the Western Hemisphere in meeting their problems.

I call the attention of Congress to the fact that by helping our neighbors we will be helping ourselves. It is in the interests of the producers of our country, as well as in the interests of producers of other American countries, that there shall not be a disorganized or cutthroat market in those commodities which we all export.

No sensible person would advocate an attempt to prevent the normal exchange of commodities between other continents and the Americas, but what can and should be done is to prevent excessive fluctuations caused by distressed selling resulting from temporary interruption in the flow of trade, or the fact that there has not yet been reestablished a system of free exchange. Unless exporting countries are able to assist their nationals, they will be forced to bargain as best they can.

As has heretofore been made clear to the Congress, the Export-Import Bank is operated by directors representing the Departments of State, Treasury, Agriculture, and Commerce, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and is under the supervision of the Federal Loan Administrator, so that all interested branches of our Government participate in any loans that are authorized, and the directors of the bank should have a free hand as to the purposes for which loans are authorized and the terms and conditions upon which they are made.

I therefore request passage of appropriate legislation to this end.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 22, 1940.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—PUERTO RICO

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed.

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 23 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith certified copies of laws enacted by the fourth regular session of the Fourteenth Legislature of Puerto Rico, February 12 to April 15, 1940.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

The WHITE HOUSE, July 22, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], to submit a highly privileged resolution.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs I present a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

House Resolution 550

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House of Representatives if there is a secret pact, agreement, or understanding between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to provide military or naval support against Japan in Asia, or against Germany in Europe, in case of war between the Soviet Union and either Germany or Japan, or both.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the Secretary of State be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 13, 1940.

The Honorable SOL BLOOM,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BLOOM: I have received your letter of July 11, 1940, in which you transmit for any comment which I may desire to make several copies of House Resolution 550, requesting information from the President concerning any existing secret pact, agreement, or understanding between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, to provide military or naval support against Japan in Asia or against Germany in Europe, in case of war between the Soviet Union and either Germany or Japan, or both.

In reply, you are informed that there is no existing secret pact, agreement, or understanding of any kind whatsoever between the United States of America or the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

It is not believed, therefore, that the adoption of the resolution in question would serve any useful purpose.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia desire to address the House at this time?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that following the disposition of the unanimous-consent requests now being made I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by the President of Cuba yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the very able speech of the Speaker of the House of Representatives before the Democratic convention at Chicago. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the completion of the legislative business in order for today I may proceed for 1 hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the address by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from West Virginia yield for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, due to the observations made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] this morning, may I ask the majority leader if there is to be any change in the program as announced last week that nothing of a controversial nature will be brought up during the balance of the week?

Mr. RAYBURN. Not that I know of.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from West Virginia yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, after the 10 minutes granted the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Previous orders have already been made.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, after the previous orders heretofore entered, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I think it might be best if I yielded for all unanimous-consent requests at this time.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address I made, also to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter received from the Swiss Legation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by Senator E. E. Patton, published in the Knoxville Journal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article taken from the Evening Times, of Sayre, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RUTHERFORD]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

SUFFRAGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I trust that even though Members may have other matters which should consume attention at the opening of today's session, that as many colleagues as can possibly do so will permit me not to speak so much to them as to counsel with them about a certain action which has recently been taken by one of the great major political parties of this country.

For the first time in the history of the United States we have seen a political party declare in its platform adopted in convention for a clear-cut decision on a subject which has been of considerable interest to a large number of persons over a long period of time.

DEMOCRATS FOR SUFFRAGE

I refer to the action in Chicago by the platform and resolutions committee of the Democratic Party, and later by the convention delegates themselves, in adopting a plank in our 1940 platform which calls for the extension to District of Columbia residents of the privileges of the franchise. At that convention the Democratic Party went on record in affirmative language with an expresesion that suffrage should be extended to those persons who reside in the District of Columbia.

I know there are many of you who are conscientiously against the extension of the privilege and the responsibility of voting rights to the men and women who reside at our National Capital. I know full well there is a difference of opinion on this subject; but I do hail with enthusiasm, as one individual, the action of the Democratic Party of 1940 in declaring to the Nation that for those men and women who live in the District of Columbia and who cannot establish voting privileges in any State in this Union that a plan shall be evolved through legislative means which will give to them the rights and responsibilities of true voting citizens of this Nation of yours and mine.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. In view of the fact that the Democratic Party is in charge in the House and the Senate, and that we have a President who is the head of that party, is there any reason why you should not go right along and pass such legislation at the present session, since we are going to be here for some time? Why wait until next year? Why not go along with this program now if you have declared yourself in favor of it? Personally I shall join with you.

SENATOR CAPPER HELPS

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am very happy to have the assurance of the gentleman from Kansas of his support of legislation to bring about this desired end. I want also to pay tribute to the support which has been given through a long period of years by your distinguished Senator from the State of Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], who has had a resolution pending and who has done everything in his individual power and in cooperation with others to get action by Congress.

It will be my purpose as speedily as possible to have those individuals in the House of Representatives who are interested in this subject come together and counsel and discuss ways and means of bringing a suffrage measure to our body. I want to say that I believe it is highly significant that the chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], after long service in this body, has found himself in agreement with the extension of voting privileges to the men and women who live here, and he has introduced a resolution to bring that about. In talking with him personally, he told me that he arrived at this conclusion after a considerable amount of consideration and careful thought on the subject.

NO PARTISANSHIP INVOLVED

To continue with the decision made by the Democratic Party in its platform, I only wish that the Republican Party, meeting in convention at Philadelphia, had done as the Democratic Party did in Chicago. I say this not from any partisan standpoint whatever, because I believe this is a matter which is important to both parties. There should not be, and I am certain there will not be, any consideration of any such legislation that comes before us in a partisan manner, because the subject matter goes to the basic fundamentals of this country of yours and mine.

SONS AND DAUGHTERS COME OF AGE

I cannot see for a single moment why the large population that has grown up in the District of Columbia over a period of years should not have the responsibility of the vote. The processes of democracy should function in the District just as in any part of America. There was a time in the developing growth of the District of Columbia when most of the individuals who settled in this city came as employees of the Government or as tradesmen to carry on the needed commercial life of the city, but during the last 21 years or more sons and daughters have been born to the men and women who came here, and they are now of voting age. They cannot under any legal means or any stretch of the imagination establish a bona fide voting residence in any State of this Union. Why should these young men and women as they become 21 years of age be kept from voting for a President of the United States, just as young men and young women do in the States of Kansas or Illinois or my own State of West Virginia? Why should these fine Americans not have the rights and responsibilities of voting also for representation in Congress, and later, perhaps, there should be some form of local suffrage in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. As one who is entirely open-minded on the subject of suffrage in the District of Columbia, I wonder if the gentleman could explain to the House for our information just what is contemplated by the plank in the Democratic platform on this subject. Does it mean giving the residents of the District only the privilege of voting for a President, or does it perhaps mean giving two Senators as well as Representatives to the District, in addition?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman for raising that question. The plank simply declares for an extension of suffrage to the residents of the District of Columbia. We believe that those who are interested in the subject matter in this Congress will arrive at a legislative vehicle we can use to bring about a partial suffrage, if not a complete suffrage, for the District of Columbia. I believe it only fair to say that in my discussions over the last few years with Members of this body I have found many more of them in favor of giving a vote for President to residents of the District of Columbia than for any other part of the national representation or suffrage program.

Mr. MUNDT. I thank the gentleman. The thing that has worried me about this subject is giving two Senators, for example, to such a small segment of our country, geographically speaking, with regard to the location of the population, as the District would be, if it were given the status of a State. However, simply voting for President would seem to be exercising a perfectly logical constitutional privilege.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I again thank the gentleman for his contribution. I do wish to say, however, that the latest census figures for the District of Columbia show that we have a population of upward of 700,000. Of course, as the gentleman from South Dakota well knows, this is a larger population than many States have which have two Senators representing them. I say this in all good humor.

Mr. MUNDT. Yet geographically those States are larger, and the problems they face are tremendously larger than those the District has to face.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is exactly right. The only reason I made such comment is that the gentleman carried his observation not only to geographical location but to population as well.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. I happen to know that the gentleman from West Virginia appeared before the Democratic platform committee and presented the case on behalf of the people of the District of Columbia as to the right of suffrage. I compliment the gentleman upon the forceful presentation he must have made, judging by the results he obtained.

I now want to ask the gentleman if he knows whether that matter was presented at all to the Republican Platform Committee at Philadelphia, and whether it was even suggested to them that they might write a similar plank in their platform.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to say in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Washington that I do not know what action was taken by Washingtonians who were members of the District of Columbia Republican delegation at Philadelphia. In years gone by that subject has been presented to Republican conventions and has been presented, of course, to Democratic conventions, but this time we find the first real declaration in any party platform for the right of suffrage for the men and women who live in the District.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for 5 additional minutes?

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman the consent of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman has that consent, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia to proceed for 5 additional minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman again yield to me?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. It has been suggested, I think, by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], that since the Democrats are in control of the House and since the platform contains a proposal that suffrage be granted, that it should be granted forthwith. If the Republican Party at Philadelphia had written a similar plank in their platform, then would we not be doubly sure of enacting such legislation before we adjourn?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think, of course, if we could have this plank in both political platforms, it would help us on the floor, and just before I yield again to my friend from Kansas, I want to say that you have paid tribute to me for my presentation at Chicago of the plea for suffrage for the District of Columbia. I have no pride of leadership as such, and I simply joined with other men and women in working that this would be brought about and here publicly I pay tribute to Mr. Hildreth and Mr. McConihe and others of the District of Columbia delegation who kept plugging away for suffrage in the face of the discouragement which sometimes seemed very strong against their efforts in this direction.

Mr. LEAVY. I am sure the gentleman is unduly modest, because we in the House appreciate the battle the gentleman has made for suffrage in the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield again to the gentleman.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I view of the fact that a bill is now pending before the Judiciary Committee of the House and has been pending there during the entire session, and probably during the entire Congress, and in view of the fact that the majority party appears to be so strong for this legislation, why in the world bother about putting it into your party platform if you are in earnest about it, and I am sure the gentleman now before the House is in earnest about it; why not go along and get it up before the House? You have a majority on the committee in charge of the measure, and why not bring it out here and vote on it and not make it a so-called partisan matter? Probably the Republicans could have done the same thing, but it just seems to me it is rather useless to take any other course when the measure is pending before the Congress and when we are right here and are going to be in session for some time. Why not come in here and vote it out? I am sure the Republicans in great numbers will join the gentleman, and it will not be a partisan matter. Let us take the partisanship out of the question entirely.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; I want to do that very much. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], the very distinguished ranking member on the House District Committee, knows we have always tried to consider Washington matters from an entirely nonpartisan standpoint, and from the point of view of the welfare of the District of Columbia and in relation to the entire Nation.

I now want to make this further observation. There were hearings held before the Judiciary Committee of the House on this subject during the Seventy-fifth Congress and there has been a gradual coming to the viewpoint of a certain degree of representation for the District of Columbia. I am hoping that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] will take the leadership because he holds a key position and see that there is a vote taken in the Judiciary Committee so that a bill may be brought before the House for consideration.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. Of course, on this question of suffrage of the District of Columbia and self-government for the District, we hear discussed at every session of the Congress and I have heard statements made to the effect that they once had suffrage and the right of self-government in the District and that it did not work out and that Congress took it away from the District. I wonder if the gentleman could enlighten us on that part of the program.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I would say that what was here only applied to local government. There was no national representation in Congress or voting for the President of the United States under that plan, as I understand it, but there was a certain amount of local government and for various reasons that was taken away from the District of Columbia residents. I would not want to go into that just at this time, because it is a rather involved subject and covers considerable territory.

Mr. PITTENGER. The statement has been made that it did not work out on account of the National Government being located here and they had to abandon it, and I just wondered if that is true.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman for his observation, and I now yield to the able ranking minority member of the District Committee the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. To observe, as a matter of record, the persevering and consistent efforts that the gentleman has devoted to the interests and the welfare of the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Has it not been the gentleman's experience, since he has been conspicuously identified with this committee, that on numerous occasions he has had gentlemen and ladies say to him that they would be glad to live in the District of Columbia if they could only exercise the privilege the distinguished gentleman has been promoting for several years, and is it not a fact that those same gentlemen and ladies could make a very valuable contribution spiritually as well as physically and morally and intellectually to the affairs of the District of Columbia?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman from New York. I am certain that what the gentleman has observed is true and I so state this to the House. If the voting privilege were extended, those men and women would exercise that right and responsibility with a great deal of intelligence and civic-mindedness. I think it is fair to say that here in the District of Columbia there are men and women who form the bulk of the population who have those attributes.

Mr. O'BRIEN. And they would make priceless contributions to the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes. I shall not ask for any more time, although several gentlemen are on their feet who want to question me and add to the discussion. I value the consideration given me this afternoon, and I hope that we may speedily and favorably consider this most important subject. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has again expired.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 1 hour.

THE DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman begins would the gentleman like to have a quorum to hear his confession? I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. DIRKSEN. O Mr. Speaker, I would rather that the gentleman withdraw that.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, apropos of the quorum call, may I say that one of the most interesting meetings I ever addressed in my lifetime consisted of only seven people, including myself. A preacher in a little country town came to see me one day and said, "If you will supply the pulpit on a given Sunday night, it will enable me to obtain 13 days of uninterrupted vacation." I said I would do so with great pleasure. He said, "I am sure that when they find out that you are going to address the congregation, they will have to put up the standing-room-only signs." I repaired to this little town that night and found exactly seven people in the church, including myself. First we wound up the organ, as it were, and sang some of those old gospel hymns with real verve and gusto, and then in intimate fashion began to wrestle with the devil as Jacob did with the angel a long time ago, and I say to you that it turned out to be a very exciting and glorious meeting. So I am not particularly disconcerted about how few or how many folks are on the floor this afternoon.

I want to address myself to the great reunion in Chicago. I notice by the Washington Daily News that the weather made the headlines today, so all must be quiet on the Chicago front. I do say, because there is such a scrambling of politics and candidates today, that I think any citizen ought to discuss fully and freely the things that are transpiring in national conventions, platforms, and headlines that are being prepared for the country, because there is such an intermingling now that it is difficult for a great many of our citizenry to orient themselves.

I was one of those who attended the Chicago convention by remote attendance. I listened faithfully to the air waves. I read the generous and copious accounts that appeared in the newspapers, and may I preface my remarks today by adding testimony to the great Speaker of the House of Representatives. As I listened to the roll call of the States, I think there was a sort of quickening of the tempo of my thoughts, and there was a quickening of sentiments, because I had somehow hoped that the great Speaker of the House of Representatives, an outstanding Democrat, a man of infinite parliamentary capacity, a man of parliamentary skill, a man who had great devotion to the fundamentals of democracy, might have been nominated for the Vice Presidency of the United States, and I still feel that way. [Applause.] I say this with no disparagement of Secretary Wallace, for I have long entertained respect, esteem, and affection for the Secretary of Agriculture.

Now, we held an unbossed convention in Philadelphia, where there were no "smoke filled room" and there were no bosses pulling the strings. We held a convention where the avowed candidates for the Republican nomination for the Presidency competed with real earnestness and vigor, and after our deliberations we nominated Wendell Willkie, one time affiliated with the Democratic Party, who, like so many Democrats of the orthodox school, was deserted by his own party. He was selected to lead the Republicans in 1940 and also lead this Nation out of the wilderness.

In Chicago they had a completely bossed and dominated convention, where master minds were constantly pulling the strings in a smoke-filled room and where all candidates had been plowed under except the President of the United States and the very genial and amiable Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace.

Mr. PATRICK. I do not want to bother the gentleman now if he would rather yield later.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will be glad to yield later.

They were nominated amid demonstrations of turmoil and dissension. So I say, in view of the fact that a quondam Republican is on the Democratic ticket and that a former Democrat is on the Republican ticket, every citizen ought to freely exercise his prerogative of commenting upon contemporary affairs.

The Chicago convention, where the embattled hosts of democracy were assembled, was unique in so many ways that it is difficult to catalog.

In the first place, it was the only party reunion in history which was convened for the exclusive purpose of selecting a Vice President. The rest of the business had been taken care of before that time.

It was the only convention in the Nation's history which was manipulated by an assistant sergeant at arms who could not secure a berth on the Iowa delegation and who thereupon accepted a badge as assistant sergeant at arms, with a direct, open wire to the White House.

It was the first time that a party reunion was completely dominated by a candidate who did not choose to choose until he was nominated.

It was the only convention in history where delegates had to wear tags to indicate that they were not candidates for the Vice Presidency.

It was the only convention in history where they had 1 Vice President and 100 Vice Presidents on order.

It was the first convention in history where the theme song was Take Me Out to the Ball Game. [Laughter.]

It was unique in that Senator BILBO, of Mississippi, seemed to be the only Member of the United States Senate who was not an aspirant for the Vice Presidency.

It was the first time in the history of the Republic that by indirection the Republican Party selected a Democratic candidate because fear of the Republican standard bearer provoked the convention to select the incumbent of the White House as the only man who could beat Willkie.

It was the only convention in history where Vice Presidential candidates were so abundant that a delegate from Ohio nominated two of them, namely, Bascom Timmons, of Texas, and Charles Sawyer, Democratic National Committeeman from Ohio.

It was almost reminiscent of the old bank they used to tell about which had to reorganize because it had more vice presidents than depositors.

It was the only convention where the vocal superiority and laryngitical response of a superintendent of sewers stampeded a convention.

It was the first convention in history where a demonstration was mechanized, under the direction of Mayor Edward A. Kelly, of Chicago, and where Mayor Kelly's superintendent of sewers so completely forgot himself that at times there sprung from his taurian throat the unusual demand "Kelly Wants Roosevelt." [Laughter.]

It was the first and only convention in history where delegates, faced with the inevitable and inescapable threat of a third term, were like the old Gloucester fisherman who said, "I am going down to Gloucester tonight and get drunk and, oh, how I dread it." [Laughter.]

It was not a Roosevelt "blitzkrieg." It had nothing in common with the "blitzkrieg," as my good friend from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] suggested about the convention at Philadelphia. Indeed not. I think, Judge, that about the only parallel that could be found would be a reversal of the old biblical story so that "Jonah swallowed the whale." Indeed it was a great reunion.

Now let us examine for a moment some of the press comments.

Raymond Brandt, of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, in his special article in the Washington Star, said:

> The President will dictate all that the Democrats do in Chicago.

United Press, in the Daily News, carried this headline last week:

> F. D. Sails Potomac While Party Squirms.

Thomas Stokes, of Scripps-Howard, in the same paper, said:

> There is a telephone line between Hopkins' room and the White House.

Another dispatch stated:

> Pretty girls are distributing buttons with the words "Just Roosevelt."

This, of course, was in keeping with the romantic and sometimes fictional character of a convention.

Another dispatch said,

> Farley candidacy embarrasses Roosevelt, says Hopkins, Walker, and Flynn.

Now, Mr. Alsop, of the famed team of Alsop and Kintner, author of the first American white paper, said this in the Washington Star in a syndicated article:

> Barring accidents, the players should speak their lines as if the show had been on tour for years.

Said the same Alsop in another syndicated article:

> Most of the platform was written at the White House well in advance of the convention.

Said the same Alsop regarding President Roosevelt's nomination:

> It was a surprise party without a surprise since the humblest voter knew it months ago.

And the same Alsop had this to say:

> There is constant telephonic communication between the White House and the master minds at the Blackstone Hotel.

I wondered whether there was method in the madness of Brother Hopkins that he should have selected the Blackstone Hotel in Chicago, remembering, of course, the wizardry and the legerdemain of the former Blackstone of the stage many years ago.

Then there appeared this prophetic article in the Washington Star of July 13, which was syndicated—and I ask you to listen to this because it was prophetic:

> A demonstration in which real enthusiasm of the delegates will be combined with the practical noise-making of such third-term magnificos as Kelly, Hague, and Flynn. Though Garner may be put in nomination, other aspirants will not trouble to have their names mentioned. The roll will be called, the tender will be made. The President will then accept in a statement showing that he did not ask for and did not want it, and then explain that in times like these no man when called on to serve can well refuse.

That was written 5 days before the great spiritualistic medium, the permanent chairman of the convention, gave that famous indirect message to the convention which contains not a single quote from the President of the United States.

As one news writer so well put it:

> The convention was so foolproof that not even One-Eyed Connally, the famous gate crasher, could get in, and had to get a badge as assistant sergeant at arms. This really made him the colleague of Harry Hopkins, the master mind who gave the somewhat impaired Stromboli touch to the mismanaged puppet show.

Now, let me address myself for a second to the keynote speech. Considering the magnitude of the task, our beloved Speaker made an admirable, an eloquent keynote address, which was dignified and stately. Too, it was, of course, eloquent for what it did not say, and in this respect we have a full appreciation of our beloved Speaker's difficulties.

When, for instance, he spoke of the inevitable errors which a party makes and for which public indulgence is hoped, obviously it was too much for us to expect that he would recount those errors and then indicate in what respect they might be corrected. When he spoke, for instance, of the virtues of Federal deposit insurance of bank deposits we could not very well expect him to bestow the accolade upon the pioneering Senator from Michigan, Senator VANDENBERG, who had so much to do with the Federal deposit insurance in its early days.

When our beloved Speaker spoke of unemployment and relief, obviously it was too much for us to expect that he would point out that the same William Green, the president of the American Federation of Labor, who appeared before the Democratic platform committee in Chicago, stated no less recently than in May in the American Federationist that we had 10,000,000 people out of work despite the enormous sums that had been expended thus far on that primary economic problem.

When our beloved Speaker spoke about the Republican platform and that it was full of equivocation and subterfuge because it did not suggest the abolition of a single New Deal measure, obviously we could not expect him to indicate where the minority party had insisted upon modifications of the Social Security and Wagner Acts and many other measures to make them more workable and feasible in the interest of the general welfare.

When the Speaker alluded to the fact that there was some opposition on our side to parity payments for agriculture, obviously we could not expect him to indicate that the President himself was opposed to parity and that the Secretary of Agriculture was opposed to parity until the Congress of the United States supplied the revenues and the taxes out of which parity payments might be made; and since that was not done, and since the Congress was remiss in its duty in that respect, obviously we could not expect our beloved Speaker to suggest that, of course; but that is the fact by the record.

Finally, the keynote speech was eloquent in that it did not mention those rather delicate and squeamish things like the deficit, the national debt, the annually recurring deficits, the need for increased taxes, and all those other things that are so delicate and fall so onerously upon the shoulders of the American people. But it was an eloquent and it was a stately address, and I salute the distinguished Speaker of this body.

Now let me turn for a moment to the permanent chairman, to the address by Senator BARKLEY. It did not meet the need of the hour. I venture the opinion that if the Republican convention had come after the Democratic convention, Senator BARKLEY would have had to recast that entire speech, because it was almost entirely devoted to Philadelphia, and to Hoover, and to 1932. Somebody should have gone up on the platform at the convention and whispered to him that Hoover was not running in 1940. The Senator's explorations in the field of history would qualify him as an expert in archaeology, because he has been going back to 1932 and 1929 so often. Somebody should have suggested to him that what the country wants is some 1940 thinking. And when I think of how Senator BARKLEY gave full emphasis to 1932 and 1929, it reminds me of the fellow who went into a restaurant and he said to the waiter, "What kind of soup do you have?" The waiter said, "Oxtail." He said, "Oh, why go back that far?" [Laughter.]

It might be suggested to Senator BARKLEY that it was not necessary to go back that far, but rather to deal with contemporary events and with the problems that do face this country despite the enormity of the expenditures that have been made.

Let me address a remark or two now to the platform which was unique and noteworthy because it was a great compliment to the Republican platform makers in Philadelphia. It followed out the handiwork of the Republican platform makers in respect of the foreign policy, aid to foreign democracies, and with regard to national defense. On the foreign policy, for instance, the Republican platform states that the Republican Party is opposed to involvement in foreign wars. Three weeks later come our Democratic brethren in Chicago and they say that this Nation will not participate in foreign war. These planks are striking in their similarity. Respecting aid to foreign democracies in countries in difficulty the Republican Party favors such aid as conforms to international law and is consonant with our defense needs. Three weeks later come our Democratic brethren in Chicago and announce that they favor material aid to democracies consistent with law and the interests of our own national defense. Here is a distinction without a difference.

One wonders about that foreign-policy plank. One wonders about the complete reversal of policy by the administration. One wonders about the quarantine speech in 1937 in Chicago and about the efforts to achieve international security and of pursuing methods short of war. What, then, has so suddenly happened here? As the New York Times remarked editorially on July 16 regarding quarantining and methods short of war:

> The high hope of outspoken Democratic leadership in all these policies has now gone up in smoke.

It was a complete reversal that somehow or other struck the note that the Republican Party has been following all the while which struck the temper of the country and on the very threshold of the convention they made that change. Truly there is the greatest and speediest transformation of foreign policy in the world's history. The Republican Party should feel complimented on its influence on the Democratic platform makers in Chicago.

Now, I have always got a thrill, of course, out of any recital of accomplishment, particularly for the last 7 years. The rest of the platform with respect to achievements will, I think, receive the plaudits and acclaim of the historians as the one piece of literature containing 4,000 words which does not contain a truly practical solution of the very real and pressing problems that now confront the Nation.

Now let us examine the record, and I hope you will indulge me if I am a bit whimsical at times. But 7 years ago President Roosevelt took over. Mr. Speaker, he really took over as the "must" legislation and blank-check appropriations and political purges and a hand-picked Supreme Court will amply testify. Now, he refuses to give back. What further proof is needed that he did not choose to choose until after all the candidates had been plowed under, after which he so reluctantly agreed not to give back control?

It brings to mind the story of the old fellow who used to take a nip once in a while and finally he was reformed. He was on his deathbed. So he said to his wife, "Mary, I wish you would go down to the old well and find that old bottle of liquor I have hidden down there under a loose board. Then, Mary, I want you to go out in the back yard and pick some nice, fresh mint leaves. Then, Mary, I want you to mix up a very cooling draft. Then, Mary, I want you to bring it up home and no matter how much I protest, Mary, make me drink it."

Yes, that was about the way it went, no matter how much I protest, make me accept the nomination. I think that was pretty nearly the keynote.

Seven years ago everybody was insisting on action. Why, even the most confirmed Tory and reactionary in the country wanted action. Mr. Speaker, they really got it. Even the Democratic Party got action in Chicago. In fact, they got double reverse, centripetal action, which was so complete and so efficacious that they are still wondering how a tornado which was generated in Room 308, Blackstone Hotel, by Brother Hopkins' wind machines could pack so much force and fury.

Seven years ago there was another platform. It has not been used so much, of course. You remember 4 weeks ago Alfalfa Bill was running for Congress in Oklahoma for Congressman-at-large against our good colleague, WILL ROGERS. Alfalfa Bill stated he was running on the Democratic platform of 1932. When they quizzed him about it, he says, "Why should I not? The damn thing has never been used anyway."

I am sure the gentleman will bear me out in that matter. We had that platform which pledged a balanced Budget. It pledged a 25-percent cut in appropriations, but it did not say when. Maybe we are still leading up to it. The 1940 platform does not say anything about that either. Maybe it is a hint of a fourth term and that in 1944 there may be another pledge of a balanced Budget and a promise not to spend all the receipts and revenues for more than 2 or 3 years in advance.

Seven years ago we started out with a brain trust. They constituted an incorporated group of ideas. The last 7 years have seen them vanish. Moley was banished to News Week, Tugwell was exiled to molasses, General Johnson retreated to Scripps-Howard, and Donald Richberg went back to legal practice, Frankfurter was promoted to the high court, and that beloved Jim Farley, esteemed and respected by Democrats and Republicans alike for his fairness and his sense of sportsmanship and his political sagacity, has gone to the Yankees. Thus does the wheel of destiny spin.

Seven years ago it was almost lese majeste to criticize the President. He was truly our national hero, and I do not mind making a public confession in the Well of this House that, as a new Member of this Congress in the special session of 1933 I looked to the President of the United States, I expected things and went along with a great many pieces of administration legislation; but there has come now, of course, the "sitskrieg" and the "blitzkrieg." There came the plugged dollar and the doubleheader Thanksgiving. There came the splurge, the surge, the purge, and the dirge. There came the plowing under of little pigs and the plowing under of candidates and delegates at Chicago. There came the Blue Eagle and some alleged pinks in high places. There came the Black appointment and the amber and green light in Chicago.

Came $100 a plate dinners and $250 a copy convention books. Came the 1937 speech in Chicago to quarantine aggressor nations, and the 1940 Chicago "blitzkrieg" to quarantine all the Democrats. Truly there were 7 eventful years.

Let us look at some unanswered questions. Let us look at some of the real problems confronting the country as our brethren on this side stand on the threshold of a third-term effort. Examine the keynote address, the address of the permanent chairman, the Chicago platform, and the President's acceptance speech, and you will note that after 7 years of unlimited power and authority and with untold billions of dollars to spend there are still 10,000,000 persons out of work, and no suggestion of a practical solution to meet this primary national problem, this problem that, in my judgment, is the foremost of all, until there is a solution, will prevent the solution of a great many other problems. If you have not read the Democratic platform on unemployment, I think it would be well for me to read it to you:

The Democratic Party wages war on unemployment, one of the gravest problems of our times, inherited at its worst from the last Republican administration. Since we assumed office, 9,000,000 additional persons have gained regular employment in normal private enterprise.

Frankly, I do not know what the facts are behind that figure, but I cherish grave and unmistakable doubts about it.

Continuing—

All our policies, financial, industrial, and agricultural, will continue to accelerate the rate of this progress.

By public action where necessary to suplement private reemployment we have rescued millions from idleness that breeds weakness and given them a real stake in their country's well-being. We shall continue to recognize the obligation of Government to provide work for deserving workers who cannot be absorbed by private industry.

We are opposed to vesting in the States and local authorities the control of Federally financed work relief. We believe that this Republican proposal is a thinly disguised plan to put the unemployed back on the dole.

We will continue energetically to direct our efforts toward the employment in private industry of all those willing to work, as well as the fullest employment of money and machines. This we pledge as our primary objective.

To further implement this objective, we favor calling, under the direction of the President, a national unemployment conference of leaders of Government, industry, labor and farm groups.

There is work in our factories, mines, fields, forests, and river basins, on our coasts, highways, railroads, and inland waterways. There are houses to be built to shelter our people. Building a better America means work and a higher standard of living for every family and a richer and more secure heritage for every American.

When this is all boiled down, what is it? It is a pledge to the American people to continue to spend, and then to hold a conference in Washington, after 7 long years, with 10,000,000 deserving and distressed people still upon the doorstep of unemployment.

If the administration knows what to do about this problem, why has it not done it, and why has it not given to the country a plan that is constructive? If it does not know what to do, then how can it very persuasively bid for another 4 years in authority? Administration leaders know, as every rational person knows, that only through continued monumental spending or through a revival of investment can we carry on at all. If the administration proposes to continue spending at the present rate, I am rather wondering what we are going to use for money after a little while. If, however, they agree that it requires a revival of investment, and apparently they do, why has not some plan been brought forth? If they have no plan, how can they persuasively ask the country to continue them in power for another 4 years?

If you want some illuminating reading, look at the Federal Reserve report for July 1940. You will note there that we have 10,000 fewer banks than we had in 1929. These 10,000 fewer banks have $5,000,000,000 more deposits than they had in 1929, and we have $7,000,000,000 fewer loans and investments by banks than we had in 1929. So that for the last 11 years we have lost 10,000 banks, deposits have gone up $5,000,000,000, and bank loans and investments have gone down $7,000,000,000, and unemployment still runs along at a static level of almost 10,000,000. These are the things in which I am interested, and they are the things in which the country is interested.

While social legislation and social reform is a grand thing, as is so amply testified by the support it has received on our own side of the aisle, yet why talk to a fellow about 40 hours a week when there is not a job for him? Why particularly emphasize the right of collective bargaining until there is something to bargain about? I voted for all those measures for shorter hours and increased pay and collective bargaining, but the first and foremost problem of the country today is the 10,000,000 people who are still out of work.

Somehow, there is nothing in that platform, there is nothing in that program, and nothing in the speeches to indicate that the solution has been found. So I say to you, my good friends over on this side, in the best of sportsmanship, how can you well go to the country and ask them to continue you in power for another 4 years and give your President a third term, when for 7 years, with all the authority we have conferred, and with all the blank checks, you still have not found a solution?

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield with rare pleasure.

Mr. PATRICK. This is, of course, an interesting matter. We confess, that is, all the Democrats I have heard discuss this question have confessed that we have not been able to take up the slack we found when we took over. We have taken up some of it but not all of it. The point is, however, since the gentleman refers to that fact, what guaranties do the Republicans offer that they have a solution that will relieve the situation, in view of the fact that they promised prosperity and instead of that gave us unemployment and a sinking of the stomach nationally?

Mr. DIRKSEN. We propose so to relieve the situation and so inspire confidence in the business structure of the country that there will be an expansion of employment and that the billions of idle dollars that are now in the banks of the country will join in a kind of holy wedlock with the idle hands of the country and restore that type of prosperity that is sound, continuing, and durable. There is no other answer except that.

Mr. PATRICK. How are you going to do that or how is the Republican Party going to do that?

Mr. DIRKSEN. First of all, what did we have here by way of a bill to amend the Wagner Labor Relations Act, and a lot of you gentlemen voted for it, but you have a Democratic-dominated Senate, where that bill is probably reposing right now, so the employer does not have a fair and equitable chance, which is so necessary before you can get set to take idle dollars and invest them in private enterprise that will make work for despairing people. That is No. 1.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my distinguished friend from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I wonder if the gentleman is in a position to advise the House and the country as to who it is or as to what it is that is holding up consideration of that measure in the Senate and, mind you, let me say that there are two other bills that the House has recently sent over there, both closely related to the measure to which the gentleman makes reference, and all three having to do with the sole purpose of preventing labor racketeering. Who is it that is holding them up over there? Is it party politics that is responsible for their being held in the background, and if it is party politics, is it your party or is it mine that is strangling those three measures in the Senate at this time? Mind you, the other two measures I refer to are, first, the bill to deport Harry Bridges, which passed by an overwhelming majority in this House. It is over in the Senate and it is being held up. Is it party politics that is holding it up, and if so, is it your party or my party that is responsible for it?

The other bill I refer to is the Walter bill that is being held up. They say over in the Senate, "If it is brought to a vote here we will pass it, of course, because no honest man can be heard to advance any argument against its adoption." But who is holding it in the background? Is it your party or is it my party? Why not let the truth be made known and let the party that is responsible for holding it up take the responsibility before the country for championing and supporting influences which those measures are intended to correct.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If you will permit me let me say to the great and able exponent of Jeffersonian democracy from Georgia—and he is a real exponent of true democracy—that the Republican membership in the Senate of the United States is less than 25 percent of the whole membership, and is not that the answer to the question of whether it is being held up by our party or the other party? Finally, in the light of the statements that have emanated from high places in the Nation, maybe the third-term nominee has indirectly or by the expression of a very inoccuous and slender wish or hope, indicated that perhaps there should be no action upon those bills.

Mr. POWERS and Mr. RANKIN rose.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. POWERS. Does it not seem rather strange to the gentleman that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK], a good Democrat, would get up here and defend the New Deal, particularly after the Hitler conclave that has just been concluded in Chicago?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, I never could tell whether my good friend from Alabama, with whom I have enjoyed some really pleasurable moments on the platform and on the air, is really persuaded in that direction at all or not.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my friend the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I think you Republicans were supposed to laugh at the proposition suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS]. I would suggest that you insert "laughter" in the RECORD at that point. But referring to the statement of my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], let me remind the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] that over in the Senate they have different rules from what we have here.

Any Member of the Senate can rise at any time and move to discharge a committee from the consideration of any one of these bills and bring it to the floor for a vote at any time. Now your Vice Presidential candidate is a Member of the Senate, and probably will be for several years, and he has the right to rise and make the motion, and the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], who, by the way, almost disappeared at Philadelphia, and any other, as for instance Senator TAFT, could do likewise.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And what good would it do if they should make the motion?

Mr. RANKIN. They could at least show their faith by their works, if they had the faith.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman admits that it would be only a gesture, that there would be the great administration, with its power, to hold it in the background.

Mr. RANKIN. When we were in the minority, when we had only 23 Democrats in the Senate, we caught the Secretary of the Interior stealing Teapot Dome, and we moved to discharge him and finally drove him from power and got that great oil reservoir back into the hands of Uncle Sam.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If my friend from Mississippi, by some arithmetical legerdemain, can show that 23 equals 72 over on the Senate floor, then I shall believe that something can be done about it.

Let me address myself for a moment now to a very delicate question—the third term. At last the third-term question is directly before the people. What they propose to do about it frankly I do not know, any more than you folks do, because you cannot foretell now with any degree of accuracy what the result will be on November 5, 1940; but certainly, like Patrick Henry, we can dip into the future for a little wisdom.

It was George Washington who is first quoted on this matter and who said that "The love of power and the proneness to abuse it which predominates in a man's heart" is one of those strange human qualities.

Then came Thomas Jefferson, and, mind you, despite the insistence of memorials from 7 of the 17 State legislatures in his day urging him to take a third term, he said it would degenerate into an inheritance and he would be the last to willingly break the precedent that had been set by Washington.

Then came Jackson, in his message to Congress recognizing the danger of contravening the intention of the Constitution, urging an amendment fixing the Presidential tenure at one term.

Then came the great Democratic convention in 1896. That was the day when that flaming crusader, William Jennings Bryan, coursed through the land; and the slogan of free silver and 16 to 1 echoed from every pair of lips in the country. That was the day, and I will bet my good friend the gentleman from Mississippi, Judge RANKIN, remembers it quite well—I was born in that year, so could not remember it or know a great deal about it——

Mr. RANKIN. Bryan was the greatest statesman Illinois has ever produced.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the gentleman is more than half right. It reminds me of the farmer from Vermont who came down to attend a White House reception years ago when Mr. Lincoln was President. Somehow or other all of the guards kept pushing him to the background, and he never did get to shake hands with the President, but finally he got close enough to say to the President that up in Vermont "we believe that God Almighty and Abraham Lincoln will save this Nation." Mr. Lincoln said to him in a whimsical way, "You are half right," and so I say to the gentleman from Mississippi he is half right. But those were the days when they held meetings in the schoolhouses discussing gold and silver and the monetary question that bulked so much in the campaign of 1896.

That was a National Democratic Convention which had declared it to be the unwritten law, sanctioned by custom and usage, "That no man should be eligible for a third term of the Presidential office." That was your party speaking, not ours.

Then came the resolution in the United States Senate on the 10th of February 1928 to the effect that it was the sense of the Senate that a departure from the third-term precedent would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions. Who supported that resolution?

First there was "Dear ALBEN" BARKLEY, the permanent chairman of the convention in 1940. Who else? Well, there was Senator WAGNER, the chairman of the resolutions committee in Chicago, and there were Senator PITTMAN, the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, and Senator HARRISON. There were Senators ASHURST and GERRY and GLASS and KING, HAYDEN, MCKELLAR, NEELY, SHEPPARD, SMITH, TYDINGS, WHEELER. Now, if you want to go in for a bit of captivating and ingenious fun, I suggest you get the roll call of the 1940 convention in Chicago and check most of those names and find out how in 12 years some of the tried, true, and trusted statesmen of the United States Senate finally went back on the resolution of 1928 and believe in 1940 that a third term will be first-class medicine for the country.

As late as 1939 our good friend, Representative Drewry, of Virginia, Senator Adams, of Colorado, and Senator Johnson, of Colorado, former Governor Clark, of Idaho, Senator Gillette, of Iowa, and a great many outstanding Democrats, stated that it is a matter of principle that there should be no third term. But somehow the wisdom of the founding fathers and the deep conviction of present-day public officials and statesmen was disdained, and there is before the people the question of breaking an ancient precedent and electing a President for a third term.

One of the most disconcerting things about the present third term is the processes by which it was contrived. I am one of those who supported the President on many occasions, as the RECORD of this House will show.

I am one of those who disagreed with the President on some matters of policy, but have cherished for him a rather deep and abiding confidence in his sincerity of purpose. I am one of those who believed firmly that the President placed country above party. But as I reflect upon the course of events which led to the final decision to stand for a third term, something of that belief and something of that faith in the President has been somewhat impaired.

After that celebrated indirect message delivered by Senator BARKLEY to the convention, after his address as permanent chairman, it should be noted that the President was not once directly quoted in that message. It was the Senator from Kentucky speaking. Here is the sentiment which he sought to convey to the convention:

First, that the President had no wish to be a candidate for a third term.

Second, that the President exerted no influence on the delegates.

Third, that he did not seek the opinions of the delegates.

Fourth, that the President has never had the desire or the purpose to continue in office or to be nominated.

Fifth, that the delegates are free to vote for any candidate.

The senior Senator from Illinois [SCOTT LUCAS], who at one time was a Member of this House, stood up before that convention the night they were nominating and balloting on Vice President and there he said:

If this were a free and open convention I would have let my name go to the convention as a candidate for the Vice Presidency.

That is the senior Democratic Senator from Illinois speaking to the convention itself when he said it was not a free and open convention.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me continue for just a moment and then I will yield.

Now, what does the last year of effort indicate with respect to the President's statement through Senator BARKLEY that he never had the desire or purpose to continue in office or to be nominated?

How many times when quizzed directly or indirectly by those ingenious newspaper men in Washington did he not say to somebody, "You stand in the corner and wear a dunce cap" when they got uncomfortably close on the third term.

What single thing has the President done to discourage a build-up for the third term? When Secretary Wallace, in a public address about a year ago, stated that Roosevelt must be nominated in 1940, was anything said to discourage the growing boom?

When Secretary Ickes said, "There can be no other in 1940 than Roosevelt," and started his one-man boom, was anything done to squelch or discourage the idea?

When Senator GUFFEY, that great Keystone State statesman, not only plunked out for a third term, but actually published a book in January of 1940 under the captivating title "Roosevelt Again," which I read with interest yesterday, and in which the Pennsylvania Senator said "The third term is a political hobgoblin," and that it was "a spurious issue of tradition," was anything said or done to discourage the idea?

So here is the great author from the Keystone State insisting away back in January of this year that there ought to be a third term for President Roosevelt, and to prove it, if you had attuned your ear to the convention you might have heard the stentorian voice of Senator GUFFEY saying, "Pennsylvania casts 72 votes for Franklin Delano Roosevelt." That was the answer.

Now, then, as the Presidential boom of the tall, tan, and terrific gentleman from Indiana, Governor McNutt, got under way and had begun to catch on in the country, what happened? The first thing they did was to file a tax deficiency and have him come before the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Then they took his friend from Indiana, Bowman Elder, I think, who was custodian of the 2-percent fund in Indiana and filed a deficiency of $83,000 against him, because Governor McNutt was catching on in the country. So, like so many candidates, he had to be plowed under.

If the President did not want a third term, I ask you in all fairness, why did he allow his name to go into the Illinois primary in April of 1940? Why did he say that Jim Farley was unacceptable as a candidate because of the issue of religion? Why was there this reversal of foreign policy in Chicago, to indicate that anything would be offered so that nothing would impair the free-wheeling of the convention and the well-oiled mechanization as it plowed under all candidates to nominate "Just Roosevelt"?

Let me quote a rather pointed paragraph from his acceptance speech. The President said:

When in 1936 I was chosen by the voters for a second time as President it was my firm intention to turn over the responsibilities of government to other hands at the end of my term.

In other words, the President clearly indicated that the question of whether he turned over control at the end of 8 years was a matter of personal choice with him. But finally it is indicated to the country that he is the indispensable person; and so the ancient custom, the ancient precedent, the ancient usage against a third term has been broken.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. In a moment. I wonder some, by what logic can you argue against a fourth term if the third term is broken? By what logic can you argue against a fifth term, or by what logic can you argue against a life tenure? The Constitution says that a man is not eligible to be President unless he is 35 years of age. If you give him four terms at the age of 55 when he starts he would be 71 when he finishes, or if you give him 20 years at the youngest age at which any President has been chosen, 48, the age of Theodore Roosevelt when he became President, he would be 68 years of age. So four terms is almost coextensive with a lifetime; and if you break the precedent now there can be no argument against a fourth term and there can be no convincing argument against life tenure in the presidential office.

I now yield to my friend from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. We all admire the extreme fairness of the gentleman from Ohio. I think he is one of the real statesmen in the House.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MASON. From Illinois.

Mr. PATRICK. Was that an Ohio man?

Mr. MASON. No.

Mr. PATRICK. You see everybody admires the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. We have all enjoyed his résumé of this convention, but let us revert to the Vice Presidency. I want to ask this gentleman from Illinois if he does not think that since he seems so outraged because the President very frankly stated that his preference was Henry Wallace——

Mr. DIRKSEN. I did not say a thing of that kind, did I?

Mr. PATRICK. That if the delegates wished to support the President's choice with their confidence and so accentuate the ticket that they were doing anything undemocratic or injurious to the Nation? It must be remembered that the Republicans themselves waited and created a sort of embarrassing pause between the time that Willkie chose McNary and the time that McNary accepted.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Did the gentleman hear me say a single thing about the President's making his choice for the Vice Presidency?

Mr. PATRICK. I interpreted the gentleman's remarks that way when he stated that Senator LUCAS said that if it had been a free and open convention, he would have permitted his name to have been placed in nomination.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That related not, of course, only to the Vice Presidency but to the entire convention.

Mr. PATRICK. But Senator LUCAS was speaking only of the Vice Presidency when he made that statement.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, I doubt it very much. He was speaking of the whole convention.

Mr. PATRICK. I was at the convention, I may say to my good friend from Illinois, and possibly I got a little more accurate idea of what happened and the atmosphere of the convention than the gentleman from Illinois did, who was not there.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have some doubt about that. I attended the Philadelphia convention and became persuaded that the man at the end of the radio knew more about what was going on at the convention than did the man at the convention itself.

Mr. PATRICK. That is probably true of Philadelphia.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It certainly was true of the Chicago convention.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. I have listened with a great deal of fascination to the gentleman's report and analysis of the convention in Chicago. I can conceive that schoolboys in future years are going to turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this date to study how democracy reached a crisis at this convention, and read and possibly memorize the charming words of the gentleman from Illinois. I think his report and analysis will be read and reread, not only now but in future, so I would like to read into this memorable address the fact that the convention at Chicago just closed was the only convention at which the name of Thomas Jefferson was jeered by the delegates instead of cheered. We heard the name of Thomas Jefferson jeered when Senator CARTER GLASS quoted Jefferson's language showing why seeking a third term was incorrect.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. With pleasure.

Mr. PATRICK. We who were there, of course, could see and know that that was an unfair and unjust report, because it was not the name of Thomas Jefferson that was jeered.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The confusion probably grows out of the fact that that was the only convention I ever heard of at which there were two sound systems instead of one. The superintendent of sewers of the city of Chicago was the only one outside of the organist who knew where to turn on the second key, and he so far forgot himself in leading his mechanized cheering squad that he said: "Kelly wants Roosevelt."

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. I disagree with the interpretation that it was jeering the name of Thomas Jefferson, but it certainly was jeering the philosophy of Thomas Jefferson and the statement that Thomas Jefferson had made concerning any third term.

Mr. PATRICK. That was not an interpretation. I am not going to dispute that, although I did not so interpret it myself.

Mr. COX. It was jeering the philosophy of our greatest American, or at least one of our greatest Americans, as uttered by one of the most outstanding and ablest living Americans in paying tribute to the most popular man in America, Jim Farley. [Applause.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, let me conclude with the statement that while some of this is whimsical, it may not be so whimsical and so funny as we move on. There are such great implications in this whole set-up so that every citizen, irrespective of what party he belongs to much necessarily manifest a deep and abiding interest in the whole question of the third term and a departure from the wisdom of the fathers and the best contemporary thinking in this day and age.

It was suggested last night when we were having a round-table discussion on the Forum of the Air with Solicitor Francis Biddle, which included my good friend Mr. Patrick, the majority leader, Mr. Rayburn, the Senatorial nominee from Illinois, Mr. Brooks, Senator Burke of Nebraska, and myself, that after all we were not concerned with what the Senate said in 1928 and we were not concerned with what the Democratic convention said in 1896, because this was 1940. It does not make any difference what party prevails, and it does not make any difference who the candidate is, nor does it make any difference how the Republican and Democratic Parties may be scrambled so that there might be the emergence of new or altered parties phoenix-like on the ashes of the old. The third term is still an important thing for the American people, for if, in the language of Thomas Jefferson, we go along with the idea that it may become an inheritance, then you have come dangerously close to the philosophy that is being articulated in Europe. Then you make a mockery of the platform which contains the word "democracy" oftener than any Democratic platform that I have ever read. So let us have deep, straight, and true thinking as we go before the people and discuss this matter of the third term and the departure from the traditions that have been made sacred by usage and custom over 160 years of the life of this Republic.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. What could be a better way to determine that than to try it, since there is such a demand? We have a President; we have a crisis; we have a man who could not even get a second term and who could not get his nose under the tent. Why is not this a wonderful time, with a crisis on, to try it for 4 years and see whether or not the objectives that they say are there obtained?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is the very question on which the American people must speak on the 5th of November 1940, and they will, in my judgment, speak earnestly and convincingly.

Mr. PATRICK. The Democratic Party is bold enough to step right out and give them a chance.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think one of the older Members once related to me about somebody who was at one time a Member of the House of Representatives who, when advised of some change of sentiment back home, changed his own mind and his own position on certain legislation and finally stated, "Nobody can change his mind any quicker than I can." That is about what happened at Chicago. You had come along with the idea of rendering all sorts of aid to the distressed folks overseas and of quarantining the aggressors; you came along with international security and concerted efforts short of war; then in the message on defense which the President submitted to this Congress a week before the convention you did a complete about-face and a complete transformation on foreign policy. Yes, my friends, you certainly have a capacity for changing your mind. [Applause.]

Only one further thing is necessary to establish the temper and the mystic operations of the convention, and that is to append a few of the many editorials from the pens of experienced and competent newspapermen, who are unanimous in how the draft process was contrived. They speak for themselves.

Philadelphia Inquirer, July 16, 1940, by William C. Murphy, Jr.:

But the real battle in this convention was being fought far from the listless and comparatively small crowd which watched the opening session of the convention this morning.

It was being fought out in rooms in the Stevens Hotel, where the Democratic National Committee has its headquarters, and in the Blackstone Hotel just across the street, where a White House high command under the nominal leadership of Secretary of Commerce Harry Hopkins has set up for business.

The questions at issue were:

1. Whether the dominant New Deal group should use their overwhelming delegate strength to ram through a third term by acclamation without regard for the feelings or technical rights of other potential Presidential candidates.

2. Whether the Hopkins group here, presumably with the President's backing, should dictate the choice of the Vice Presidential candidate and give that nomination to someone ardently devoted to the New Deal philosophy of government, or should seek some Vice Presidential candidate who might promote harmony among the various groups within the party.

From an editorial in the Baltimore Sun, July 17, 1940:

MR. ROOSEVELT CONSENTS TO A JOB-HOLDERS DRAFT

Showmanship wilted in the sunlight of fact. The time when Mr. Roosevelt's statement could have been received at face value was before the delegations were chosen. Indeed, it would have been far more creditable to Mr. Roosevelt if, like Mr. Coolidge, he had given his party a year's notice. But that was not his game. The most pathetic feature of this incident was the excuse for delay given by Mr. Roosevelt to the Washington correspondents yesterday—that he considered it proper to wait until the convention was permanently organized. An absurd excuse, of course; he undoubtedly knew a year ago, perhaps longer ago, that he intended to attempt to destroy the third-term tradition. Yet it was no more absurd than the statement, as relayed by Senator BARKLEY, that he "has no wish to be a candidate again." If he had no such wish, why were Hopkins and the other White House lads working their heads off at Chicago to smooth the way for a third nomination by acclamation? * * *

By Frank R. Kent, in the Baltimore Sun:

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

The four horsemen referred to are: Eddie Flynn, Senator (Joe) Guffey, Mayor (Eddie) Kelly, and Frank Hague.

These four political horsemen constitute the real power behind the "draft" movement. Combined they control more than 200 delegates in the convention—or about one-fifth of the whole. None of them is in politics for his health or for fun. They are practical to the last degree. If and when this fake "draft" business is concluded and the campaign for a third term begins, it may be helpful to the voters to understand just who are its principal backers.

Boston Herald, July 15, 1940, by Henry Ehrlich:

Probably never in the history of Democratic national conventions have the delegates from the New England States, outside of Massachusetts, arrived in a convention city with a greater consciousness of harmony and a lesser anticipation of warm excitement. The delegations from Maine, New Hempshire, Vermant, Rhode Island, and Connecticut are all pledged to the renomination of President Roosevelt, and settling down here today, all proposed to see their pledges through.

None has any direct information about the renomination strategy of the New Deal managers, but whether reluctantly or enthusiastically, all intend to participate in any draft-Roosevelt movement that is staged at the convention hall. And a majority of the New Englanders are willing to go along with whomever the President designates as his running mate.

Washington Star, July 15, 1940, by G. Gould Lincoln:

The twenty-eighth Democratic National Convention held its first session here today, heard Mayor Edward J. Kelly, of Chicago, demand that President Roosevelt be drafted for a third term, and recessed until tonight without a word yet forthcoming from the President himself.

The convention was rapped to order by National Chairman James A. Farley. To all outward intents and purposes, the convention is being run by the regular Democratic organization.

But over in the Blackstone Hotel, made famous 20 years ago, when, in a "smoke filled" room, Republican bosses picked Warren G. Harding for the party's Presidential nominee, sits the guiding hand of this convention—Secretary of Commerce Hopkins. Mr. Hopkins merely reflects the wishes of the President himself. It is through him, however, that the manipulation of the convention goes forward.

The Christian Science Monitor, July 15, 1940, by Richard L. Strout:

The Democratic National Convention met at 11:05, central standard time, today under conditions unprecedented in the history of American politics.

The convention is dominated by one man, President Roosevelt, who for 2 long years has declined to discuss his political intentions and who only last Friday announced his firm intention not to come to Chicago.

It met today determined to break the unwritten law of American political history not to nominate a President for a third term.

It started, furthermore, determined on making this nomination without having received—right down to the final minute—any formal word that the man it intended to nominate would accept if the honor were bestowed upon him.

Mr. Roosevelt's confidential commitment, it is understood, includes only what he will do if drafted, and drafted in the sense of receiving the nomination by acclamation. Even to Mr. Farley, in his secret conference at Hyde Park, it is understood, Mr. Roosevelt only discussed what he would do if nominated, without going into nomination plans.

From an editorial in the Baltimore Sun, July 18, 1940:

ALL IN CHARACTER

Conceivably Mr. Roosevelt could reverse his attitude toward Hitler and Mussolini and embrace dictatorship in preference to democracy. Short of that, his nomination for a third term will extend a record of reversals of principle and policy as far as the imagination dare roam in dealing with a public man. * * *

And now, standing forth before the world as the chief and most eloquent champion of democracy, he paves the way for destruction of the two-term rule. And this rule, from the time of George Washington, has been the unwritten barrier against use of the enormous powers and patronage of the Presidential office to establish dictatorship.

To men less resourceful than is Mr. Roosevelt in finding and using occasions for reversals of principle and policy, there seems nothing left to him now except sudden discovery of superlative virtues in Hitler and Mussolini and Stalin and their way of life.

From an editorial in the New York Herald Tribune, July 18, 1940:

TWO CONVENTIONS

It seems at Chicago almost as if the President had become overconfident of his power and was scornful of criticism. Either that or his sense of political showmanship has sadly deteriorated. The maneuvers leading up to the convention—all lying completely under his hand—were calculated to confuse and disgust the delegates. They were treated like puppets waiting to be jerked through their parts. And finally when the moment of the great revelation arrived, instead of the expected inspirational utterance, there turned up a trick as childish as it was absurd—a hollow pretense of "freeing" delegates who knew they were still bound hand and foot. * * *

From an editorial in the Washington Daily News of July 17, 1940, by Raymond Clapper:

WALLACE OR JOHNSON

The Roosevelt statement—coming at this late date—was just so many words. Such a statement several months ago when newspaper correspondents were pressing him for a statement at every press conference, might have carried some ring of genuine desire to retire. But it comes too late to carry with it any force of conviction. Especially so when the delegates know that for several days Mr. Roosevelt has been trying to get a suitable and willing running mate to be vice-presidential candidate on his ticket.

New York Times (Independent-Democrat), July 1940:

Mr. Roosevelt has chosen to break with the tradition which is as old as the Republic. He has yielded to a draft—to a supposedly spontaneous movement which was in fact carefully sponsored by his own lieutenants and which he could easily have resisted, even as late as Tuesday night, with a simple and straightforward statement that he would not accept a third-term nomination if it were offered him. * * * We believe that he has searched his mind and heart before making his decision; that he has not accepted this nomination because he really believes that he has been drafted, when he has seemed so carefully to plan this draft, and could so easily have resisted it. We believe that he has accepted it because he, too, believes in the doctrine of his own indispensability.

From an editorial in the Providence Journal, July 19, 1940:

THIS DEMOCRACY ON TRIAL

For if ever a man revealed himself, Franklin Roosevelt did in that message he had the permanent chairman of the convention, Senator BARKLEY, read for him. He was not, said Mr. Roosevelt, a candidate. He did not want the nomination.

And at the very moment his henchman, the man who lives in the White House with him, Harry Hopkins, was at the Chicago end of a private telephone wire to the White House, directing the procedure of the convention to assure that nomination for Mr. Roosevelt. * * *

There was something splendidly ironic in the circumstance that Mr. Roosevelt had his counterfeit message that "he did not want this nomination" delivered to those delegates, bound to his dangerous ambitions by the power of Federal patronage, through that same Senator BARKLEY—dear ALBEN—whose reelection to the Senate from Kentucky Mr. Roosevelt aided by explaining to the Kentuckians that Senator BARKLEY was an old hand in Washington who could be expected to bring back more Federal loot for them than any newcomer.

From an editorial in the Lexington (Ky.) Leader, July 1940:

ROOSEVELT GRABBED IT

Franklin D. Roosevelt grabbed the New Deal nomination from the wreck of the Democratic Party, having maneuvered the most completely boss-ridden convention in the history of the Nation into a position from which it had but one way of escape—by violating the third-term tradition and renominating himself.

For years Mr. Roosevelt had been planning the program that was carried out at Chicago, making it impossible for any other man to aspire to the nomination, conspiring to prevent the party from giving attention to any other candidacy. He took charge of the convention from its opening hour. Harry Hopkins, his favorite and most intimate adviser, who lives in the White House, was sent to oust Mr. Farley from control, and to manage the whole show to suit his master. Every Cabinet member, with the exception of Mr. Hull and the two Republicans recently appointed to head the Departments of War and Navy, was present and worked incessantly for Mr. Roosevelt's nomination. Yet he had the effrontery to send Mr. Barkley the following message, as the permanent chairman gave it to the convention:

"The President has never had and has not today any desire or purpose to continue in the office of President, to be a candidate for that office, or to be nominated by the convention for that office."

From an editorial in the New York Herald Tribune, July 17, 1940:

The one-man rule of the convention has been hardly less destructive of morale. It dramatizes the whole third-term threat. That a party ostensibly representing the people should exhibit a subordination to one man's whim and dictation unprecedented in American political history has gone far to reduce the convention to absurdity in the eyes of the Nation and stir resentment and confusion in the minds of the delegates.

From an editorial by Frank R. Kent, Baltimore Sun, July 17, 1940:

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

The revolting thing about the action of administration leaders in accepting a plank drawn by the isolationists was not so much its effect, which would have been bad, but the revelation of the extent to which Mr. Roosevelt's personal representatives would have gone to keep down an opposition that would disclose how hollow was their "draft." To avert a floor fight over an anti-third-term resolution, which would have shown a formidable minority against Mr. Roosevelt's attempt, they were willing to do a craven and despicable thing. It is as significant as it is revealing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] under a previous order.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Not for a statement. I do not want it to go in at this point in the RECORD.

Mr. PATRICK. I only want to speak for 10 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota for a unanimous-consent request only.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in connection with our national-defense program and to make some comment on the fact that we ought to be at work now. Request number two is to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with totalitarian forms of government and to include therein an editorial from a newspaper back in my district.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include certain figures on national defense and, secondly, to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include certain excerpts and editorials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today at the completion of any special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief editorial from the New York Times of July 18.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

SHALL THE PEOPLE RULE OR THE POWER TRUST CONTROL?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as I said on a previous occasion, it is not my intention to say anything that would ruffle the feelings of the ex-Republicans in the House with reference to the Philadelphia "blitzkrieg".

I notice that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] mentioned the name of Wendell L. Willkie three, four, or five times in his speech, and there was not a single handclap on the Republican side. That shows the disillusionment. He ran on his picture; I told you that a year ago. They used him as a front for the Power Trust. The delegates to the Republican convention had merely seen his picture. Now they have begun to get an insight into what has been going on, and they cannot even stir up applause on the Republican side of the House of Representatives for the newly made candidate of the newly made party they feel impelled to follow.

It reminds me of the little boy who came in one day and told his mother that he had seen a lion on the street. He had seen a little dog sheared up like a lion. She said, "Now, young man, you know that I know you didn't see any lion. I am going to break you of telling lies. I am going to lock you in that closet and keep you there until you pray God and get forgiveness for that lie. You get in there and go to praying. It will be dark, but as soon as He forgives you, you knock and I will let you out." She shoved him in the closet and locked the door and started away, when he knocked. She listened, and he knocked again. She opened the door and he stepped out smiling. She said, "What? Has God forgiven you already?" He said, "Oh, yes." She said, "What did He say?" He replied, "Oh, He said that was all right; He said He thought it was a lion when He first saw it." [Laughter.]

They had merely seen the picture of this Beau Brummell, this fashion plate of the Power Trust, this glamour boy of the utilities, before the Philadelphia convention.

He says that we went back on things that had been said before the convention, because the Democratic Party let it be known at Philadelphia that we are not going to plunge this country into a foreign war. That is what was done with reference to our foreign plank. I subscribe to that policy, and I believe that an overwhelming majority of the American people agree with me.

He says there is nothing definite about our platform with reference to a single problem that confronts the American people. In that he is entirely in error. The Democratic Party went on record on the greatest economic issue that has confronted us for the last 25 years, the greatest economic issue that will confront the American people for the next 25 years; that is, the electric-power question.

In 1871, when the German military machine, that great juggernaut, rolled down across the French Republic and left the French people broken and conquered beneath the heel of a ruthless invader, the world was shocked when it learned that there had been imposed upon those people an indemnity of $1,000,000,000, which it would take a generation to pay; but today this utilities juggernaut, the Power Trust branch of it alone, of which Wendell L. Willkie has succeeded to the position of Mussolini as a successor to Samuel Insull, is robbing and plundering the American people of $1,000,000,000 a year every year that rolls around in excessive overcharges for electric lights and power.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] ought to know that $69,000,000 every year is wrung from the helpless electric consumers in the State of Illinois, according to the rates in his own town, compared with the rates in Ontario, the Tennessee Valley area, or Tacoma, Wash. That $69,000,000 a year in 30 years would amount to more than the indemnity Germany imposed upon France at the end of the War of 1871, and I dare say now that with France again bleeding and crushed beneath the heel of this same ruthless invader, there will not be an indemnity imposed upon her comparable to the indemnity the American people are paying to this supergovernment, this gigantic octopus that sprawls over the Nation, runs its tentacles into every home, and exacts its tribute from every person who turns an electric switch—except a few who are served by municipal or other public systems. In 30 years these overcharges would amount to $30,000,000,000.

Another thing, we mentioned rural electrification, which the Republican Party never deigned to discuss at Philadelphia, even before it went out of business and was superseded by this utility Fascisti that is now claiming your support in the coming campaign. They talk about a third term. If you turn this country over to the Power Trust, there will probably not be any more terms; it will just be from then on, until the people who are being robbed and plundered rise in revolt. You gentlemen who now decry a third term never opened your mouths when Andrew Mellon was serving three terms as head of this Government.

The gentleman talks about Washington declining to run for a third term. Suppose Washington were here now, living at Mount Vernon, and saw this great corrupt, overpowering monopoly that is bleeding the American people to death economically, and saw that it was robbing the people of Virginia, glorious old Virginia, the home of the fathers of this Republic, of $11,000,000 a year in overcharges for electric light and power, running its tentacles even into Mount Vernon itself. Do you suppose that Washington would say, "Let us turn down the man who has fought that thing and put the head of it in power"? No! A thousand times no!

They talk about Thomas Jefferson—the greatest statesman of all time, the man who advocated equal and exact justice to all men and special privilege to none—having declined to run for a third term. If Thomas Jefferson were in Virginia today and saw this gigantic monopoly trying to steal the water power of the Nation, building spite lines to destroy rural electrification, using every corrupt method known to try to hold the Nation's power consumers in bondage, and wringing from them in overcharges $1,000,000,000 a year without giving anything in return, do you think Thomas Jefferson would turn down Frank Roosevelt because he had been President for 8 years, lacking a month and a half? Do you suppose he would turn him down and then take a man whose only contribution to American life has been in connection with this Power Trust Fascisti, the greatest racket of modern times? No! Thomas Jefferson would spurn such a proposal with contempt.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The difficulty with the gentleman's argument, of course, is that the President's acceptance speech had to do with his indispensability in world affairs and said nothing about what the gentleman is now discussing.

Mr. RANKIN. It is absolutely indispensable that we elect a man with Roosevelt's convictions on this great question. They talk about Andrew Jackson. I wonder if they think that if old Andrew Jackson, who is said to have possessed more courage of all kinds than possibly any other man who has ever filled the White House, whose honesty was unquestioned—if old Andrew Jackson were living now down in Tennessee on the banks of the Cumberland and had seen the State of Tennessee robbed and plundered by this identical utility of which Wendell Willkie was the head, and saw them try by every means, fair and foul, to destroy the Tennessee Valley Authority and prevent the development of the Cumberland; if he had seen them go out at night, this very utility, if you please, of which Willkie was the head, and try to build spite lines out among the farmers, until the farmers had to take their shotguns and run them away, do you suppose that under those circumstances even my genial and distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] would have the courage to go to Andrew Jackson and ask him to vote for the man who had been at the head of that racket for, lo, these many years, in preference to the man in the White House now who has been fighting for all he is worth?

Let us go a step further. He spoke of my friend Bryan. I loved William Jennings Bryan. In my humble opinion he was one of the greatest men that this Republic has ever seen. I can never forget his immortal words in his last campaign for the Presidency when his voice rang across the country, "Shall the people rule or the trusts control?"

I wonder if you think that William J. Bryan, if he were here today, with his fine moral sensibilities, his spiritual inspiration, his marvelous intelligence, his powerful statesmanship, would turn down Franklin D. Roosevelt, the man who has done more for the power consumers of America than all other Presidents combined, and vote for Wendell L. Willkie, who has been at the head of this gigantic combination that has been imposing, and is still imposing, these injustices upon the helpless consumers of electric light and power.

Let us go back into Illinois. You never in your life heard me utter a word on this floor derogatory of Abraham Lincoln. I take him as the great product of a great age. You know we Democrats have both sides of the Civil War now. We are entitled to the support of both the Confederate and the Federal soldiers, as well and all their descendants, as I pointed out the other day. Do you think that Abraham Lincoln intended for you Republicans just to transfer the Negroes from one bondage to the other and put the white people in there with them? If Abraham Lincoln were here today and could look back on those prairies of Illinois and see there how power could be generated with Illinois coal or water power and distributed at the T. V. A. rates or the Ontario rates, and see those people he tried to represent robbed and plundered by overcharges amounting to $69,000,000 a year, I wonder if you think that Abraham Lincoln would choose Wendell L. Willkie as against Franklin D. Roosevelt in the coming campaign.

No, there are 27,000,000 of these consumers who pay this overcharge every year.

General Grant was President for 8 years. Do you suppose if General Grant were President today and could go back into his home State of Ohio and see where those people are being robbed and plundered of more than $40,000,000 a year, so that it would take every bushel of wheat grown in Ohio to be given as a tribute to this gigantic monopoly that is rendering no service whatsoever to pay this overcharge—do you suppose General Grant would support such a ticket? Not on your life.

Do you suppose that William McKinley, if he could come back to Ohio and see what they are doing to the people of Ohio, would support Wendell Willkie in preference to Frank Roosevelt under the circumstances? Do you suppose that Teddy Roosevelt, the last Republican President who had the courage or conviction to stand up and denounce the malefactors of great wealth, if he were here today and could see what they are doing to the people in every State in the Union, when this is the supreme issue and when it is proposed to take for all time the water power of this Nation, which Teddy Roosevelt tried to save, and allow it to be gobbled up by this gigantic monopoly, so that the people of this Nation will pay tribute and remain in servitude to these utilities for all time to come—do you suppose if Teddy Roosevelt were living today that he would follow these malefactors of great wealth in preference to the distinguished gentleman who occupies the White House, and who has done so much to bring relief to the ultimate consumers of electricity throughout the entire Nation? Not on your life.

They talk about the Senate resolution of 1928. The Senate resolution was an effort to get rid of the Andrew Mellon machine in 1928, and I think all progressive Republicans voted for it.

But today we are in an emergency. We are threatened by grave dangers from within. You go to the people and ask them to stand for honest government, when some of these men are drawing salaries that make your salary and mine look like tips to the waiter, when the fourth vice president of this Commonwealth & Southern draws twice as much salary as the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I want the RECORD to show that I heard it from Wendell Willkie himself at the Press Club in the Nation's Capital, that his salary was $75,000 a year and that he turned down four efforts to give him an increase in salary.

Mr. RANKIN. And I want the RECORD to show that when he went in it was less than that, and that about the time he went in, the common stock in that outfit was selling at something like $30 a share and as those salaries have gone up the common stock has gone down, until today the common stock is at $1.25, and why? Because of the water in their capital structure. One man, a Member of this House, told me that they bought a small plant in Georgia and asked him to go in with them, which he refused to do. They paid $10,000 for it, and watered the stock up to around one million. Why, Mr. Speaker, this outfit is bankrupt. The Republicans have taken the head of a bankrupt institution, which he helped to bankrupt, and nominated him for the Presidency of the United States.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If it is bankrupt, it was the T. V. A. that bankrupted it.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, no; not the T. V. A. It is that crowd that has been watering the stock and is trying to hold up these rates to make the people pay dividends on all that graft. Why, this company in Washington, the Potomac Electric Power Co., sells electricity almost as cheaply as the T. V. A., and last year they made 64 percent on their common stock. Ontario produces and distributes one-twelfth the electricity that we do in the United States. They have invested $400,000,000—12 times that is $4,800,000,000. In this country $2,000,000,000 are invested in municipal plants and Government-owned facilities. Take that from your $4,800,000,000 and you have about $3,000,000,000 left, and that is about what this power trust has invested, about what it ought to be—it might be as high as $5,000,000,000. What do they claim? Thirteen billion dollars—about eight to ten billion dollars of which is nothing but wind, water, and power-trust rascality, yet they are requiring the helpless consumers of electricity to pay rates high enough to provide dividends on the entire amount in order that they may pay these enormous salaries just referred to.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I fear I have not the time. I have only a few minutes left.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, we will be able to get more time for the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. Then I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. I come, of course, from a section of the country where under the New Deal we have begun to see some relief from the very abuses the gentleman refers to.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; and let me say to the gentleman from Washington that if the Republican ticket is elected, the water power on the Columbia River which we have been trying to save at Grand Coulee and Bonneville will be turned over to the Power Trust, and you people will march back into the dark, so far as benefits from the Columbia River development is concerned.

Mr. LEAVY. Let me quote from a Republican Member who attended the Philadelphia convention, about whom the Portland Oregonian has this to say:

> Wendell L. Willkie favors completion of the Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams, rural electrification, and the widest use of power from these projects. The only difference he proposed was to put men in control who knew the utility business rather than politicians.

What does he mean by that?

Mr. RANKIN. I will tell you just exactly what he means. He means that the Power Trust will gobble it up.

Let me give you an example. In 1925 this Commonwealth & Southern Co. made a contract with the Republican administration to buy power at Muscle Shoals. In addition to inducing the Republican administration to turn over the Gorgas plant that was built as a stand-by for Muscle Shoals, they made a contract with this outfit to sell them this power. I have the figures here. They sold it to them at 2 mills a kilowatt-hour and they resold it in sight of the dam at 10 cents a kilowatt-hour, or about 4,800 percent profit.

Today Florence, Ala., is buying at the same point, Muscle Shoals, power at 4.83 mills per kilowatt-hour, more than twice as much as Willkie's outfit was paying, and selling it to the people of Florence at a maximum of 3 cents per kilowatt-hour instead of 10 cents and paying more money in lieu of taxes than the power company paid.

Today, when we sell this power at an average of 4½ mills per kilowatt-hour to the distribution systems throughout that country, they come back and say that we are selling it below the cost of production, when they were buying it at 2 mills per kilowatt-hour on the recommendation of the Army engineers, who knew what it was worth.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said about the candidate for Vice President, Hon. Henry A. Wallace. I am not a man who runs around after Cabinet officers, patting them on the back or strewing the flowers of flattery in their paths. But I have watched Henry Wallace ever since he has been Secretary of Agriculture and since the Rural Electrification Administration has been under his charge. I have been thrown in intimate contact with him; and I am frank to say that I do not believe a more honest, conscientious man ever occupied a seat in the Cabinet. I do not believe there ever was a man more conscientiously devoted to the cause of the farmers than Henry Wallace.

I deplore the statement of those men who say he was a former Republican. In 1921 his father was appointed Secretary of Agriculture under President Harding and served until his death in 1924. He saw the Republican Party come into power, and instead of bringing relief to the farmers they piled upon their backs the highest protective tariff ever known in times of peace, thereby levying a tax upon everything the farmers had to buy, from the swaddling clothes of infancy to the lining of the coffin in which old age is laid away. They pretended that such a tariff would help them when, as a matter of fact, they were shipping out more corn and more wheat than we were shipping in. Therefore the tariff on wheat and corn were of no avail. You might as well build a dam to keep water from flowing upstream as to try to help the farmers in this way.

He also saw them make refunds of income taxes on those large fortunes of men who got rich out of the war. He saw them give back to those big-income taxpayers billions of dollars at a time when agriculture was suffering. He saw them refuse to give any relief from the exorbitant freight rates that the people of the West were paying. He saw them take Teapot Dome and try to steal it and turn it over to these crooked interests. He saw them sweep away the Gorgas plant. He saw the Attorney General driven from power for corruption in office and dismissed with regrets by the head of the administration. He saw the farmers going down and down and down in the economic scale; and when his father passed away brokenhearted in 1924, Henry Wallace came out for the Democratic nominee for President and supported him that fall. He supported the Democratic ticket in 1928 and in 1932 and 1936.

He is a man of convictions, and he realizes that to go back to the old system as written into the Republican platform, and especially as left out of the Republican platform, which failed to even mention rural electrification, he realizes that it would simply mean destruction for the farmers of this Nation. He is determined to try to do something for them; and if events should so turn as to some day make Henry Wallace President of the United States, every farmer in America would know that he had a friend in the White House.

I had occasion to go to him some time ago when I was appealing for funds for rural electrification, and I got his unqualified support, with the result that probably a million farm homes will be electrified in the next year or two that never would have had electric lights if it had not been for this administration.

I know that a great bugaboo is going to be raised over the third-term issue, but when you come to put in power and perpetuate in power this utility Fascisti that is organized along lines of the Fascist governments of Europe, and realize its "fifth column," which we recognize even over the radio, reaches down into certain newspapers and other agencies of propaganda, influencing, or attempting to influence, members of State legislatures by putting them on the pay roll as lawyers, some of them living in counties where the power company did not own a line, and where they never had a case—when they realize all of these things, I submit the question of the third term is going to fade into insignificance beside the question of saving this Government from being destroyed from within.

You could not have a holding company in England or in Canada, because it is contrary to the common law. It has been found to be detrimental to the public welfare by the British courts for a thousand years.

Here it is destroying the people's faith in their Government, as well as their prosperity, and now they are demanding that you pick up a political pogo jumper who landed in the Republican Party on the third bounce and make him the President of this Republic. And the only thing you can raise in opposition to that is the third term and the fact that Mr. Wallace in his earlier days voted the Republican ticket, of which he has long since repented, and which he will never do again. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHEPPARD). Under the previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and to include therein an editorial from the Richmond News-Leader.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, many editorials in papers throughout the country show that the press is greatly alarmed over the slowness with which the national-defense program is progressing. We have expended billions of dollars and seemingly have practically nothing to show for it. I share the great alarm of the newspapers in that respect.

I am introducing a resolution which would require the administration to give biweekly reports to the Members of Congress on our national-defense program. We ought not to lose a second in our preparedness measures. If time is being lost, this situation should be corrected immediately.

The Congress of the United States is obviously going to stay in continuous session, much to my satisfaction. It is up to us to see that our laws are enforced. The Richmond News-Leader of June 24 published a splendid editorial which I commend to your consideration and study. From it I read the following:

A PROGRAM FOR THE CRISIS

The tragedy of a Britain that stands alone today against a dominant Germany is replete with more warnings to the United States than yet have been understood.

Heretofore the favorite jibe of Britain's enemies was that she knew how to make other nations fight her battles. Her European policy, said her enemies, was essentially that of playing one coalition against another to the end that no single power would control Europe.

By what incredible blundering did Britain lose every one of her World War Allies? How came she and France to give guaranties they could not hope to discharge? Other European powers seem to have had a just estimate of what Britain and France could and could not do against the Reich. Were the two Governments blind to their own limitations and ignorant of Germany's strength? Did Britain perceive the weakness of French morale that pathetically was disclosed within 3 weeks after Germany began total war in the west?

All the military experience of the world was summarized of old in the question, "What king, going to make war against another king, sitteth not down first and consulteth whether he be able with 10,000 to meet him that cometh against him with 20,000?" How did Britain and France disdain this? Did they rely overmuch on sea power? Were they content to figure on paper how their blockade should and therefore would starve Germany?

We do not know the answer, but we think we do know the moral for America. It can be presented in high words; it can be epitomized in three simple maxims: Do not start what you cannot finish; do not bite off more than you can chew; "Have faith in God and keep your powder dry."

These maxims we have endeavored to apply in specific terms to the United States:

1. Arm to the widest margin of conceivable need without an hour of preventable delay; but entrust the production of planes, tanks, guns, and munitions to experienced private industry, as far as practicable, and not to Government plants built and operated by politicians.

2. Demand regular progress reports on the output of all the essentials of war, to the end that the Nation will not be deceived as France and Britain were concerning their military resources. Every potential enemy knows through its spies the essential facts about our rearmament; let us not lull the country into a sense of false security by attempting to conceal what the country has a right to know about the state of armament, ere it endorses a vigorous foreign policy.

And I am sure my colleagues agree with me that the country is entitled to know, the country that pays the bills, the mothers and fathers, the wives and sweethearts of the men who will have to fight and who, if we are not prepared, will have to lose their lives in great numbers.

3. Prepare now for the widest selective service, military and civil, of all who are capable of helping in any emergency. This means the conscription of some millions of men to fight; it also involves the conscription of other millions to supply the fighters with everything they need in food, in equipment, and in money. There must be no exemptions. Although from the very nature of war, some men must sacrifice more than others, the effort of the Nation must be to spare none.

4. There must be no profiteering in the blood of youth and no gambling on the life of the Nation. Industries that are expanded to fill Government war orders must be protected against collapse when those orders cease, but taxation must eliminate all other war profit. In the event of a major conflict, the tax policy of the Government must be designed to take all the income every man makes, above that of peacetime, and to invest this in Government securities. This is necessary both to provide adequate war funds and to save the country from an increased demand for luxuries at a time when all industrial capacity may be required for war.

5. Toward the British Commonwealth of Nations and toward any other country that may be defending itself against totalitarian rule from without, the United States should exercise the most benevolent neutrality. Where facilities for production are increasing, priority should be given all British orders over those for our own national defense, so long as British resistance continues. Should it develop that British financial means are inadequate to pay for munitions, the United States should consider the amendment of existing laws in order to permit private or public credit in this country for the British Commonwealth of Nations.

6. While exercising this benevolent neutrality, the United States must weigh in every instance the ultimate gain or loss from the sale of Government stores to a belligerent, and in no case should the President make such sale, directly or indirectly, without the prior knowledge and consent of Congress.

While there is a difference of opinion as to the wisdom of maxim 5 of this editorial, there should be no difference of opinion regarding the sale of Government stores to a belligerent without the prior knowledge and consent of the Congress.

7. The United States must pursue a firm foreign policy in support of a reasonable interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine. That doctrine must be maintained to prevent the transfer of sovereignty over Canada and over all other American possessions of European countries; but the Monroe Doctrine must not be extended to include any guarantee by the United States of the continuance of any existing Latin-American government. This Nation will seek by legitimate means to promote pan-Americanism and to preclude the domination of any American government by a foreign power. The United States do not thereby promise support of the status quo, nor do the United States intend to break the cultural ties of Latin-America or to monopolize its trade.

8. Because 5 years will be required to provide adequate armament, which neither then nor thereafter must be used for aggression against any power, the United States must employ wise diplomacy as a means of gaining necessary time. Shrewdly the Nation must "play for time," especially in the Orient. No Far Eastern commitments of any sort must be made to an extent that will prevent the retention of the American battle fleet within the triangle Alaska-Hawaii-Panama. Next only to the nonaggressive maintenance of the Monroe Doctrine is this basic policy—no commitments, military, naval, or diplomatic, that hamper the use of the full fleet for the defense of the United States, the Panama Canal, and Hawaii.

9. A higher standard of individual and of national discipline is demanded if the country is to save the Western Hemisphere from the threat of totalitarian aggression. This discipline must be industrial, governmental, and moral. Representative government must represent the ideals, and not the fears of the Nation. The individual must work harder, and must allow himself fewer luxuries. If we are willing to discipline ourselves, we can complete necessary armament, can preserve American institutions, and can contribute to the restoration of free government among men. We can afford to be calm and confident if we exert ourselves for good government and maximum industrial effort. Complacency, self-indulgence, and delay may be our ruin.

I earnestly hope the membership will vote for my resolution demanding bi-weekly reports on our preparedness program. To my mind, there is nothing more vital to the welfare of our country than the thorough and expeditious carrying out of this program. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK] for 10 minutes.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, all Members of Congress, of course, are concerned with the very matter to which the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has called attention, and no Member of either Senate or House but joins in her hope that this program may be expedited. As for blame, she can only lay that to the plan of an omnipotent and all-wise God. You cannot plant corn today and serve the meal on the table tomorrow. This, of course, is a matter we all accept, and anybody who reflects seriously cannot follow the claim some newspapers are making that we ought to vote a program today and blossom forth with airplanes and ships tomorrow.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman from Alabama agrees with me that the Congress and the country are entitled to know what is being done along the lines of furthering the preparedness program.

Mr. PATRICK. Certainly, certainly.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am sure the gentleman agrees with me that we must not be kept in the dark on that subject.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield no further if that is all the gentlewoman has to offer.

I want to make a report. I was present at the convention in Chicago and saw the things in which the Republican brethren are able to read so much between the lines that simply were not discernible to those who were there. It may be that we in our partisan views have an inclination to interpret unhappily the things the Republicans did—and the same with them of us. Let us all be as charitable as we may.

It was strange to us as Democrats that the votes of the delegates of the Republican convention representing delegations from back home appeared to be determined by certain apparently organized and telegram-inspired groups in the galleries.

With all due respect to their view, that did not happen at the Democratic Convention. They came right out on the floor. Those people came there baptized in the gospel of Roosevelt and over 800 of the votes were already pledged out and out for Roosevelt. Of course, we from Alabama were heartily for the gentle, kindly, beloved Speaker of this House, but the President did no more than Willkie when he chose McNARY. The President favored the genial, capable, fearless, honest, sincere, and scholarly Henry Wallace for the Vice Presidency of the United States, and that gentleman became the choice of the convention.

The Republicans talk about doing an about-face. I believe the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] was numbered among the group, and we agree with him, that said that Willkie could not beat President Roosevelt. That was before he was nominated, of course. He stated very frankly to his colleagues in Philadelphia that a man like Willkie could not beat a man like Roosevelt. That worked its way into the press and it comes with some embarrassment I know. He did not appreciate the growth of his recently acquired colleague Willkie.

I have a little thing here entitled "Growth of Willkie." Would you like to hear it?

GROWTH OF WILLKIE

Well, these are pow'ful funny days in many mighty funny ways
With individual as well as institution,
An' so it is we're glad to see the grand and glorious G. O. P.
Come forth an' throw across the stage a darn good contribution.
Convention day was drawin' nigh an' not one name across her sky
Seemed to inspire or to enthuse at public mention,
They tried out this, they sounded that; "If we but had one Democrat
To haul a little oomph an' zip into a tame convention."

Convention day was comin' on an' all was pale as early dawn
An' all they had was some dull bird like Hoover, Taft, or Dewey—
But, brother, when the meetin' broke, who shoved thru the fuss an' smoke
To knock 'em for a lacin' loop an' make 'em all look screwy,
Who had knocked the set-up flat? Who but an off-brand Democrat—
A Huey Longish lookin' bird from out in Inianner!
He didn't look so fine an' tall among the Demmycrats, an' all—
But looks right good in t'other crowd—beneath that other banner.

B'gosh, it only goes to show how fer comparison does go.
A man can be with men of size till he looks kind of puny
But switch him over in a pen among a bunch of lighter men
An' he'll stand out until he seems a Dempsey or a Tunney.

So, as Mr. Swift said years ago, how big a man is is determined by whether he is among the big fellows or the pygmies, the Brobdingnagians or the Lilliputians.

I believe as sincerely as I believe anything that the Republicans, those who were truly Republicans, went up to Philadelphia without any idea of Willkie, but they felt they had to have someone with color and decided to sacrifice Republican principles for color. The Republicans as a rule do not believe in the things laid down by Willkie and advocated by him, but they had to have color and they got it. Willkie is like a sassafras tree in the fall of the year; he has got a lot of color but very little timber so far as becoming President of the United States is concerned. He has had no experience except as the president of a corporation. What background has he?

Mr. Speaker, you know what the vital issues are which confront us now and which will confront us this fall. They will hover above us all and inspire the people to vote, when voting time comes this fall. The most important thing and the most engaging issue will be regarding our foreign relationships and international affairs. At that time, in my opinion, England and Germany will be just before or during or just after one of the greatest conflicts that has ever rocked this mud ball that we call the earth. People are going to be studying, watching, and praying over that situation.

What do the Republicans have to offer? They come forward with Wendell Willkie. What does he know about our foreign affairs? He certainly would not claim to be an authority. How is Senator McNARY grounded on international relations? We have Hull, we have President Roosevelt himself, we have Sumner Welles, and we also now have in our ranks Messrs. Knox and Stimson, pulled right from the heart of Republicanism. When those men yielded to the call of the President in a crisis the Republicans got up and read them from the party, therefore cutting them off of every opportunity they should have to serve if there was such a thing as a Republican victory possible this fall. Look how Republican hopes have been going down every day during the past week. Even the Wall Street betting is now 9 to 5 on Roosevelt. If you gentlemen believe in your man get some of that money and give Wall Street a sock on the jaw at the same time. So, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to a real application of what is before us, when it comes to the power of the people this fall, they are going to study and decide who is stalwart enough to stand up and hold the banner of America, deliver a job in international affairs as between nation and nation, who is grounded in the faith of Americanism, who knows the work and who can deliver the goods. That is what it will be.

Now coming to the matter of platform, the Republicans adopted as nearly as they could, and they did a fairly good job of it, that which they already knew the Democrats were going to adopt. The amazing thing is they have adopted and have now made a part of their platform the very things the Republicans opposed and voted against in the House and Senate. It was over their political dead bodies almost that these various things became the law of the land. Now they have the temerity to say that, "We take them as our platform."

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEAVY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. Does the gentleman believe that Wendell L. Willkie has changed his views on political, social, and economic questions now from what they were 4 or 5 years ago by reason of the fact he is now serving the Republican Party?

Mr. PATRICK. I do not think he has to such an extent that we should risk him at the helm of our Government. He has not been the president of anything but a corporation.

Mr. LEAVY. In New York City, before the Economic Club of New York, in a debate with David E. Lilienthal, as reported in the Electrical World of February 2, 1935, page 48, Mr. Willkie had this to say:

Selling Government securities against over-built capacities on the Tennessee is in a class with the error of Insull in patriotically investing money in capacity so as to ward off the depression when it became a real threat in 1930.

May I ask the gentleman if there is but one interpretation to draw from that statement, and that is, that Mr. Willkie 5 years ago looked upon the activities of Mr. Insull 7 or 8 years preceding as patriotic activities?

Mr. PATRICK. What other interpretation could be placed upon it, I ask the gentleman?

Mr. LEAVY. Again in the same year, before the same club, the Economic Club of New York, on January 21, 1935, as reported in the Electrical World of February 16, 1935, on page 26, Mr. Willkie said:

I do not like to make personal references, but I want to say to you that no duty has ever come in my life, even that in the service of my country, which has so appealed to my sense of social obligation, patriotism, and love of mankind, as this, my obligation to say and do what I can for the preservation of public utilities, privately owned. All that I have observed, all that I know, and all that I read teaches me that I could do nothing nobler for the future financial stability and political good of my country or the social and economic well-being of my fellow citizens than to stand firm and unafraid against the foolish fad and fancy of the moment.

Do you blame the people in the Northwest, Washington, Oregon, and Idaho, for being fearful as to what may happen to those great public projects out there, Coulee and Bonneville, in the light of such statements made 5 years ago by the present nominee of the Republican Party?

Mr. PATRICK. I thank the gentleman very heartily for his contribution.

Aesop had something to say about the same sort of a situation several thousand years ago. He stated that there sat upon a crag high above the vale below, a mighty eagle, an eagle that felt that he was secure. He had flown so high and perched upon such a firm rock—perhaps the platform of the G. O. P.—that he felt nothing could reach him. But strange to say, an arrow came whizzing through the air and struck him to the heart. He looked on the shaft of the arrow and saw his own feathers, and he said, "How sad is my fate; I winged the arrow which strikes me dead."

So from now until election day Wendell Willkie is going to find the words he has spoken in his past winging straight to his vital spot; those are the words that show what a man really is. That is what Aesop had in mind. He was not talking about eagles; he was talking about human beings.

Let us follow it further. Since he has gotten hold of things and has become the Republican candidate Mr. Willkie says he is going to see that our Government takes its hands off the throttle of business and stops regulating private enterprise. Understand, Mr. and Mrs. America were in favor of that. All did not know it was going to work as far as it did. Nine-tenths of those who were for Roosevelt originally and who oppose him now do so because they thought it would not reach as far as to them. They find that now when folks are hungry taxation reaches them. They find now that when men were given jobs that they had to help, contribute to some degree to it, and that their own little organization was regulated somewhat itself. They want to let George do it. They want you to regulate the other fellow. When they saw that the rearranging of the entire structure of the Nation struck home, and they had to contribute themselves, then they were willing to let somebody starve. That is what is the matter with those imbued with an anti-Roosevelt fever. In this day it is their own selfish zeal, circumscribed views that have cut them down to a narrower stature than they had when they were idealistically following the broad visions of a new day and a New Deal. That is how a new broom sweeps so clean. Selfishness has not had a chance to get its work in so adequately and so diligently.

There is where we stand today. It means that if Wendell Willkie, with the powers that are supporting him, and we all know who they are—and that is the reason that if there ever was a time when the slogan that "We love him for the enemies he has made" is appropriate, it is today, because we can say, "We know Willkie by those who love him and by those who support and sustain him today." No straw was ever blown by the wind that shows more clearly in which direction the wind blows than the political straws that are seen in every sky in America today.

This is how that applies. It is one thing to say, "Pull off the regulation of business," and it is another thing to do it. They say it in general terms, but when you say, "All right, what, for example?" they say, "Oh, you must take your hand off the throat of American business life. You must quit shutting the door of opportunity and give the people confidence." But you say, "All right, in what respect, in what instance? What do you want? Where do you want it to apply?" and they will not answer. They say, "The Republicans are going to give you a New Deal of their own." "In what respect? What will you repeal? What are you going to cut out? What are you going to change?" They have no reply.

All they want to do is to kick the Democrats out and let the Republicans in on the Democratic method of doing business or on the Democratic program and the Democratic general activities except that one difference and here is the way it works out.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I will be glad to yield in a moment.

The first time you ever saw your little town traffic regulations you did not like them because you said, "Whenever I want to go on, a red light stares me in the face; I am not going to run over anybody; the other fellow might but I won't"; but it was found out that if you regulated affairs you had to stand there and let the traffic light regulate everybody, and even if the mayor's son went through, he had to go before the police court, too. Then you found lives were saved and traffic truly benefited. Now, you come down here and incline to Mr. Willkie's method of taking off the traffic lights and taking the hand off of the throttle of business and kill all regulation.

We do not say Willkie is dishonest himself, but we say his regime and the method he would thereby inaugurate would leave business wide open for the Insulls and even down to the Ponzis and strip America of that which she has worked so hard to build up during these past 7 years, which has made political enemies in high places while the people have loved the President of the United States, who has turned his face to the storm and exposed his breast to the millions of darts of those who would oppose him. He has stood up with such stalwart superiority that here today, when a Republican could not get his nose under the tent for a second term, there is a national acclaim calling on him to carry the standard for an unprecedented third term—and, apparently, he is going to get it, too.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think it is generally agreed by both parties that the crying need today is employment, and I am sure the gentleman will agree with me, because it is generally conceded——

Mr. PATRICK. I certainly do agree with the lady.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That even with government regulations Mr. Willkie has had a perfect genius for putting people to work.

Mr. PATRICK. Ha, he has a perfect genius for working people, if that is what you mean.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. He has given a great deal of employment to people and that cannot be contradicted.

Mr. PATRICK. He has not a thing to offer that Hoover did not have. He has the same sort of background, he has the promise that is just like Hoover's speech, and he is a great corporation man, just like Hoover was, and he comes forth and says the same thing that Hoover said. He has the same sort of philosophy, even a little more pronounced than Hoover. That is the trickle-down theory, and it may work all right for a corporation, but it does not work as a real, democratic principle for a democratic nation. It never has and never will with a nation like America. That is where we stand and that is where we are going to stand in this country, and you can bet your sweet life that the people are going to get a little more light on it every day.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman is apparently suffering from acute distress because of Mr. Willkie's nomination. May we all join——

Mr. PATRICK. May I join the Republicans in that feeling.

Mr. MICHENER. May we join in the hope it does not become chronic, and may I suggest to the gentleman that if he will just save his thunder until after Mr. Willkie's speech he will probably know more about what he is now attempting to talk about.

Mr. PATRICK. Until what?

Mr. MICHENER. I did not think the gentleman would comprehend.

Mr. PATRICK. Until what? Of course, we cannot all have that wide conception that some of you wise gentlemen over there have——

Mr. MICHENER. It is quite evident that is the case.

Mr. PATRICK. And nobody recognizes that more, I am sure, than the gentleman from his wide and high sphere looking on us humble boys down here.

Mr. MICHENER. I am just suggesting to the gentleman that if he will just contain himself and put up with his acute political suffering for a few days, Mr. Willkie will, in due season, outline just what he thinks about these things and we will be glad to hear the gentleman after that.

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman is trying to give me a little fatherly advice.

Mr. MICHENER. No; not fatherly advice, just a little common sense.

Mr. PATRICK. Oh, yes; I confess that my need in that respect is abundant; and if the kind gentleman can help me to have more common sense, he will aid me where my poverty is greatest. Of course, when we are handing common sense around we are a little biased. I think that I am using common sense when that is not what the other man is thinking, and vice versa; so it is natural for a man to feel that what he is offering is common sense and that the man to whom he is offering it is not so well grounded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Let us develop a little further the very definite similarity between what former President Hoover had to offer and what the present Mr. Willkie has to offer. One of the things they have been saying, as they said of Mr. Hoover, is that Mr. Willkie is a great salesman. That is true. He is a tremendously effective salesman, but as a matter of fact it is these high-powered salesmen who have the quality of getting to the unwary and taking from them their birthright, all for a mess of pottage. I am afraid of it. Experience of that sort of thing is not conducive to the trusting of the welfare of Mr. and Mrs. America to those salesmen. You know it is not salesmanship alone but more than that. No matter how well a man is able to present his case, he must have first the fundamentally grounded thing upon which the good of the Nation rests, and the good of the people rests, and that must be more than merely going out as a salesman and selling something. It may not be all right, but at least it is workable to come and say we will sell something, and put the selling of it above the commodity itself, and as a salesman put it over. No degree of salesmanship should go along with statesmanship that puts the sale superior to the thing to be sold, and the very minute you do you are running your Nation upon economic reefs, you are doing wrong to those whom you pretend to serve, and that is the danger in this salesmanship idea.

There is another little matter they seem to get excited about. Strange to say it was the Republicans who were not excited about it before, and that is that we do have here a man offering himself for a third term, by public acclaim, it is true. Do not forget about General Grant, after he had been President twice, in 1880, running for 35 ballots ahead of all others before James A. Garfield finally got ahead of him and got the nomination. Let me see if I have here a quotation from George Washington, the author of the two-term tradition, from a letter that he wrote to Lafayette in 1778:

"I can see no propriety in precluding ourselves from the services of any man who on some great emergency shall be deemed universally most capable of serving the public."

With the permission of the House I shall put the quotation exactly as written by Washington into the RECORD. Surely we have now the great emergency, and we Democrats think we have the man most capable of serving in this dark hour. These affairs present themselves to us; of course, they are vital to us in the light of the fact that we believe in a two-party system. You are faithful to your party, and I hope to be faithful to mine. If we did not believe in the tenets and principles of our respective parties of course we should not be identified with them and the party of each has been good to us and has trusted us to represent it and naturally that puts us in a position of extreme feeling of warmth and kindness to the party.

But no matter how acutely these things be drawn, no matter how hard the battle may wax, I hope we may never lose sight of the fact that, however high our ambitions individually or politically and as a party, we should not come to the day that we strip down and make it entirely a party affair, and try to cut down on the accomplishment of the Congress or the Nation in its march, because this or that was done under the work of the party on the other hand.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. I thank you very kindly.

Now here we have a President who was big enough in the face of an oncoming election to reach out and take in avowed Republicans; because Messrs. Knox and Stimson, two valuable and capable men, are well grounded in international affairs. The President, unbiased and broad, that staunch patriot and true, withstood the criticism of the rock-ribbed Democrats from our own side, to select and place them in his Cabinet. Of course he did not know what political results might flow from that, but he was great enough and strong enough and patriotic enough and broad enough in his scope and vision to place that even above political fortunes, and placed them in the Cabinet.

What did the Republicans do? A man who only four years ago was acclaimed as leader and clothed with the authority to become as far as that party was concerned, Vice President of the United States, the other having adorned gloriously a place in the Cabinet; they were called in and churched; the deacons passed on them; and they were thrown out of the church, dismissed; and the hand of Christian fellowship was withheld from them and no longer were they received as members. Read out of the Republican Party because they were willing to come and serve merely under a Democratic administration. So now how embarrassed would the Republican Party be if by some miraculous turn of the people's choice—if they could forget all the order of the past, forget the closed banks, forget that we have national events to attend to, forget the starving days, forget that the Republicans are the ones who are responsible for this great unemployment situation that has been so difficult to correct, forget that the Republicans never offered any constructive program, forget that they did not offer to give any reform on any of the points that they have criticized the Democrats about, and merely say, "We are against Democrats, we are against sin; kick them out and let us in." That is their whole program. That is all they want.

Now, if the people of America were to so far forget that as to vote Willkie in, he could not, with any face, invite Knox and Stimson, the only two real experts the Republicans have on foreign and international relations, to come in and help the administration and the needs of the Nation; even if the Republican banner were trailing in the dust they could not invite them. [Applause.]

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, on this hot afternoon in the latter part of the month of July it seems to be rather the vogue for some of us to discuss political affairs, and that seems to be the topic that is currently most popular for discussion in the House of Representatives and in the popular mind in the last few days.

I think I might draw the attention of those who have remained in the House Chamber to the character of the nominees of the Republican Party since 1912 and witness how they contrast with the present nominee.

In 1912 the Republican Party honored William Howard Taft and made him its nominee for a second term as President of the United States. William Howard Taft had served his apprenticeship in public service, having been Secretary of War, President of the United States, and Governor General of the Philippines.

In 1916 the Republican Party nominated an eminent lawyer, Charles Evans Hughes. Hughes had been Governor of New York, a Justice of the United States Supreme Court, and had served with distinction as chairman of an investigating committee to expose the rackets theretofore indulged in by the life insurance companies.

In 1920 the Republican Party nominated the eminent statesman from Ohio, Warren G. Harding, who had served his apprenticeship as Lieutenant Governor of the Buckeye State, and who also had been United States Senator from that State, and was in fact at that time serving as United States Senator.

In 1924 the Republican Party nominated for its standard bearer Calvin Coolidge, who had served with distinction in the Massachusetts Legislature, had been speaker of the house of that body, had been Vice President of the United States, and had been Governor of the State of Massachusetts.

In 1928 the Republican Party nominated as its standard bearer Herbert Hoover who had served his apprenticeship in public service as Secretary of Commerce, a man who had had charge of relief for the refugees of Europe and who had served competently during the years of the war in aiding the unfortunate citizens of foreign war-afflicted countries.

In 1932 the Republicans again nominated as their standard bearer Herbert Hoover. I have described his record.

In 1936 the Republican Party nominated Alfred Landon. Landon had served his apprenticeship in public service by having been Governor of the State of Kansas, and as a forceful member of the Kansas legislature.

In 1940 it remained for the Grand Old Party to nominate for the Presidency of the United States, in one of the most critical years in all of American history and in one of the most tragic in the world's history, a man who had never served any apprenticeship at any time, at any place, in any public service, whose only claim to distinction was that he was a smart, clever lawyer who possessed a practical gift for making wisecracks and pseudo-humorous remarks. They nominated a man who was characterized conspicuously by an entire absence of a record of any public service whatsoever.

Contrast him with Franklin D. Roosevelt who had served as President of the United States for two terms, who had been Governor of the Empire State—New York—who had been Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and who had served brilliantly as a member of the legislature of the State of New York. It seems to me that the Republican Party reflected upon the intelligence of the American people when it selected for its standard bearer the spear head of the power monopoly of the United States. Certainly, in my own State, Washington, the Republicans did not look with favor upon Wendell L. Willkie. Their choice was Dewey. True it is they are giving lip service to Willkie now because they have no choice. Dewey was the choice of the Republicans in my State as expressed by the delegates from the State of Washington to the Republican Convention at Philadelphia.

We in the State of Washington are sold on public ownership of power. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has time and time again dilated upon the signal success of the operation of the municipally owned power plant of the city of Tacoma, Wash., the rates of which are the lowest in the entire Nation. In the city of Tacoma, Wash., while they tax the gross receipts of the municipally owned power operations 7½ percent, they are nevertheless able to sell the power generated by that city plant at a rate lower than that charged in any other city or any other place in the entire United States. Yet they are making a profit of from $800,000 to $1,000,000 a year. With this they have retired their bonded indebtedness against the plant until it is down to $4,000,000.

Wendell L. Willkie is famed for being president of a public utility holding company. In 1935 this Congress saw a great deal of excitement generated by the passage of the act known as the Public Utility Holding Company Act. At the time the death-penalty clause was being considered these galleries were packed by private power monopoly lackeys and our colleagues were deluged with telegrams allegedly spontaneously sent by citizens of the United States. Out in our State we know a lot about these spontaneous telegrams of people who rise in their righteous (?) indignation demanding that private power companies shall have better and less regulation restrictions at the hands of the Government. In 1924, in my State, we had a bill sponsored by the senior Senator from Washington, Mr. HOMER T. BONE, in which the proponents sought the right to permit the municipal power plants of my State to sell surplus current outside the city limits. The Power Trust was then operating at full velocity in our State and formed citizens' committees. These citizens' committees were nonpartisan clubs. No one seemed to find out where the money came from for this movement. Telegrams were sent to members of the legislature apparently emanating from people who were moved by sincere impulses from within in defense of private power companies. Investigation subsequently disclosed, however, that the money was all spent by these private power companies and that they were sent by the dupes or employees of the companies or their friends.

They succumbed to that method at the Philadelphia convention. We find that many of our colleagues on the Republican side of this House were very active in their opposition to the candidacy of Mr. Wendell Willkie. I recall the way they formed a bloc against the nomination of Wendell Willkie.

Now, however, we find that most of them are giving lip service to Willkie, but I am convinced that down in their hearts they look upon his nomination with misgivings. I look upon Roosevelt as embodying the statement of Edwin Markham when he wrote about Lincoln. He said that Lincoln was a man that matched the mountains, and compelled the stars to look our way and honor us. I think of Willkie in terms as Shakespeare stated:

> Pray tell me this, upon what meat doth this our Caesar feed,
> That he has grown so great?

What has this man done in his career of 48 years to justify the confidence of the American people in elevating him to the Presidency of the most powerful nation on earth, facing the greatest crisis in all its history? What is his claim to distinction? The fact he has been the head of a private power utility holding company the market value of whose securities has gone down continuously since he has been president of that corporation, who has enjoyed a salary of $75,000 a year during the past 7 years while that corporation has passed the dividends on its common and preferred stock, who declined and refused to accept a cut in that salary of $75,000, and yet denied the stockholders of this holding company dividends on its common and preferred stock. In other words, the nominee of the Republican Party was unwilling to take the cut which had been imposed upon the lower-paid employees of that corporation and also upon its stockholders. But let us remember that the Commonwealth & Southern is not an operating company. It is a holding company.

This is the first time in the history of America when either one of the two political parties has gone into the heart of Wall Street and taken the executive of a Wall Street corporation, a concern owned by Electric Bond & Share and by J. P. Morgan & Co., and made that man its nominee for the Presidency of the United States. Wall Street does not seem to look very kindly upon its nominee, because the betting now in Wall Street is 9 to 5 that Roosevelt will be elected President of the United States. We will see during the course of the campaign something of the record of the two rival candidates. We do know Roosevelt's record. There is a saying that a man's past record is the most infallible signboard pointing the way to his political future. By that criterion the American people will judge the two nominees.

Henry Wallace has been nominated by the Democratic Party for the Vice Presidency of the United States. I am enthused about Henry Wallace as nominee for the Vice Presidency. His record as Secretary of Agriculture has shown to the American people that he is motivated by impulses of friendship for and a sincere desire to attain the solution of the problems affecting the plain people of America, a man whose heart beats in tune with the sufferings endured by the humblest citizens, a man who has gone out into the highways and byways and preached the gospel of the genuine New Deal.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Since the gentleman has been interrupted and before he gets too far away may I ask the gentleman from Washington if he observed the very delicate way and the very frequently employed instances of the method in which the opposition very frankly approaches the subject of Wall Street. When the fact was referred to that Wendell Willkie represents the Wall Street group the reference has been made to the fact that President Roosevelt had a physical office on Wall Street. May I ask if that is not the best example we have of the confusion of issues? It certainly is not the physical, concrete Wall Street of America which is concerned. It is a matter of whether or not the man has the financial, civic Wall Street gospel in him. It is like when Christ said, "Who is my neighbor?" It is not necessarily the man who has an office on the physical Wall Street but the man who is lined up with the Wall Street delegation that we have had to watch so carefully during all these 10 years and that we have had to regulate. I will ask if the gentleman was impressed by the fact that whenever identification of Wall Street was brought forth the Republican response was that Roosevelt had an office on Wall Street?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I have noted with particular interest that Candidate Willkie has been sounding off while vacationing in Colorado from the strenuous duties in Philadelphia, when he speaks of Roosevelt having an office on Wall Street. It is also stated that Willkie knows about civil liberties from personal, direct contact with the hard knocks of life, and not by reading about them in books. If that is the character of campaign that is going to be engaged in, the Democrats are ready to meet him on that issue. Mr. Roosevelt was born, it is true, in a family of wealth, but I have observed on frequent occasions that men who are proven liberals, men who have arrived at that conclusion by reason of study and conviction, are often much more to be depended on than men who have sprung from the soil, preached liberal views during their college days, then subsequently repudiated and scorned the base degrees by which they have ascended to higher places. The charge that Mr. Roosevelt had an office in Wall Street may best be answered by the attitude exhibited toward Mr. Roosevelt by the habitues of Wall Street. Those who reside in Wall Street and have their business there are not very enthusiastic about Roosevelt's election. Most of them despise him because he has put them in their place and regulated their questionable activities.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington be permitted to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I do not want to trespass too much on the time of the House. I will merely finish the statement.

We are going into a campaign which may be summarized as a campaign between Wall Street and Main Street; between the philosophy of Wall Street and the philosophy of the New Deal—the New Deal which was exemplified in Roosevelt's immortal statement that the New Deal stands for the forgotten man, the one-third of our population who have been ill-fed and undernourished; the New Deal which may be epitomized in the assertion that the Democratic Party under Franklin D. Roosevelt will not let the people down. The answer will be made in November, when the ranks of organized labor, the humble farmer, the small-business man, the unemployed, the needy, and the indigent of America, the plain and humble citizen, and the everyday rank and file of the common people go to the polls and again roll up a decisive majority for the Democratic Party as represented by Franklin D. Roosevelt and Henry Wallace.

I welcome the opportunity to go out on the stump on the issues which will be presented to the American people; the record made by seven and a half years by the Democratic Party as opposed to the personal record of Mr. Wendell L. Willkie as the promotor-president of a holding company engaged in the manipulation of stocks and securities based on wind and water, a manipulation which brought about the panic of 1929, a philosophy which was so decisively repudiated by the American people in the 1932 and 1936 elections. The people will be chary of taking a protagonist of a philosophy the carrying out of which brought about the debacle from which this country is slowly emerging. In other words, the American people have spoken unmistakably that they want no more of this manipulation, against which we passed the Securities and Exchange Commission Act. We want no more of this unlimited promotion of stocks based on wind and water; these holding companies mounted one upon another; parasitic organizations which are taking the lifeblood out of operating companies and sequestering it for the benefit of a small and select few.

I predict that Roosevelt will carry the American people tellingly to victory in the fall of 1940, and I deny the statements that appeared over the week end at the hands of certain columnists to the effect that a few renegade Democrats were going to change the result.

It amused me very much to read in the columns over the week end that ex-Senator James Reed, of Missouri, was advocating the election of Wendell Willkie, as if that were any novelty. Ever since Reed failed of nomination as Democratic candidate for President several years ago he has been doing his best to elect a Republican to office. I remember that in 1936 ex-Senator Jim Reed formed a Democratic Landon for President Club, which fizzled out hopelessly throughout this country, and we have a few more that will shortly show up on the hustings, but against whose mouthings nobody need waste any energy.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the glowing speeches that are made now about Wendell Willkie, and suggest that he check back, as I have been doing, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 4 years ago and see how much they look like, sound like and, I might add another word there, the speeches made in favor of Landon just 4 years ago.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I remember that very distinctly.

I believe the American people will submerge the spokesman of stock jobbing when they study the record of Mr. Hopson, of Associated Gas & Electric, of Mr. Insull and his Chicago utility empire, of Mr. Doherty and his Cities Service, of Clark and his Utilities Power & Light, and the various other manipulators of the public-utility holding companies of the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MILLER, for 1 week, on account of death of a member of his immediate family.

To Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. COCHRAN, for 3 days, in order to attend the funeral of Hon. Joseph H. Brogan, President of the Missouri State Senate.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 4165. An act to provide, in cooperation with the Port of New York Authority, for the construction in New York Harbor of a graving drydock large enough to accommodate the largest naval ships built or building; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on Friday, July 12, 1940, present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 2751. An act to repeal sections 3711, 3712, and 3713 of the Revised Statutes which relate to the purchase in the District of Columbia of coal and wood for public use, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9576. An act relating to the admission to St. Elizabeths Hospital of persons resident or domiciled in the Virgin Islands of the United States.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Thursday, July 25, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

There will be a meeting of the Comittee on Immigration and Naturalization in Room 445, House Office Building, at 10: 30 a. m., on Wednesday, July 24, 1940; consideration of private bills.

COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS

The Committee on Invalid Pensions will hold public hearings in the committee room, 247 House Office Building, at 10 a. m., Thursday, July 25, 1940, on H. R. 7693, a bill granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the Philippine uprisings and campaigns from July 5, 1902, to December 31, 1913, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1835. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Federal Communications Commission, fiscal year 1941, amounting to $175,000 (H. Doc. No. 882); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1836. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting an estimate of appropriation submitted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to pay a claim which has been settled by them under the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to settle claims and suits against the District of Columbia," approved February 11, 1929 (45 Stat. 1160), as amended by the act approved June 5, 1930 (46 Stat. 500), amounting to $500, and which requires an appropriation for its payment (H. Doc. No. 883); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1837. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1941 in the amount of $7,875.99 (H. Doc. No. 884); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1838. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated July 1, 1940, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination and survey or Cadet Bayou in the vicinity of Waveland, Hancock County, Miss., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved June 20, 1938; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JULY 25, 1940

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who seest that we are set in the midst of so many and such great dangers: Grant us grace, we humbly beseech Thee, so to cast our cares upon Thee that Thy merciful providence may always sustain and defend us, both in body and soul. Through Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER

The Secretary read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., July 25, 1940.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD, a Senator from the State of Texas, to perform the duties of the Chair this legislative day.

KEY PITTMAN,
President Pro Tempore.

Mr. SHEPPARD thereupon took the chair as Acting President pro tempore for the day.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. HARRISON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, July 22, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under authority of the order of the 22d instant,

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9828) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of bridges across the Monongahela River in Allegheny County, Pa., reported it without amendment on July 24, 1940, and submitted a report (No. 1984) thereon.

BILL INTRODUCED DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under authority of the order of the 22d instant,

Mr. GLASS, on July 24, 1940, introduced a bill (S. 4205) to permit American vessels to assist in the evacuation from the war zones of certain refugee children, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under authority of the order of the 22d instant,

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably on July 24, 1940, the nomination of Commander John H. Cornell to be a captain in the Coast Guard of the United States, to rank as such from July 1, 1940.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably on July 24, 1940, the following nominations:

Boatswain Emile T. Turcotte to be a chief boatswain, to rank as such from August 1, 1940; and Machinist Martin Lentz, Jr., to be a chief machinist, to rank as such from July 5, 1940.

Mr. SHEPPARD also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably on July 24, 1940, the nominations of several persons to be ensigns (temporary) in the Coast Guard of the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

TRANSFER OF ADMINISTRATION OF HOMESTEAD PROJECTS IN THE VIRGIN ISLANDS TO DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation transferring the administration of the homestead projects established in the Virgin Islands from the Government of the Virgin Islands to the Department of Agriculture, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

USE OF CERTAIN LAND BY CENTRAL VALLEY PROJECT, CALIFORNIA

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the use of a tract of land in California known as the Millerton Rancheria in connection with the Central Valley project, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from Lind Cairo River and Rail Warehouses, of Cairo, Ill., praying for the enactment of House bill 9195, to amend the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at the annual business meeting of the Central States Probation and Parole Conference, Chicago, Ill., favoring the enactment of legislation to permit youth on probation or on parole from correctional or penal institutions to enlist in the Civilian Conservation Corps, the United States Army or Navy, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Board of Managers and Officers of the New Jersey Society, Sons of the American Revolution, Newark, N. J., favoring the adoption of an adequate national-defense program and the suppression of all subversive activities in the Nation, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the enactment of legislation to provide an additional postoffice on the south side of Milwaukee, Wis., which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOLT presented a petition signed by 90 citizens of Middlebourne, W. Va., praying that the United States keep out of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution adopted by the Harford County Pomona Grange at Jarrettsville, Md., urging the United States to keep out of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying that the United States keep out of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Optimist Club, of Towson, Md., requesting that Congress remain in session during the existing emergency in the interest of national defense, and also that all subversive activities in the Nation be suppressed, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a resolution adopted by the Texas State Federation of Labor at San Antonio, Tex., favoring investigation by the so-called La Follette Civil Liberties Committee of the alleged practices to which Mexican workers are subjected while being transported from the State of Texas to other States, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Texas Joint Labor Legislative Board at Austin, Tex., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the fingerprinting of all aliens in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Texas, praying for the adoption of an adequate national-defense program and the suppression of all subversive activities in the Nation, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of San Antonio, Tex., and vicinity, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for compulsory military training for all men between the ages of 18 and 21, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NO INVOLVEMENT IN FOREIGN WAR—PETITION

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I present a petition and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The petition, requesting that this country not be involved in foreign war, is signed by some 20,000 persons who, themselves, represent 600,000 young people who subscribe to this sentiment. The signers represent youth groups, labor organizations, church societies, Negro groups, and many other organizations. The petition is addressed to the President of the United States, but was brought to my office with a request that it be brought to public attention by the Congress.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5403) to provide for the deposit of certain collections for overtime immigration services to the credit of the appropriation chargeable with the payment of such services, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1985) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time and referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

S. 4206. A bill to create an Indian Claims Commission, to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 4207. A bill to provide uniformity in temporary promotions in the Army of the United States in time of emergency; and

S. 4208. A bill establishing overtime rates for compensation for employees of the War Department, its Field Service, the Panama Canal Zone, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4209. A bill for the relief of Fred J. Duncan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CAPPER:

S. 4210. A bill for the relief of Leona Johnson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WHEELER:

S. 4211. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Felix Belanger; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CHAVEZ:

S. 4212. A bill for the relief of certain Navajo Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

(Mr. LEE introduced Senate bills 4213 and 4214, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and appear under separate headings.)

CIVIL AERONAUTICS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent to have read by the clerk an article appearing in American Aviation of July 15, after which I desire to make some remarks.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the article will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From American Aviation for July 15, 1940]

DISINTEGRATION

The aviation industry is completely, thoroughly, and unqualifiedly disgusted with the political mess and the chaotic disintegration of what once was the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Never in the history of civil aviation has Government control sunk to such a ludicrous and pitifully inept leadership—and civil aviation has seen plenty of dark days in the past.

Friction, uncertainty, lack of policies, lack of leadership, and petty intrigues engineered by wholly incompetent left-overs from W. P. A. have all but wrecked an organization which got off to a good start and which had every reason to succeed.

The reorganization of the Authority into the framework of the hodge-podge Commerce Department was the greatest blunder and the most unbearable insult that could be delivered to one of America's most vital industries and activities.

The important post of Administrator of Civil Aeronautics—a post which should be the most important job in civil aviation in the world—has become comic opera, with a poor old Army engineer who handled W. P. A. projects on the west coast as the nominal holder of the title. He has covered himself with glory already by warning veterans who have been flying for years against the dangers of the "flying machine." Actually! The man who is still calling airplanes "flying machines" has as his most important—and apparently only—job the signing of papers and doing what he is told.

There isn't any use keeping it a secret. The plain fact is that the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics of the United States is a mere puppet, a man who knows nothing about aviation and who hasn't any power to do anything even if he did know. He can't exert leadership unless he asks someone if it's all right, and chances are he's guessed wrong as to the answer anyway. In the week or more that the Administrator appeared on the job he blundered into one situation after another—a bitter and ironic chapter to the glories of civil aviation in the United States.

As for the new Assistant Secretary of Commerce, Robert H. Hinckley, there is no doubt that Mr. Hinckley has already made his mark. He has made the greatest, sweetest, and most grandiose mess out of civil aviation that any man could do in such a short time. The former Mormon teacher and mayor of Mount Pleasant, Utah, has been a huge and vast disappointment. He has made a sham out of the one agency which is so needed right now to exert constructive leadership for civil aviation.

It is inconceivable that in such a short time the strong framework of the independent Civil Aeronautics Authority could have been razed to the shambles it is in today. But there it is. To the many thousands of fine men who have devoted their lives and sacrificed everything else to push civil aviation another notch up the ladder, it is indeed disheartening to find civil aviation's governmental agency in the hands of a wrecking crew that has torn down in a month's time what had taken so long to build up.

We have tried to be fair to Mr. Hinckley. We have given freely of plaudits for his leadership in the civilian pilot training program. We have tried to believe that the former automobile dealer of Utah would exert genuine, solid, constructive leadership. But the hopes have been in vain. Even when he deserted his colleagues on the five-man Authority by completely reversing his position on reorganization after an hour's visit in the White House, we still thought there must be a meritorious reason—somewhere—for this sudden change.

The time has come to recognize certain unalterable facts. The Civil Aeronautics Authority is not a plaything of intrigue, is not a means of getting petty revenges, is not a political football, is not a stepping stone for political ambition. He who thinks it is any of these things cannot last long in a position of power.

The Civil Aeronautics Authority is an important, vital, Government agency for the regulation and promotion of aeronautics. An industry of air lines, of manufacturers, of fixed base operators, of pilots, schools, and mechanics demands the respect of this agency. It expects mature judgment, it expects efficient administration, it expects constructive leadership.

The sole question now remains how long Mr. Hinckley will continue the comic opera. His organization has disintegrated. He is not respected anywhere down the line from top to bottom. In such a chaotic condition it is just a matter of time until Mr. Hinckley himself—or the White House—realizes that the fun of intrigue and maneuvering is over and steps quietly out of the way of aviation progress. Private business won't put up with this buffoonery much longer.

ONE MILLION DOLLARS

It is estimated that well over $1,000,000 has been invested by air-transport companies in applications, preparation of cases, and hearings before the Civil Aeronautics Authority—without any decisions. W. A. Patterson, president of United Air Lines, is outspoken in calling the C. A. A. a bottleneck. In common with businessmen all over the country, and especially in the air-transport industry, he is becoming fed up with sloppy and inefficient Government administration. No Government agency has the right to tie up a million-dollar investment by any industry without coming to forthright decisions. Only in recent weeks, after endless prodding, has the Authority shown disposition to clear its choked dockets. But it has a long way to go.

We have had alibis, we have had excuses, we have had the reasons explained in painful detail. But the Civil Aeronautics Authority—now known as the Civil Aeronautics Board—has no real justification for making a mockery out of sincere private enterprise.

Four members of the Board have been handicapped, it is true, by a chairman who spent his time on every conceivable activity except economic regulation. Men of intellectual honesty usually resign from positions in which they have no interest or conscientious application. The C. A. A. Chairman did not. But, even so, this would appear to be no excuse for the majority of four to keep its economic regulation apace. A million dollars is a lot of money, even if it is only a pittance to a spendthrift administration. The air-transport industry has moved forward in spite of the C. A. B. handicaps, and if the C. A. B. does not soon become aware of its responsibilites it is likely to become the object of the most painstaking investigation.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the article just read by the Chief Clerk of the Senate comes from the magazine American Aviation, one of the most outstanding publications on aviation in the world. It comes after what was undoubtedly a careful study made by the editor of the publication, and every line in the article should be read by all who are interested in the welfare of this country.

In 1935 we attempted to take civil aviation out of the grasp of politics. We saw then that civil aviation in the world, and especially in the United States, was to become one of the greatest agencies for civilization, that it was to become one of the greatest methods of transportation this country would have. So we sought to take it out of the agencies where politics had placed it, and to have it put under an independent agency.

It took nearly 4 years, it took the drafting of 21 measures, it required the activity of 3 separate committees, 1 in the House of Representatives and 2 in the Senate, finally to enact what is known as the Civil Aeronautics Authority Act.

From the time that act became effective, from the time the Civil Aeronautics Authority was established, until the time it was destroyed about 2 months ago, that Authority rendered a service to this country and to the world unexcelled for efficiency. During that time there were flown in this country hundreds of millions of passenger-miles, millions of plane-miles, hundreds of millions of freight- and express-miles, without a single fatality or a single crash. The whole system, from beginning to end, was working harmoniously, and, indeed, if one may use the word advisedly, it was working perfectly. But for some unexplained reason or other that great agency, which had taken hold of this method of transportation, was destroyed by an Executive order, which was approved by the Senate but not approved by the other House of the Congress. So today we find civil aviation, which had been working so harmoniously and so perfectly derided, ridiculed, abused, if you please, because of the fact that out of a synchronized whole, out of harmony, out of success, there has resulted nothing but chaos and confusion. Today it is the most pitiable agency in the whole Government, when, as a matter of fact, only a few months ago it was the most complacent and the most happily working agency in the Government.

Mr. President, I mention this matter, and I have had the article read to the Senate, so that it may be known that those of us who struggled on the floor of the Senate for days to hold the Civil Aeronautics Authority intact and unified, as it was, are now confronted, and the Senate is now confronted, with the knowledge that what was done amounted to real destruction. It was not a mere joke to destroy something which had been set up after long years of struggle; it has resulted in nothing and it will result in nothing save and except what the article expresses, namely, the tearing down and the unhappy confusion which have resulted, and which will continue until civil aeronautics is again returned to an independent status in this country, so that civil aeronautics may go forward to build our country commercially, civilly, and militarily, because from civil aeronautics we will gain more for national defense than we will from any other agency, so far as development of transportation by air is concerned.

Out of civil aeronautics we will give to the Nation hundreds of the finest trained young men, pilots, men who know the terrain of America, who are ready to fly it from ocean to ocean, from the Gulf to the Canadian line. They know every inch of it, and knowing every inch of it, they should have the confidence which they have a right to entertain from knowing that the agency having control over them is out of politics, out of the control of any individual who would control that agency for politics. It is intent upon one thing and one only, and that is why the Civil Aeronautics Authority was made independent, that it might go forward removed from politics, removed from the influence of personal desires or motives of personal agrandizement, and with only one aim and object, namely, to build a great agency for the development of the United States.

Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have inserted in the RECORD immediately following the remarks I have made an article from the same magazine to which I have referred, American Aviation, the issue of July 15, 1940.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From American Aviation for July 15, 1940]

REORGANIZED C. A. A. IN CHAOTIC CONDITION; HINCKLEY ON SPOT

BOUTELLE RESIGNS TO SHUN "PURGE"; WHITE HOUSE MAY STEP IN

Confusion, friction, uncertainty, and bitterness, plus the disintegration of morale of the personnel, marked the formal transfer of the former independent Civil Aeronautics Authority into the Department of Commerce on June 30.

No sooner was the ink dry on the documents than the anticipated "purge" began—engineered by Robert H. Hinckley, until June 30 Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, and now Assistant Secretary of Commerce in charge of the C. A. A. and the United States Weather Bureau.

With efficiency and organization at the lowest ebb in the history of government, regulation and promotion of civil aviation in the United States, the storm-tossed Civil Aeronautics Authority, hitherto as independent as a Government agency could be, moved into a dark era in complete control of former Works Progress Administration new dealers and reformists, whose apparent original objective was the firing, directly or indirectly, of most of the old-line veterans who were part of the Bureau of Air Commerce prior to creation of C. A. A.

It is reliably known that Hinckley is very much "on the spot." The White House is watching the C. A. A. closely and still is smarting over the unexpected controversy raised by the reorganization plans with which the President was obviously not very familiar. If the C. A. A. doesn't work out smoothly in Commerce, the blame, according to informed White House circles, will fall on Hinckley, since the White House is having troubles enough of its own without adding more aviation battles.

CONGRESS RUMBLINGS

Rumblings are being heard in Congress. There is still much to be told of the behind-the-scenes activity which brought about the unexpected reorganization. Whether Hinckley will be able to ride out the storm and get his house in order is still debatable but there are not more than 1 per 1,000 in Washington who would give him an even chance. The damage, as observers see it, already has been done.

First casualty of the Commerce Department "blitzkrieg" was Richard S. Boutelle, director of the Bureau of Safety Regulation, one of the best known and most respected men in aviation, who resigned within an hour after he was informed that the general inspection unit of the C. A. A. was to be shifted under a large new private flying bureau to be headed by Grove Webster, who has been chief of the private-flying-development division.

Second resignation was that of Dr. E. S. Adams, chief of the medical section, who also would be under Webster if the proposed plan goes through. Dr. Adams has resigned effective August 1 to go on active duty as a lieutenant-colonel in the Army Air Corps. Although he would not comment on his resignation, it is no secret that Dr. Adams was "fed up" with the internal friction and the "brain trust" plans which came to light with the reorganization June 30.

Rumors of other important resignations were current but the unexpected resignation of Boutelle—who refused to condone the wrecking of his general inspection divisions—temporarily shelved the plans which already had been laid out to "house-clean" the old C. A. A. organization. As this issue went to press, Hinckley had back-tracked and had submitted the plan for study, although it was ready to put into effect on July 1.

Meanwhile the remains of the Civil Aeronautics Authority were in a chaotic state. Practically no work was being done in any unit. Disorganization reigned. The five-man Civil Aeronautics Board, assigned to economic regulation and investigation of accidents, attempted to pull itself out of the wreckage and get started on a new track, but it was not at all certain that the independence which the Board was promised over personnel and budget would be borne out in fact.

Other developments were:

Two able secretaries, one in Government service since 1919, were summarily "fired" by Hinckley's secretary without notice and without time to finish letters they were typing.

Every raise given on merit to employees of the Air Safety Board since 1938 was summarily rescinded.

Over 20 lower-bracket employees of the Air Safety Board were given notices on June 30 that their services were no longer desired as of July 1. (Advance notice is customary in the Government.)

As this issue went to press the Department of Commerce had not yet approved the allocation of funds for the Safety Bureau in the Civil Aeronautics Board, and as a consequence over 50 employees (on July 9) were working without knowing whether they would be paid as of July 15. Not one Air Safety Board employee was on the pay roll as of that date.

The International Division, of which Sam Gates had been Chief, was abolished, with the functions split up between the Board and the Administrator, and Gates was named consultant.

Dan Sayre, director of statistics and information, and John Stuart, Chief of the Information Division, were relieved of their jobs when their posts were abolished. Sayre was given a post in the Safety Bureau.

Two employees of the Air Safety Board were relieved of their jobs June 30 for purposes of economy, but were hired the following Monday by the private flying division of C. A. A. under orders from the White House.

Predictions were openly made that Hinckley would not last long in his present post, and that the chaotic condition of C. A. A. under Commerce would be a political issue in the 1940 campaign.

More than one inspector in the field, uncertain of his job, was making plans to go back to private industry.

BATTLEGROUND IN PRIVATE FLYING

Chief background in the present unsettled situation in C. A. A. centers in the Private Flying Division, which has been sponsored personally by Hinckley. For many months Hinckley has refused to cooperate with the former Administrator, Clinton M. Hester, who raised personnel morale to its highest level in aviation history.

Although the Private Flying Division (which controls the civilian-pilot-training program) is technically under the Administrator, Hinckley has consistently refused even to communicate with the Administrator or the general inspection units. By dealing direct with the Private Flying Division an untold amount of friction has developed, with general inspection still doing 90 percent of the work in the pilot-training program.

Those who are well acquainted with the situation blame this short-circuiting of procedures by Hinckley for the present situation, plus the fact that Hinckley has devoted 90 percent of his time to the pilot-training program and military liaison and neglected his other duties.

Most farcical development is the status of the new Administrator, a Col. Donald M. Connolly, former W. P. A. contact man with Hinckley on the west coast, whose powers and responsibilities under the new set-up apparently are not much more rigorous than signing papers and doing as he is told.

Within a few days after he had become consultant to C. A. A.—pending his Senate confirmation as Administrator—Colonel Connolly had gotten himself in one tight squeeze after another by starting to do things one way and finding that the job already had been done—in another way. Insiders predict his stay as Administrator will not last long.

PRESERVATION OF THE AMERICAN SYSTEM OF LIFE AND GOVERNMENT—PETITION

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I present to the Senate petitions bearing 1,000,000 signatures. Subsequent kindred petitions are shortly promised to the extent of 5,000,000 signatures. They represent what is probably the most powerful single exhibit in the whole history of the exercise of the citizens' constitutional right of petition. Their inspiration and their purpose is the common anxiety of the American people to preserve the American system of life and government, and, above all else, "to keep America out of foreign wars."

The significance of such an overwhelming demonstration cannot be ignored, because no such dramatic and eloquent mobilization of signatures would be possible except as their objective is completely responsive to the hearts and hopes of our dominant American thought. Representative government, if it be representative, cannot fail, dare not fail, to take solemn and sympathetic notice of such a Nation-wide disclosure. Political parties will turn away from it at their peril.

The petitions were circulated and are presented in the name of the Committee of One Million under the inspiring chairmanship of Mr. Gerald L. K. Smith, with headquarters at Detroit, Mich. The Committee of One Million thus justifies its fabulous name by the count of individual signatures upon these epochal petitions. It is the voice of America.

The text of these petitions takes two forms, different in text but similar in purport. One form is embraced within the limits of one single, vivid, thrilling sentence:

As believers in God and country, and the American system of life and government, we the undersigned petition the Congress of the United States to outlaw communism, nazi-ism, fascism, and all other forms of un-American activity within our borders, and to keep America out of foreign wars.

The other form, signed particularly by the mothers of America, is equally challenging. It reads as follows:

We, the undersigned, join with the mothers in America in petitioning the Congress of the United States to exert every effort possible, and within reason, necessary to keep America out of all foreign wars.

We favor a national defense second to none; we are willing to make any sacrifice necessary in money and men to defend America, but we, the undersigned, are opposed to giving our money and our men to settle the political quarrels of foreign nations.

Mr. President, the complete file of 1,000,000 signatures of these vigilant country lovers is in the Capitol, but the physical task of here presenting all of them is a needless burden. Instead I present, as a token of the whole, a few typical originals, and ask that they lie upon the table, and I add an affidavit certifying to the grand total, which I ask to have printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the affidavit was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.:

Attention: The Honorable ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, United States Senator from Michigan.

We, the undersigned secretaries, aides, assistants, etc., in the national headquarters of the Committee of One Million, have to do with the receiving, reading, and filing of petitions which have been circulated in recent months by the Committee of One Million.

We have seen the petitions which are being sent to United States Senator ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG petitioning the Congress to keep America out of foreign wars and having to do with other patriotic ideals. By our signatures we certify that these petitions are typical of those which bear the names of about 1,000,000 citizens from 46 States in the United States.

Furthermore, we have read the letter addressed to Senator VANDENBERG by Gerald L. K. Smith, national chairman of the Committee of One Million, setting forth certain facts having to do with petitions that have been secured calling on Congress to keep America out of foreign wars, and we certify by our signatures that the facts set forth by Mr. Smith are substantially correct.

This, the 30th day of June 1940.

PHYLLIS CHANDLER,
Personal Secretary to Mr. Smith.
BERNARD DOMAN,
Office Manager.
ANNE GRUNER,
Secretary in Charge of Reading of Mail.
E. M. SMITH,
Office Assistant.

STATE OF MICHIGAN,
County of Wayne:

Before me, a notary public in and for Wayne County, Mich., came Phyllis Chandler, Bernard Doman, Anne Gruner, and E. M. Smith, all of Detroit, Mich., and in my presence placed their signatures to the within certification this 24th day of June 1940.

KATHRYN L. TICE,
Notary Public, Wayne County, Mich.

My commission expires January 18, 1944.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in addition I ask permission to print a covering letter to me from chairman Smith of the Committee of One Million, transmitting to me this remarkable and utterly significant exhibit.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GERALD L. K. SMITH,
NATIONAL CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE OF ONE MILLION,
Detroit, Mich., July 22, 1940.

UNITED STATES SENATOR ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR VANDENBERG: As chairman of the Committee of One Million, I take this opportunity to congratulate you upon your courageous utterances on the floor of the United States Senate, having to do with the attempts being made to get America into a foreign war.

The Committee of One Million represents the cooperative leadership of more than 140 patriotic and civic groups in the United States. The principles of the committee are as follows:

1. To rebuild the spirit of America.
2. To wipe out to the last vestige communism and fascism in all its forms.
3. To redefine the American national character.
4. To instill a new spirit in American youth, dedicated intellectually and physically to the maintenance of American institutions.
5. To issue a call to farmers and laborers to resist what is now known to be an international plot to make them part of a world revolution.
6. To rededicate the citizenry of America to the family altar and to the spirit of the church.
7. To secure the maintenance of a well-defined standard of American living.

On the 23d of January 1940, when Congressman MARTIN DIES asked for a continuation of his committee for the investigation of un-American activities, we placed before the lower House of Congress nearly 500,000 names signed to petitions in support of his committee from 27 States, as per the attached photostatic copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Some months ago, our committee began to recognize that a conspiracy was being hatched in America, and elsewhere, to involve the United States in a foreign war in order to protect the politicial and financial interests of certain individuals who seem to be inclined to put the welfare of our Nation second to their own selfish interests. In fact, we became convinced that these enigmatic forces were willing to sacrifice the blood of our American sons and the fortunes of our American citizenry in order to save their own personal interests abroad.

Our national committee therefore recognized this circumstance as an emergency. We therefore began to circulate thousands upon thousands of special petitions to Congress, calling on our elected Representatives to keep America out of foreign wars. We set as our goal the securing of 5,000,000 names. The names signed to the petitions of our committee have now reached and passed the 1,000,000 mark. These petitions are coming to us from practically every State in the United States. The new petition will read as follows:

"MOTHERS' PETITION TO CONGRESS FOR NO FOREIGN WARS

"We the undersigned join with the mothers in America in petitioning the Congress of the United States to exert every effort possible, and within reason, necessary to keep America out of all foreign wars.

"We favor a national defense second to none; we are willing to make any sacrifice necessary in money and men to defend America, but we the undersigned are opposed to giving our money and our men to settle the political quarrels of foreign nations.

"Remove all Nazi-Communists from Government pay rolls.

"Outlaw communism.

"Cooperate with the Dies committee."

I am attaching herewith certifications and memos signed by members of our staff to the effect that these names are on file in our national headquarters at Detroit. We believe that our goal of 5,000,000 names will be reached by October 1. I am forwarding you under separate cover 100 token petitions in order that you may adequately grasp and understand the tremendous response that we are having to this appeal. These petitions have been circulated by people representing every creed and political faith and economic strata. You will observe that among these petitions are 9 petitions sent in by the Sisters of the Good Shepherd at Cleveland, Ohio. Others have been circulated by labor leaders, manufacturers, Catholic priests, Protestant preachers, Legionnaires, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Negroes, millionaires, and workers on relief. We believe that these petitions represent the real voice of the people.

Warmongers and propagandists have so surrounded some of our legislative Representatives that they have failed to recognize the true will of the people.

The crusade of the Committee of One Million, committed to the above-stated principles, operates by the use of both the radio and the pamphlet. I am on the radio every week and reach a population of approximately 25,000,000 American citizens. As an illustration of the response, signed to these petitions is the name of one out of every six voters in the State of Michigan. Whenever I say over the radio that we must keep America out of foreign wars, not more than 1 person out of 40 who writes to me is disagreed with what I say concerning this matter.

I made a bitter attack, recently, upon the position taken by Mr. Roosevelt at Charlottesville. Although my mail numbers thousands of letters I have not received a total of five unfavorable letters as a result of that statement by me over the radio. I should be pleased if you would insert this letter as a part of the permanent record of our United States Senate in recognizing the sentiment of more than 1,000,000 people expressed in writing.

You will be interested to know that our mail is so heavy at times, because of the position that we have taken on the principles for which our committee stands, that not infrequently we require from 30 to 40 people to handle requests for literature and correspondence.

Congressmen and Senators who are overlooking the sentiment represented by these petitions, and movements such as the Committee of One Million, are due for a rude awakening as America reacts against the warmongering conspiracies, the subversive propagandists now functioning in the United States.

In closing, I again congratulate you on your courageous and statesmanlike utterances in this, the most crucial hour of our Nation's history.

Sincerely yours,

GERALD L. K. SMITH.

P. S.—Let it be emphasized that our committee is nonpartisan, nonsectarian, and nonracial.

Recently we held our midwestern rally in the city of Detroit. Twenty-three thousand people attended.

CONSCRIPTION AND COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, on the highly controversial subject of conscription and compulsory military training, I wish to present three typical letters which present phases of the problem which ought to have earnest consideration. No one is denying that if expanded defense personnel cannot be acquired by our traditional, voluntary, peace-time enlistments at the essential tempo, then we must prceeed to the compulsory alternative. But I find a widespread question—which I emphatically share myself—whether the traditional, peacetime, voluntary methods of our democracy are failing; and, secondly, whether, in such an event, adequate effort has been made to encourage this method. Several thoroughly constructive suggestions are made along this latter line in these letters, particularly the suggestion that there be offered voluntary opportunity for 1 year enlistments in the Regular Establishment, instead of 3 years.

The estimable Washington Star says my position is "untenable"—that is its word—because I have been asking the Army whether it believes it can get needed personnel by voluntary enlistment because, says the enthusiastic Star, the Army needs much more than its presently authorized increase. But if the Army can satisfactorily get its presently needed increase by traditional, peacetime American methods, this ought not to foreclose the possibility that it can get still more if and when it asks. On the contrary that would be the logical sequence. I hope we have not already reached that stage in these militarizing proceedings where it already has become "untenable"—the word applied to me—even to ask questions, which is all that I am doing, and which I shall continue to do.

After all, the collapse of a great 150-year-old American tradition intimately related to individual liberty—and that is what happens under peacetime conscription—ought to be entitled to at least a little good-faith exploration. I can assure the Star that I shall support whatever program is needed; but I shall continue to ask whether it is needed.

I should like to say, in passing, that I decline to forget that 563,000 volunteers enlisted during the first 5 months of the World War, and 1,300,000 volunteers were recruited up until August 1918, when volunteer recruiting was stopped. Given frank and convincing proof of the existence of a real emergency, I have no doubt this record would be duplicated on a voluntary basis in 1940—and it certainly represents much greater manpower than the most hysterical imagination would conjure as necessary in the presence of whatever emergency exists today. Conscription is no substitute for these frank and convincing proofs.

I repeat, that I have risen to present three letters from citizens in Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Illinois bearing constructively upon this program and this challenge. I ask that these three letters be printed in the RECORD at this point, and that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affaiars.

There being no objection, the letters were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD at this point, as follows:

MEDIA, PA., July 22, 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR VANDENBERG: The newspapers report that you are opposing compulsory military training partly on the ground that voluntary recruiting has not been given an adequate trial.

That your position is unquestionably sound is apparent from even a casual observation of the Army's recent "drive" for recruits. A poster or two outside an obscurely located recruiting office and a sign or poster outside a post office can hardly be said to embody the elements of a "drive." One could wish that the administration would put as much publicity and promotional effort behind an Army recruiting drive as it has behind its favored administrative and legislative projects. Prominent in the printed material used by the Army recruiting service is a tabulation of the formidable sums required by an enlisted man who may want to "buy himself out" of the service before the end of his 3-year enlistment.

If compulsory military training contemplates a training period of 8 months to a year, as the newspapers report, is there any real reason why voluntary enlistments should not be accepted for a similar term? There has certainly been no difficulty in obtaining voluntary C. C. C. enrollments. If Army enlistments offered comparable pay, service conditions, and term of enlistment, it is reasonable to expect that Army service might prove as attractive to young men as C. C. C. service. It is difficult to escape the conclusion that Army enlistment has purposely been made forbidding, formidable, and unattractive in order to furnish a factual basis for the militarists' claim that voluntary enlistment is a failure. Obviously, it will always be a failure as long as those in control of it make it so.

If the militarists prevail and compulsory military training is forced on the country, at least let's avoid the politics-ridden local draft board. In the World War the selection of local draft boards was in the hands of local political organizations. The natural result was that men with the right political connections were given exemption or deferred classification regardless of the facts of the case. If we are to be saddled with draft boards, let's have them composed of Army officers or civil-service clerks who come from some other locality. Keep the political machines out of the conscription set-up. Better still, let's have no conscription at all.

The most suspicious element in the whole situation is the obvious effort to rush conscription through Congress while the public mind is being terrified by the impact of war propaganda and manufactured war hysteria. It is unthinkable that in a calmer frame of mind the people would consider even for a moment the measure of regimentation now proposed under the guise of "selective" military training. We know all about that "fair" and "democratic" kind of "selective" service from the last war.

Incidentally, I hope you and other members of the Senate will heed your personal knowledge of public sentiment rather than the much-touted "polls." It's no great trick to conduct a supposedly impartial poll for the purpose of assembling statistical support for a predetermined conclusion.

Sincerely,

CHAS. R. ROSENBERG, Jr.

ROANOKE, VA., July 23, 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR VANDENBERG: I am a Jeffersonian Democrat, and shall not vote in the coming national election, however, I have followed your criticism of a proposed compulsory military bill, hence this letter.

It is believed that if a bill were passed permitting unmarried men between the ages of 21 and 30 to enlist, for, say, 1 year, at the standard regular Army wage and benefits, that 1,000,000 would crash the recruiting gates to get in. Three years is too long for a young man to tie himself down to an unprofitable job, but 1 year is wholly ample for training purposes, furthermore, it is human nature to rebel against compulsory enrollment in anything. Again, I am opposed to calling out the National Guard, in peacetime, for it will unnecessarily disrupt each individual's planned routine.

My ancestors fought in the Indian, Revolutionary, and Civil Wars and I served in the Spanish-American War and Philippine Insurrection as a private, corporal, sergeant, regimental commissary sergeant, and second lieutenant, and having five sons—four above the age of 17, and all unmarried and physically fit, I feel that I am more or less qualified to speak.

My eldest son is in his twenty-fifth year and would welcome the opportunity to enlist for 1 year but doesn't want to enlist for 3 years or like the odor of being drafted. My second son is a prelaw student at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute and has had military training there for 2 years but is a member of a National Guard company and will be arbitrarily taken away from his studies for 1 year; and the third son, 18 years of age, enlisted in the Navy and after 6 months, says that 6 years is too long and that he could absorb the necessary naval discipline and get excellent training in 1 year. So here are concrete examples of how long-term enlistments, compulsory military training, and calling out the National Guard will work to the disadvantage of the whole youth set-up.

My paternal ancestor volunteered in the Cherokee and Revolutionary War, my father had seven brothers to volunteer in the Civil War—five being killed and two seriously wounded, and I volunteered in the Spanish-American War and served in both Cuba and the Philippines, and I would naturally prefer to see my sons have the opportunity of volunteering instead of having some New Deal inspired board commanding them to do thus and so.

Cordially yours,

W. O. TRENOR.

MARSHALL, ILL., July 22, 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR VANDENBERG: I am writing to enter a protest against the Government placing military conscription in this country during peacetime.

Three hundred and seventy delegates of the North Central Jurisdiction of the Methodist Church, composing the States of Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, meeting in Chicago on June 26, 1940, adopted the following statement without opposition, to wit:

"We are unalterably opposed to universal compulsory military service while the United States is at peace. Numbers of us are the sons or daughters of men who came to this country in order to escape conscription and all that it entailed. We are convinced that the adoption of universal compulsory military training in time of peace would as certainly curse this Nation as it has cursed every other which has fostered it, that it would become the master and not the servant of us all, dictating to business and to labor, to the school, and to the church. The United States, under the yoke of peacetime conscription, would cease to be the nation of our fathers and the hope of our sons."

In my opinion, this is a good statement of the sentiment of the people in this country, and I hope you will oppose conscription during peacetime.

Very truly yours,

H. R. SNAVELY.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In conclusion, I wish to call attention to an article published in the August number of Harper's magazine, which is just out, written by Mr. Hanson W. Baldwin, who since 1929 has been a member of the staff of the New York Times specializing in Army and Navy problems. I think this article ought to be required reading for every Member of the Congress who must confront the necessity of voting upon a conscription bill, and I wish it might be required reading for the entire country. I shall not ask that the whole article be printed in the RECORD, but I do ask in conclusion that that portion of the article which I have marked, relating to Army enlistments, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Army is this Nation's and this hemisphere's third line of defense. It is an important element of that defense (we should not make the mistake of thinking that wars can be won by sea power and air power alone), and some of its functions are particularly vital. In the past we have been committed to the principle of a small citizens' army rather than the maintenance of a huge standing army which can be utilized effectively not in this hemisphere but only on European or Asiatic battlefields, where the borders of hostile nations crowd across the map and mass is still hurled against mass. The mass armies of Europe or Asia cannot easily be transported to this hemisphere—can never be so transported provided we retain control of the seas and maintain a proper air defense. A small army could be transported, might elude our fleet or take advantage of its presence in another ocean to establish some beach head in a remote area. But probably the maximum force that could be so transported—the maximum initial force that could be transported even if control of the sea were wrested from us—would not be much larger than 50,000 men. The transportation of such a force would require 375,000 tons of shipping, perhaps 40 ships, about the largest force that could conveniently be convoyed in a single operation. To supply such a force might require from 650,000 tons of shipping to 2,000,000 tons monthly; in other words, perhaps half of the tonnage of the German merchant marine would have to be devoted solely to the job of supplying 50,000 soldiers. If this force were to be doubled, the shipping tonnage necessary would be doubled; to supply an army of 1,000,000 men in this hemisphere would require at the very least 13,000,000 tons of shipping. Economically and commercially the problem seems impossible; not even Britain, or a combination of Britain and Germany, has sufficient shipping to divert such an enormous amount of it from their ordinary and vital trade routes to military purposes.

We do not, therefore, have to fear the employment of mass armies in this hemisphere; the most we have to guard against is the possible transportation of a small expeditionary force.

There are now pending various proposals for the increase in size of our Army—some of them involving relatively small but necessary numerical increases, others a basic change in the whole fundamental structure of our defense forces, a basic change indeed in the concept of our democracy. In the latter category falls the suggestion, now vigorously pressed, for conscription. Conscription in time of war can be justified. But at a time like the present it cannot be justified on a basis of hemisphere defense, for no such mass of men as conscription would provide can effectively be used in this hemisphere—with one possible exception: If we were preparing for a death struggle with a Japanized Asia and with a completely Germanized Europe in which all the navies and merchant marine and shipbuilding facilities of the Continent were in German hands—a possibility which we have previously discussed and considered to be most unlikely.

Events do not warrant the painting of the international picture in such black overtones as this. But whether or not conscription is genuinely needed, it should never be endorsed except after careful consideration and with an understanding of the basic change in our lives and our customs that it will entail. Invocation of a compulsory-service act has many arguments in its favor, but it should be clearly understood that its adoption would create a profound, lasting, and inescapable change in the economic, social, and political life of our country and might well retard the growth of our civilization. A measure of such consequence if enacted in time of peace may become a permanent part of our institutions; it should not, therefore, be considered by Congress in this era of hysteria, but, if intended as a permanent measure, only in a time of calm calculation. On the other hand, if conscription is needed merely as a temporary emergency measure to last for the duration of the emergency, then the emergency ought to be defined; if the international picture is black enough to warrant conscription, then the President should declare a state of national emergency or Congress should declare a state of war.

And if the Army can fill its minimum needs in men without conscription there are still some valid arguments for it—but the most important, the need for manpower, falls by the wayside. And we have not yet even had a chance to try to fill our requirements by voluntary recruiting.

What are those requirements? The functions and responsibilities of our land forces are several. First, our Regular Army must provide garrisons and defenses for Army, Navy, and air bases now established, or to be established. This may require eventually 125,000 to 150,000 men, with the most heavily guarded points the Panama Canal, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and several points in the Alaskan-Aleutian area. Second, the Regular Army must provide the nucleus or cadre for coast defense and antiaircraft troops to make our continental base within the United States secure; it must have 8 to 15 men per plane to operate its air force; it must provide officers and instructors to train the National Guard and to form the skeletal structure upon which a large mass Army may be built up in case of necessity after M day. And, under our broadened responsibilities of hemisphere defense, it has another function of recent development. It must provide a field force, highly trained, fully equipped, instantly ready for transportation as an expeditionary force anywhere within the Western Hemisphere—to quell, with the help of the Navy and air force, alien-inspired revolutions, to seize an advanced base, to repel an attack or hold an area, until larger forces are transported, if necessary, to assist it. Such a force certainly need be no larger than 150,000 men—perhaps half that number—about the number with which Germany, only 100 miles away, seized Norway. Adding to this the numbers required for the Army's other functions, the Regular Army, even to fulfill its broadened responsibilities, need be no larger than 400,000 men, if that large. Our present enlisted strength is about 228,000; authorized strength is 280,000; a further increase is indicated, but it should not be hard to fill the necessary quota by voluntary recruiting.

The National Guard should be reorganized and its duties redefined. Those duties should fall into two distinct categories. First, the guard should furnish the major portion of the forces which would provide coast and antiaircraft defense for this country. Home guard units—some of them composed of older men—ought to be created to provide such protection for their own localities. And the other part of the guard, consisting of younger men selected for their physical fitness, should be organized and trained in peacetime to provide a field force of perhaps 9 to 12 divisions to replace the Regular Army field force if that force should be sent out of the country, to supplement it, if required, for continental defense. The authorized strength of the guard today is about 235,000 men. No increase is contemplated under the President's present plans; it should, however, have an increment of strength, primarily to furnish very considerably expanded forces of antiaircraft and home-defense purposes.

This reorganized and strengthened Army needs above all to be a balanced Army, with the proper number of antiaircraft units, the proper number of mechanized divisions, etc. Despite the graphic lessons of the war there is as yet no indication that our future plans have been altered to fit those lessons; there is as yet no evidence that the importance of the gasoline engine in war has been fully realized.

DRAFTING OF CAPITAL IN TIME OF WAR

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, there appeared in this morning's New York Times a very good editorial under the heading of "To defend America." The editorial is in support of a draft law to draft men. I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TO DEFEND AMERICA

We congratulate the Senate Military Affairs Committee on its sound judgment and farsighted patriotism in approving the essential principles of the Burke-Wadsworth bill. The case for the establishment of a system of selective compulsory military training at this time and in this crisis is overwhelming. Every development in a war which can readily leap from Europe to this hemisphere clearly shows the critical importance, for national defense, not only of modern mechanized equipment but of a personnel trained to operate such equipment. Adequate personnel cannot be provided by voluntary enlistment. Experience proves that to the hilt. The only possible alternative for a free democracy is a democratic system of training and service in which every male American of proper age shares equally the responsibility of defending the only way of life which he believes to be worth living.

It is particularly gratifying that the Senate committee has left intact the proposal for a general registration of all men between the ages of 18 and 64, even though only selected groups of those between the ages of 21 and 45 will be called immediately for training. The advantages of a general registration are manifest. Not only will it serve notice on other interested nations that we are taking the full measure of our man power, if the proper questions are asked and the resulting answers are promptly organized, we shall have invaluable information here about the numbers and the ages and the location of specially trained men—skilled mechanics, technicians, etc.—whose services will be needed at special points in the defense program. It was one of Britain's major mistakes that a similar census of skilled labor in that country was postponed until long after the emergency arose. We must not make the same mistake. The plan for a general registration is an integral part of the Burke-Wadsworth bill. Its importance cannot be too strongly stressed.

The attitude of the committee is so favorable, and the demand of the country for adequate defense is so unmistakable that there is every reason to believe that the bill will be taken up next week, considered fairly, and promptly passed. We have here a further illustration of the great gain that was achieved when public opinion prevailed over the President's wish to have Congress adjourn before the conventions. Had that course been followed, the taking of this necessary step would have been delayed for many months.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, on the same page there is a lengthy article under the heading of "In the Nation—Problems of contracts for defense-work program," by Mr. Arthur Krock. In this article he discusses the difficulty of our defense program so far as contracts are concerned. I have a feeling that some of the captains of industry are getting all set for a "killing" in profits out of our defense program. I have heard—and it is only hearsay so far—that the Defense Committee is planning to let contracts for the construction of airplane factories, and that the Government is to lend money, 100 percent, for the construction of the plant, and then to lend money for the operation of the plant, and to sign a contract whereby this money is to be paid back out of the profits of the business, and leave the contractor, a private contractor, owning the factory afterward.

Mr. President, I do not like it. I realize that we are in an emergency, but I think that is all the more reason why it is unpatriotic for any private concern to undertake to take advantage of the situation in order to make a "killing" in profits.

Mr. President, we are considering in the Military Affairs Committee a bill to draft men, a bill for compulsory military training. We learned in the World War that there is only one fair, systematic, and democratic method of raising an army of men, and that is by a selective draft method. By the same token I think we should have learned from the World War that in case of war we need men, money, and materials. Yet there is no plan on foot for a systematic method for raising money in a manner equally mandatory with that used to call men to the colors. Therefore, Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a bill which I wish to introduce at this time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. The bill is very short.

Mr. WHEELER. I merely wish to ask a question.

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The other day I happened to run across a quotation from Daniel Webster, a great statesman of his time. Webster was talking about conscription generally. He was not talking about it in peacetime or wartime, but in general. He stated that the Government had a much greater right to conscript profits than to conscript lives. If we are in such an emergency that it is necessary to conscript the lives of the young men of the country, then I think we ought to go all the way and conscript profits. Those who have property and money are anxious to have us conscript the lives of the boys; but, of course, we must not touch their dollars. If we are to conscript youth, let us conscript property as well.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Allow me to say to the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Oklahoma that if they will only wait a short time, the Finance Committee will do a little drafting of peace-time profits through an excess-profits tax, and of war profits through another bill. We have already had a preliminary meeting, and next Monday the committee will go to work to draft excess profits. The object of the excess-profits tax is to draft excess profits caused by a state of war. I hope the Senators will have their desire gratified. I strongly favor such a program, and we propose to carry it out. However, Senators will receive many letters from those who write to them about preparedness and who advocate the greatest army in the world, but who say, "We do not think you ought to levy any taxes to do it." If we get into the war, we will win it if we can; but something besides the will to win is required to raise armies and maintain navies. The people of the United States might as well make up their minds that we shall have to tax them, tax them, and tax them, to carry out the program.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I thank both Senators for their contributions. It is an encouraging thing to hear from a member of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Texas, that the committee is preparing an excess-profits-tax bill. The Senator made a fine and noble fight for a profits tax when the last revenue bill was before us, and his amendment was agreed to by this body. However, even an excess-profits tax cannot reach any of the profits which result from a system of financing war by means of tax-exempt bonds purchased on a voluntary basis. That is the problem with which my bill deals, and I ask that the bill be read at this time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill (S. 4213) to prevent profiteering and to make the financial resources of the Nation available to the Government for purposes of national defense on the same mandatory basis as manpower, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President shall set up a plan for drafting the use of money according to each individual's ability to lend. Such a plan shall not permit profits, high interest rates, or tax exemptions.

SEC. 2. The President is hereby authorized to provide for such boards and agencies and to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. The same penalties shall apply for noncompliance to the draft of money as apply for noncompliance to the draft of men.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, there seems to be a misunderstanding among a number of us, some believing that a tax bill is a method of financing war. It is true that it helps to pay the bill. It is one way in which we can raise money. However, in the World War we had to borrow. We had to beg for money to finance the war. Even now, as we are facing a defense program while we are at peace, it will be necessary for the Treasury of the United States to sell bonds in order to finance the defense program.

The point I am making is that if in peacetime the emergency is such as to require us to draft men, by the same token the emergency is enough to cause us to draft money instead of borrowing it on a voluntary basis, paying interest on it, and guaranteeing tax exemption, which would allow more and more of the wealth of the United States to get into the storm cellar of tax exemption, where it could not be reached by the excess-profits tax advocated by the Senator from Texas, or by any excess war-profits tax, income tax, or any other kind of tax. We are confronted with the problem of raising money to finance the defense program. That problem is now at our doorstep. Are we to raise money by the voluntary method, while we are conscripting men by a compulsory method? The purpose of my bill is to meet that problem. The two questions involved are: First, shall people buy war bonds on a voluntary or mandatory basis? and, second, shall such transactions result in profit to the individual?

I introduced and have had pending on the calendar of the Senate for 2 years a bill which works out in detail the machinery for carrying out the object to which I have referred, but some object to the details. Therefore the present bill is introduced. There are those who, so long as a thing is in general language, will give their support to it. They will say, "I am for the general principle, but I object to this particular bill." So far as I can learn, my bill is the only effort which has been made in the history of the United States to translate the proposition of drafting capital into statutory language. There is not much choice as between this bill and some other bill which might have the same objective.

I presume that at some time or other every Member of this body has committed himself to the ex-service men's proposal that in time of war we should have a universal draft which would draft men, money, and materials, the three things necessary to win a war. I presume that at some time or other every Member of this body has subscribed to that general principle. I should like to know to what extent we intend to carry out such a pledge, if we have made it.

You say, "I favor the general proposition." Here is a bill that lays down nothing but the naked principle of drafting money as well as men, and calling for money to finance this program in the same mandatory manner in which we call for men.

In the last war it cost this Government $45,878,000 simply to beg for the money necessary to finance the war. We called men to the colors by mandate, and yet we fed those men by popular subscription. We got disabled soldiers, crippled soldiers, and sent them all over the country showing themselves and their broken bodies in order to soften people's hearts enough to get them to buy enough bonds to keep feeding the rest of the soldiers who were in the trenches. To me, that sort of thing is an outrage.

A country as rich as the United States is going to say to the boys of America in a few days, "We command you to report for training." Are we going to raise the money to pay these contracts by going to Wall Street and making the bonds so attractive by putting the interest so high, as we did in the World War, that they are going to be sold by the profit incentive method, and put that money in a storm cellar where no tax bill can reach it? I want to know if we are going to do that again, if we are going to allow a crop of millionaires to come out of this emergency.

Who made the most profits out of the World War? It has been shown that more money was made in the field of finance than was made in the field of manufacture. We can recover much of the profits made in the field of commerce and industry by taxes of different kinds, but we cannot touch the profits made in the field of finance.

Up to 1934 we had paid in interest alone on the war bonds $12,000,000,000. Many of the boys who participated in the war quit jobs paying $7 to $10 a day, and took a job in the Army at a dollar a day and a chance to die.

You say we cannot pay for patriotism. That is true; but there is no use in penalizing patriotism. It cost the average boy who quit a job at day-labor wages of $7 a day, and served the average period of time of 16½ months, $2,500 in order to be patriotic.

Then he came home and went to work paying taxes to pay the profits of the millionaires who had made their millions out of financing the war which he had to fight. I want a bill enacted that will prevent men from profiteering out of a war that calls for such sacrifice on the part of the soldiers.

In the World War we sold bonds. Many of the soldiers had to buy those bonds under pressure. Many employees, stenographers, and clerks had to buy those bonds. As soon as they paid for them they needed money, and they discounted the bonds and sold them, some of them as low as 80 cents on the dollar. The bonds wound up in the hands of the big bankers, who made that profit out of the loss of the fellow who was least able to bear it. Not only that; little Lizzie Smith, a stenographer, bought a bond because she was patriotic or because her employer put pressure on her. She was not able to pay cash for it. The banker, perhaps in all good faith, said to her, "I will lend you the money and take the bond as security." In some cases the banker bought the bond and arranged to have her make installment payments. Her plans were changed; she made a few payments and did not finish paying for the bond, and she lost what she had paid, but somebody else gained by that loss.

Not only that; war causes inflation. The voluntary system of financing war through the sale of bonds at the peak of the inflation means that we borrow 50-cent dollars, and when we pay back there is deflation, and we pay back 150-cent dollars. There is a tremendous unearned increment which is not only allowed but guaranteed under our old system of financing war through the voluntary sale of bonds.

Not only that; ordinarily in peacetimes Government bonds bear 2 percent interest or less, but during the World War we paid as high as 4¾ percent interest. In other words, Members of this body, unless we change our plan of financing we are simply issuing this invitation to the big boys: "Come on in, boys, and profiteer. We will guarantee you double interest rates. We will guarantee you exemption from taxation. Come on in and profiteer." No wonder there was a crop of 22,000 millionaires made out of a war that cost our buddies so much in blood and money and in personal sacrifice.

The argument was made during the World War while we were selling the bonds, "Why, this is a good thing. It forces savings upon the little fellow." Did it? The fellow who needed the savings was not able to keep the bond. He discounted and sold it; and so, when it was paid off, did he get the money? No; he had already taken his loss on the bond, and it wound up in the hands of a big fellow, and the big purchaser is the one who benefited by it.

I want a plan of financing that will say to the people, "Your credit is needed in the ratio and in accordance with your ability to lend on a fair basis, just as fair as the income tax, according to ability to pay." Just as we tax according to ability to pay, I believe we should borrow according to ability to lend. It would be just as ridiculous to say that a tax should be voluntary as it is to say that we should raise money for financing war, or preparation for war, or national defense, on a voluntary basis.

Would you leave to a man whether or not he should pay his taxes? Would you leave to a man how much taxes he should pay? Then why, when we go out to raise money, should we leave to the purchaser of a bond how much he will buy? Why should we leave it to his patriotism? Why should we leave it to the pressure of a high-pressure committee? Why should we leave it to his desire for profits on high-interest-bearing bonds? None of them are fair criteria for determining the amount of credit that each individual should lend to his Government in case of a national crisis. Why not lay it down as a matter of principle that we say that the Government should borrow in proportion to men's ability to lend, just as we take soldiers according to their availability for service?

You say to me, It is difficult to work out such a plan. Are you saying that it is more difficult to work out something that can be figured out by mathematical, precise methods, such as dollars and cents, than it is to determine the human equation as to which boy can better go in the first draft, and which one can better go in the second and the third and the fourth and the fifth drafts?

In case there are some who want a little more detail of the plan, I send to the desk another bill which carries out the plan in further detail, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. LEE. If the Senator will allow me just 5 minutes more, I will yield to him.

Mr. HARRISON. My only purpose in seeking to interrupt the Senator is because the Senator asked that the bill go to the Military Affairs Committee. I have not read the bill, but there is a question whether it ought to go to the Finance Committee or the Military Affairs Committee. That is why I am raising the point now.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator for that notice. I wish to say that, of course, there are many bills which come before this body which in all fairness could be assigned to one or two or sometimes three committees. In the Military Affairs Committee right now we are deciding on a bill to draft men. That bill deals with men's services and their pay.

One might just as well argue that that bill should be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor as to argue that this bill should be referred to the Finance Committee. I cannot argue to the Senator that the bill does not deal with finance, but I do say that it does not have anything to do with revenue.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely wish to serve notice on the Senator that if, after studying the bill, it should be our opinion that it ought to be under the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee, that the proper committee to handle this question of finance would be that committee, I should certainly make a motion to have the bill referred back to the Finance Committee.

Mr. LEE. The Senator means, then, I take it, that before the bill would come before this body the Senator would make a motion to have it referred to the Finance Committee.

Mr. HARRISON. If I should be convinced that that is the proper course.

Mr. LEE. The Senator does not object to its going first to the Military Affairs Committee, then?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I just want to serve notice on the Senator now to that effect.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. The bill will go to the Military Affairs Committee for the present.

The bill (S. 4214) to mobilize financial resources by drafting money according to the ability to lend was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, in the plan I have in mind for drafting money I do not have in mind taxes. No government has ever been able to pay for a war as it fought the war. Therefore, it is necessary to borrow. It is necessary either to take money from accumulated savings or to mortgage the future. Therefore it is necessary to borrow. I am referring to the borrowing phase of financing national defense for war.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. While the Senator's bill of course is not before the Senate, I have read it, and if the Senator will permit me, I should like to call his attention to what seems to me to be a valid objection to it. No attempt is made in the bill to set up a law for drafting money. I agree with the Senator on the general proposition he so eloquently discusses, but the bill merely says that the President shall make a law and put it in force.

In the first place, it seems to me that is not fair to the President. It is having him do something which up to this time no one has contended it is not the duty of the Congress to do. We should assume the responsibility, even though, as I concede, it is a difficult one to work out. It is a difficult thing to work out all of the ramifications of such a law.

Mr. LEE. Let me say to the Senator that in Senate bill 1650 a law is worked out in every detail.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us pass that.

Mr. LEE. I stated awhile ago, and I am glad I have an opportunity to repeat, that my reason for introducing the bill I am now discussing, which is merely one stating the bare principle, is that first objection would be found to one detail and then another.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; and objection will be found when the President makes the law.

Mr. LEE. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. From one end of the country to the other will be the cry going up everywhere that we are making a dictator of the President, and every sentence and every paragraph will be criticized and condemned, when the responsibility is really ours.

Mr. LEE. I agree with the Senator's statement.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we should assume the responsibility, if we are to pass any law at all.

Mr. LEE. I am willing to do that; but the Senator realizes what one is up against when he brings in a bill providing for all the details. I desire to get an expression on the principle, because nearly every Member of this body with whom I have talked about this matter has said, at some time or other, "I favor the principle, but this reason or that reason is a valid objection to your bill."

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will admit that the bill he has proposed carries out no detail whatever. It does not even suggest a plan. It is a bare attempt, whether right or wrong, for Congress to jump out from under the responsibility and put it all over to the President, and say, "Here, you pass this law."

Mr. LEE. I assure the Senator that is not the spirit in which it was introduced; and if I had not already 2 years before introduced a bill (S. 1650) worked out in detail, I think perhaps the Senator would be in a fair position to say that that was what I was trying to do. I was introducing the bill I have been discussing, I may say to the Senator, with the hope of focusing attention on the principle, and with the hope that we would work out a bill which would do the very thing I am proposing, and I had hoped to call more attention to that proposition. I wanted to center debate on the fundamental principle of whether or not we should draft capital. Every time I bring up the complete bill which provides the machinery for actually drafting money the argument revolves around some inconsequential about which I am not concerned. Therefore I used this method of centering attention on the fundamental principle.

As to the second bill, the one which I have just introduced, it is worked out in a little more detail, but it does not cover all the details covered in the other one. In other words, I am willing to do anything at all to focus attention upon this important problem at this important time. That was the purpose and the spirit in which I introduced the bill. I grant everything the Senator says, and that is my view, but it was introduced simply for the benefit of those who were objecting to details when I wanted to discuss the principle. I wanted to know if they favored the principle.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator does not think the President would object to our granting him the authority covered by the bill, does he?

Mr. LEE. I have not discussed that with the President.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator know about that? Does the President want to get this authority, and have we not stamina enough, even if he does want it, not to give it to him? It is our responsibility, and we should assume it, and we should have courage to do what is proposed if it is done at all. It is not fair to the President. I do not have any idea that he wants to take this responsibility. The cry has been raised against the President for the last 2 years that he wants to be a dictator. It seems to me this bill comes pretty near to making him a dictator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska, although I did not hear the bill in detail, that Congress cannot give the President the authority; we cannot delegate our legislative authority.

Mr. NORRIS. Then what is the use trying to do that?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not in favor of trying it. I am agreeing with the Senator, but for the benefit of the Senator from Oklahoma, I should like to advise him that we could not give up our legislative power and confer it on the President, even if we desired to do so. We cannot do it.

Mr. LEE. I do not want to, and I am sure the President does not want it, but I must repeat, in the legislative field, the Senator from Nebraska himself has probably led in finding different devices and ways of calling attention to something which he thought was worthy in order to focus attention on it, and to get interest and support for it. That is my only purpose; and my first plan and love, so to speak, is the bill I introduced 3 years ago, which has been on the Senate Calendar for 2 years, and on which there have been hearings, which has been reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs 2 successive years, and is worked out in detail. In effect, it merely amounts to this, that in such an emergency as calls for the drafting of manpower the Government shall make a survey of the financial ability of different people to lend, and, on the basis of that, issue bonds of convenient size, and require each one to buy his share of the bonds as the money is needed. In other words, it merely changes the old method of financing war in three major particulars. The purchase of the bonds shall be mandatory instead of voluntary, and the amount purchased shall be determined by a schedule, which is all worked out to the last degree in the bill, and which is patterned after the income-tax schedule, that each person shall buy in accordance with his ability, instead of as a result of pressure or patriotism; and that, third, there shall be no profits resulting from the bonds.

The most important point of a measure to draft money, or have the mandatory power to mobilize the financial resources of the country, the most important thing, as I see it, is that the Government, by a plan like that, could get money as it was needed. It is true that the voluntary system of enrolling men for service might supply us with the men we need at first, but the trouble is that we get too many at one time and not enough at another. But by the establishment of a systematic method of a selective draft, Uncle Sam says to each boy, "When I need you, I will call you," and takes them in a systematic manner. The same applies to money. During the World War it was argued that we raised all the money we needed by voluntary draft.

Every nation that has ever been in a major war that lasted a long time has come to the point where it could no longer raise money by the voluntary method, and then it turned to inflation, and started printing money, and destroyed the economic fabric within it. The worthless currency of the South and the depreciated greenbacks of the North, during the Civil War, showed what desperate efforts those two governments were making after their system of raising money by the voluntary plan had broken down.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator's plan is devised so as to make people buy the bonds, but it does not go to the question of getting the money to pay the bonds, does it?

Mr. LEE. Yes; it does.

Mr. CONNALLY. Has the Senator included in the bill a tax schedule?

Mr. LEE. No; I did not understand what the Senator meant.

Mr. CONNALLY. For these bonds we make them buy we will have to pay sometime. How are we to pay for them unless we levy taxes?

Mr. LEE. The Senator is correct; he cannot get an argument out of me on that.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not want an argument with the Senator.

Mr. LEE. I agree 100 percent with the Senator's plan and am for it. My bill has one paragraph in it which states—and that is the theory of it—that it is the sense of the Congress that as fast as money is collected through tax bills which is not needed immediately by the Government, it shall be used to pay off the bonds. In other words, collect the money by excess-profits tax on the one hand, and pay off the bonds as we collect taxes on the other.

But in spite of that we still have to borrow.

What happens to a country when it can no longer raise money by a voluntary system? It turns to the printing presses and destroys itself within before it breaks down on the front line.

Two things are essential to win a war—men and money—and if you have one and do not have the other you are still licked. That is why we must have a machinery set-up that can reach the finances of the country, can reach the wealth of the country.

What good would it do us to have an Army of 3,000,000 men if we could not arm those men and feed them and clothe them? The Constitution recognized that when it said:

> Congress shall have power to raise and support armies.

"Raise and support"—two words connected by a conjunction. They are coexistent. Congress has just as much power to equip an army as it has to raise an army, and the power is just as mandatory, and to do one is to do the other.

We have the power. Why not use it? The plan simply means that you can get the money when you need it.

Now, those who want the old system may argue, "Well, we oversubscribed the Liberty bonds." Let us see about that. We oversubscribed the Liberty bonds, that is true, but that statement is very misleading. We can only understand that after we visualize the tremendous flamboyant campaign that was put on in this country in order to sell those bonds. Every successive campaign for the sale of bonds cost just twice as much as the preceding one.

What about the oversubscription of the bonds? After all the high-pressure salesmanship that could be exerted by the committees, the oversubscription of the first bond issue was 52 percent; the oversubscription of the second bond issue was 54 percent; the oversubscription of the third bond issue was 39 percent, and the oversubscription of the fourth bond issue was 16½ percent. The oversubscription of the fifth bond issue was 16⅔ percent. In other words, with all the high pressure and all the ballyhoo that we could raise in America, that greatest campaign of propaganda the world has ever known—the oversubscription dropped from 52 percent to 16⅔ percent.

What were we doing with respect to the interest rate at that same time in order to keep selling the bonds, in order to entice the money out of hiding? On the first bonds the interest rate was 3½ percent. On the second issue of bonds the interest rate was 4 percent. On the third issue of bonds the interest rate was 4¼ percent, and on the last issue of bonds the interest rate was 4¾ percent. And if war had continued there is no telling what we would have had to pay in order to get money.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I simply want to call attention to what might be misleading in what the Senator has said with respect to the rates of interest. As I remember—I may be wrong about it, but I think it is a well-remembered fact that the first issue of bonds drew 3½ percent, and they were tax-free entirely. That tax-free element did not apply to any subsequent issues of bonds. Is that not correct?

Mr. LEE. The Senator is partially correct. There were tax exemptions connected with them, but there were also——

Mr. NORRIS. There were tax exemptions. They were, as I remember, free from the normal tax, but not free from the other tax. The first issue was entirely tax-free, except as to inheritance tax.

I may be wrong, of course, and the Senator from Oklahoma may be right, but I still believe that the Senator is in error about that matter. I think the first issue of 3½-percent bonds was entirely tax-free.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that my recollection coincides with his own. I know that the first 3½-percent bonds were absolutely tax-exempt.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I said.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would not be sure about the estate tax, but I am sure, though, that they were absolutely tax exempt. The curious thing about it was that the subsequent issues, the 4¼'s, the 4½'s, and even the 4¾'s, which were subject only to the surtax, were selling down in the 80's and in the 90's when the 3½'s were above par, because of the tax-exemption feature. I remember that distinctly.

Mr. LEE. The war was financed by tax-exempt bonds. To what degree each issue was exempt from taxation I do not remember. But the fact still remains that the first bonds bore 3½-percent interest, the next issue of bonds bore 4-percent interest, the next issue of bonds bore 4¼-percent interest, and the last issue of bonds bore 4¾-percent interest, and at the same time the costs for selling these bonds was doubled with every successive campaign, and the campaign committees will admit that it became increasingly more difficult to sell their quota of bonds. I would not want to mislead anyone. I pay tribute to those who went out and sold the bonds, and I think men with lesser courage and lesser energy than they would have failed in that job. That is why I think we ought to have a plan, we ought to have the machinery, we ought to have a law that will make it possible for the Government to reach out and get the financial resources of this country for use for national defense just as we are planning a system for the Government to reach out and get the manpower of this country for national defense.

I thank the Senate for listening to me.

THE JUDICIARY

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that as in executive session the nomination of Mr. Steve M. King, to be United States district attorney for the eastern district of Texas, be confirmed.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of this nomination.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

"FIFTH COLUMN" HYSTERIA

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a statement made by Hon. George D. Aiken, Governor of Vermont, on June 8, 1940, warning against "fifth column" hysteria. I think the statement is very appropriate at this time, when there is so much hysteria about the "fifth column."

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOVERNOR AIKEN ON THE "FIFTH COLUMN"

Following is a statement made by Gov. George D. Aiken, of Vermont, warning against "fifth column" hysteria leading to persecution of refugees which was issued June 8, 1940:

"The State of Vermont is famed for the quality of its justice, but a situation exists today that casts reflections on our State. I refer to the several instances of alleged persecutions of refugees from foreign countries now living in Vermont and of others whose names are of foreign extraction or who are of foreign descent.

MAY HARM INNOCENT

"Some rumors have been given such wide publicity as to cause irreparable harm to innocent people, yet investigation has proved that to date not one single charge has been found to have any foundation in fact. The only law that has been broken has been broken by those who bear false witness against their neighbor.

"There are undoubtedly foreign agents in America. There may be one or more in Vermont, but for every one of these there are a thousand loyal citizens of foreign extraction who came to America for the same reasons that our own ancestors came—to seek liberty and the chance to earn an honest living. They are among our most enterprising and loyal citizens. And many are here because they are political exiles from a form of government repugnant to all liberty-loving people.

TO BE DECENT

"I ask all Vermonters to be decent to such people even as you would want people to be decent to you if you were driven from your homeland and forced to live in virtual exile.

"If you feel that any person's activities are such as to warrant investigation, report the matter at once to the F. B. I. at Burlington.

"Don't shout your suspicions from the roof tops lest you do harm to innocent people. And don't be swayed by the sensational charges of publicity seekers who would call attention to their own patriotism by decrying that of others."

PEACETIME CONSCRIPTION

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I appreciate the fact that our honorable colleague who now presides over this body, the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee in the Senate, is extremely anxious to resume consideration in committee of the conscription bill which the committee is now considering. I shall, therefore, consume the time of the Senate for only a very brief period.

I wish to approach and briefly discuss two subjects which were brought to the attention of this body today by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. In reference to conscription, he mentioned the bill which is now before the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate for consideration. In that connection, at this juncture in my remarks, I ask that there be printed an extremely able editorial from today's Washington Daily News entitled, "Selective Service," in support of the compulsory military service bill which we are now discussing.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News, of July 25, 1940]

SELECTIVE SERVICE

The writer of this particular editorial has a family, and is past 31, and, therefore, he would in all likelihood be among those exempted (in peacetime, anyway) from the 1-year compulsory military training called for in the Burke-Wadsworth bill now pending in Congress.

So perhaps he is talking out of turn when he writes in support of such legislation. Even though he did squads right and bayonet practice in 1918, and even though he has a son who will be of military age in a very few years, he feels a certain timidity about urging a policy which would require hundreds of thousands of men other than himself to sacrifice a year of freedom.

But, with those apologies, consider these facts:

1. The American people have made it overwhelmingly clear that they want and demand preparedness. No matter how wide the Atlantic and Pacific, they know that the future is unpredictable.

2. They know that the planes and tanks and ships and guns now being fabricated would be useless without trained and disciplined men to operate them.

3. Some of them recall that in the World War we sent many green troops (and green officers) to France, with sometimes hideous results.

4. They realize that when large numbers of men are needed the volunteer system is irregular and inadequate; it yields too few men, and it does not provide the proper proportions of men with the needed skills and aptitudes.

5. They know that a selective draft, if efficiently conducted, can be accomplished with a minimum of dislocation to industry and society, and they know that it is a fundamentally fair and democratic process.

There are honest critics of conscription—men who say our fears are magnified beyond reason; men who still think in terms of a nation springing to arms overnight in time of emergency; men who think a great armed force would be more apt to draw us into war than to keep us out.

To them we cite the recent case histories of European powers that are no longer powers but only puppets, and the present plight of unprepared England.

Perhaps, as the saying goes, it is later than we think.

Even though the selective draft would put the cream of American manhood into barracks for a year, a year that the draftees might prefer to spend in work and play, can we afford to pass it up and take a chance?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, our military authorities have found it somewhat difficult to secure for service in the armed land forces of the United States men in sufficient numbers to fill the ranks of the Regular Army. They have been able to do so only after generous advertising in the periodicals of the country. In view of the fact that we have authorized and appropriated to date this year approximately $18,000,000,000—not $18,000,000 but $18,000,000,000—for the purpose of providing an adequate and perfect national defense, it would be asinine to make such appropriations for military equipment, arms, and implements of death without providing a sufficient number of men to handle and man the $18,000,000,000 worth of military equipment in the form of artillery, submarines, and battleships. I am of the opinion that at the present time we must have some sort of conscription of American manpower in order to be able to obtain sufficient men to man the $18,000,000,000 worth of equipment for the purpose of protecting the shores of America.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to yield to my distinguished colleague.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me submit a question to the Senator. Let us agree that there must be an expanded defense personnel corresponding to the expanded defense equipment. Let us agree that that is necessary.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of necessity the number must be considerable, in view of the amount of equipment which $18,000,000,000 will purchase.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Now let me proceed with my question. If the essential personnel can be obtained under the traditional American peacetime volunteer system, does not the Senator prefer to obtain it in that way?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Naturally.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well.

Mr. REYNOLDS. But——

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will permit me, I say to the Senator that no adequate effort has been made to obtain it on a volunteer basis. On the contrary, if anything, the volunteer system has been subordinated and submerged. If the young men of the country were given the opportunity to enlist on a 1-year basis instead of a 3-year basis, as proposed in the conscription bill, we should have 1,000,000 men in 3 months. No such invitation is offered on a voluntary basis. No effort is made to meet the situation on a volunteer basis. The whole effort is to rush to conscription. So far as I am concerned, I will not be rushed into conscription in peacetime in America unless it is the last recourse instead of the first.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am thoroughly in accord with the views of the Senator to this extent: If we could secure sufficient manpower on a voluntary basis to handle the defense program provided for by the tremendous authorizations and appropriations, unquestionably it would be much better for our country. However, we must of necessity admit, much as we dislike to do so, that when we bring about conscription in peacetime we are, in a sense, approaching the methods and procedure which have been utilized to advantage by the totalitarian powers.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; and we are destroying 150 years of history in respect to the rights of individual American citizens.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In partial answer to another phase of the Senator's inquiry, I may add that not so long ago I was in the metropolis of New York, at which time I took advantage of the opportunity to visit Governor's Island. There I talked to the commandant and members of his staff. In addition, I have talked with others high in military authority. I have learned that many months were required to secure men in sufficient numbers to fill up the ranks of the Regular Army as presently constituted and provided for. I have been told by those in authority that if we are to build up the ranks of the Regular Army to the extent of 400,000 men—which number we anticipate at the present time—exclusively by the voluntary system, it will be necessary for us to lower the present physical and mental standards and requirements. I say again that I very much hope that we may be able to do so through the volunteer system.

In the consideration of the conscription bill before the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, of which I am a member, we have seen fit to suggest to the Members of this body that all boys between the ages of 18 and 21 who are not contemplated for actual conscription under the bill be provided an opportunity to volunteer their services to their country. Why? Because we know that, if and when the bill is passed, many hundreds of thousands of the youth of our land will have finished high school, or grammar school, in some instances, and they will then be desirous of going into the service for a period of 1 year and placing that service behind them, so that their future will not be interfered with. If they should not volunteer between the ages of 18 and 21, they might be in college when they became subject to conscription. Those administering the law would have the right to exempt them for one reason or another, but many would like to take advantage of the opportunity to render the service contemplated by the bill at a time when such service would not interfere with their future.

Mr. President, these matters are now being discussed preliminarily, even before the Senate Military Affairs Committee has favorably reported a bill and at a time when the Military Affairs Committee of the House are holding hearings; and it has not, therefore, presented a bill to that body of the National Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be delighted to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator has referred to the voluntary provision which has been inserted in the bill. How many applicants does the Senator suppose will be acquired through that voluntary procedure?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have not the slightest idea. I know, however, that I have received at my office quite a number of letters from youngsters who, having been informed of the bill that is under contemplation, have made inquiry as to whether or not they would be able to volunteer their services, rather than wait for the time when they would be conscripted if the bill should be enacted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have the same kind of inquiries, which lead me to believe that the voluntary applications will be tremendous. I am inclined to believe that the Senator from Michigan has put his finger on the very thing—that if we should open this matter to voluntary enlistment instead of conscription under all the other provisions of the bill—the 1-year intensive training, and so forth—we would have many, many times the number of men that would be required.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much for his contribution. I recall with appreciation remarks that he made in the committee in regard to his opinion in reference to volunteers. I would that our Army now would herald to the youth of the Nation the fact that we would accept enlistments in the Regular Army of the United States for a period of 1 year. I unhesitatingly say, regardless of my opinion and interest in the bill now being considered, that I should like to see the ranks of the Regular Army filled up, and to see enough young men of the country volunteer to man all the arms and equipment that will be purchased and set up as a result of these appropriations and authorizations to the extent of approximately $18,000,000,000, because unless it is absolutely necessary, I say to you, Mr. President, and to my colleagues, I do not want in any sense of the word to follow the totalitarian powers that conscript their manpower not only for war, in many instances, but in others for industry.

Mr. President, in addition to that, I heard the able Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] discuss the question of raising money if we should become involved in war; and there was at virtually the same time a discussion of the question of how we will draft men, and when, if we become involved in war.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Personally I am not giving any consideration to the question of raising money if we become involved in war. I am not giving any consideration to the question of how and when we shall draft men, and in what numbers, if we become involved in the war, because, Mr. President, I will never vote to send a single son of an American mother to settle somebody else's wars.

I will never vote to send soldiers from these shores to meddle in the controversies of other people who are killing one another merely for the purpose of ascertaining who shall remain or become supreme.

I am very happy now to yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the inquiry has been made, Why are we raising a million men if we are not going to get into the war?

I desire to say to the Senator that I am thoroughly in accord with what he says—that when we are spending this $14,000,000,000, or whatever the amount is, if we are going to make any use of the mechanized equipment, we, of course, must have men to operate it. I thoroughly agree with what the Senator from Michigan has said, and with what the Senator from Colorado has said——

Mr. REYNOLDS. And with what the Senator from North Carolina has said.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; and with what the Senator from North Carolina has said—that if we put the matter of a year's service upon a voluntary basis, I have not any doubt in the world that we shall then be able to get the necessary men voluntarily; but I deplore the idea that we are going, in peacetime, to conscript the youth of the country and conscript everybody else. I say that a step of that kind in the United States at this time will be taken by a tremendous majority of the people of the country as a step toward totalitarianism. That is what Mr. Hitler did. That is what Mr. Mussolini did. That is what Mr. Stalin did. All of them conscripted the wealth and conscripted the youth of their respective countries.

Referring to the matter of conscripting the youth of the country in time of peace, a moment ago I stated that Daniel Webster said that we have more right to conscript the property of the country—and by "property" he did not mean taxes, he meant capital—than we have to conscript the lives of the youth of the country in time of peace.

I do not believe it is necessary in the United States at the present time to conscript the wealth of the country, and I do not believe it is necessary at this time to conscript the youth of the country. I think it is only stirring up war hysteria in the United States; and I do not think we are in any emergency except the emergency that is caused by unemployment and by bad economic conditions in the United States. The only emergency there is from outside is what is conjured up in the minds of a few persons in the United States who want to see us go to war and send our boys and send planes either to Asia or to Europe. I am heartily in accord with what the Senator says; and I repeat that so far as I am concerned, I will never vote to put this country into a European or an Asiatic war unless we in this country are attacked.

That is the position which was taken by the Democrats in their national convention; and I desire to call attention to that fact.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Let me say here, if I may interrupt for just a moment, that the able Senator from Montana was largely instrumental in bringing about the employment of certain words and phrases that were needed in that platform. I think the mothers of America owe him a vote of thanks for his interest in the matter, and the time and attention he devoted to it in Chicago, when he insisted upon the adoption of a platform that would at least insure the mothers of America some peace by way of bringing them to the belief that their sons would not be forced to serve on foreign soil or shores.

Mr. WHEELER. I was not alone in that. I thank the Senator for the compliment, however.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I know that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the able junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] were the leaders of the forces at Chicago during the convention that insisted, and successfully insisted, upon the platform which was finally adopted.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator for the compliment, but I was not alone in that.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is no compliment at all; it is just a statement of fact.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] was a member of the subcommittee, and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and they were practically unanimous.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Let me interrupt to embody those of my colleagues likewise in that tribute.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to say that I am sure that if it had been suggested or proposed in the subcommittee that the Democratic Party should go on record in favor of peacetime conscription, it would have been thrown out. If it had been made in the full committee, I am sure it would have been thrown out; and if it had not been thrown out there certainly some of us would have taken it to the floor of the convention. I think I know something of the temper of the convention; and I am sure the temper of the convention was that there would not have been any peacetime conscription put across in the Democratic convention.

Those who were around the edges suggesting that a resolution should be introduced with reference to peacetime conscription did not have the temerity to offer such a resolution, either to the subcommittee or to the full committee or to the convention, because they knew it would be thrown out if offered.

There is no necessity of our being stampeded into the idea that we must have peacetime conscription, and hurry such provision through the Committee on Military Affairs, or the House committee, and then through the Senate. The people of the United States are patriotic. The youth of this country are patriotic. There are millions of young people walking the streets in our country today, coming out of the schools and the colleges of the United States, who wish to get some kind of training. They want something to do. Give them a chance to volunteer for a year, and I am sure they will volunteer in sufficient numbers to man all of the mechanized equipment we have. I plead with the Members of the Senate not to put through compulsory conscription for the United States, unless it is desired that the people get the idea that we are going down the road to totalitarianism, the same road that has been followed in the countries across the water. In my judgment, the American people will never stand for it, and the Democrats who vote for it before the coming election, in my opinion, will be driving nails in their coffins.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am very happy to have yielded to the Senator. I always find his arguments very convincing. I wish to repeat that I hope sincerely that we will be able to secure a sufficient number of men to man the $18,000,000,000 worth of equipment, rather than have to resort to compulsory military service in peacetime. That is the question with me. We all must agree that since we have appropriated or authorized approximately $18,000,000,000, and we voted for it, at least a majority in this body voted for it, now that we have authorized these appropriations, it is up to us, and we cannot back down, to provide the men to handle the equipment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Gladly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator constantly reiterates this fabulous figure of $18,000,000,000, and he invites the inference that that accumulates an immediate pressure upon us to parallel that $18,000,000,000 with a personnel of similar magnitude. I want the Senator to say in the same connection that that $18,000,000,000 program will not be completely expended until 1948.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I recognize that. I may say that yesterday I was in the Navy Department conferring with one of the admirals, who told me that the contracts let for present construction were, according to my recollection, ten times greater than during the emergency days of the World War or just prior thereto.

I recognize that these authorizations and expenditures will continue over a period of years, and that the money will not be spent all at once. Certainly we cannot assume to draft and to train men unless we have the proper equipment with which to train them. I am making the point that we have made expenditure of $18,000,000,000, and I wish to admit, insofar as my attitude is concerned, that I feel that we have made these tremendous appropriations, in a sense, whether we realize it or not, because there is more war hysteria and feeling in this country today than there was actually at times and periods prior to our entrance into the World War in April 1917.

Mr. VANDENBERG. When the American people are put on a conscript basis, what is left to separate us from a complete totalitarian war status? Nothing is left except to pull the trigger, and I am not willing to get that close until it is necessary.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In addition to that, I wish to observe that prior to 1917, in April of which year we entered the World War, those in charge of our Government did everything they could to keep the country neutral and to keep the minds of the people of the United States in a neutral channel.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. President Wilson repeatedly advised the people of this country to keep their minds neutral. I do not recall that he ever made a statement to the contrary, always advising the American people to be calm, and to try to keep down hysteria.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is quite correct. As a matter of fact, he went so far as to issue a proclamation to the people of the United States not to evidence their choices in the controversy that was taking place in Europe at that time.

I am reminded of that because night before last I went as an invited guest to Keith's Theater, where, no doubt, many of my colleagues were present, and during the course of the projection of the film, as the story was being unraveled upon the screen, there appeared a facsimile of a proclamation issued by President Wilson asking the people who attended the theaters not to evidence by applause their choices in the controversies in Europe. We know that the people of this country are very much wrought up. We know that many people in this country have their choices on the other side. We know that the American people are certainly sympathetic with the Allies—I mean with the ally, because France having been conquered, she is no longer an ally of Great Britain. As evidence of that, and as evidence of the fact that no restraint is being requested on the part of the people, when Mr. Winston Churchill's picture appeared on the screen night before last he got more applause than when the American flag was thrown on the screen.

I bring this matter to the attention of my colleagues because they all know, as I do, that we are hysterical about the situation, and when we reflect, we know there is no use being hysterical, and there is no use of our thinking that Mr. Hitler or Mr. Mussolini is coming here tomorrow. Hitler is having a hell of a time crossing a little old ditch from Europe to England. [Laughter.] What sort of a time would he have in crossing 4,000 miles of water?

We have plenty of time, and I say that we should carry out the program proposed with a view to providing the best we can get for the lowest number of dollars. There is no use making haste, because, as my colleagues know, haste makes waste. In addition to that, we cannot get the benefit we would receive if we went about the matter reasonably and built up the kind of a national defense the American people wanted us to construct for their protection. If we go at the matter hurriedly, much of the money will go down rat holes, and there will be a hell of a lot of rats at the ends of the holes to get the money. Consequently, I think we should be reasonable about the matter, and not get excited.

There is another thing in respect to the situation. I know that the War Department and that all the men in the Federal Government are doing all they can to carry out the program on time and to do the best job possible. But we are going to have to watch the program. The Members of Congress have the duty as best they can to make observation as to the fortifications being redeveloped in Puerto Rico and the additions which are being made at the Panama Canal.

For instance, I happen to know of one contractor who is doing several million dollars' worth of work, who secured his contract on a competitive basis, to get so much under the contract.

There is another contractor next door to him who is doing his work on a cost-plus basis. The result is that the man who has the cost-plus contract is getting the laborers from the other man over here who has a straight out-and-out competitive contract. The latter man is powerless to keep his men from leaving him and going onto the rolls of the other man because the other man, as I am told, is offering higher wages, and he can pay higher wages because the Government is paying those wages, and he is getting a profit over and above those wages, whereas on the other hand the man who has a straight out-and-out competitive contract cannot do anything. So I say we must watch these things for the time being.

Mr. President, the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] today brought to the attention of the Senate a petition signed by 1,200,000 Americans. I want to take advantage of the opportunity to read the heading of this petition:

> As believers in God and country and the American system of life and government, we, the undersigned, petition the Congress of the United States to outlaw communism, nazi-ism, fascism, and all other forms of un-American activity within our borders, and to keep America out of foreign wars.

That petition was sponsored by the Reverend Gerald L. K. Smith, national chairman of the Committee of One Million, who is located in Detroit, Mich. I want to pay high tribute to the Americanism, the patriotism, and the worth-while activities of that gentleman. I would there were more people in the United States doing their best to keep this country out of war rather than involving it in war. The Reverend Mr. Smith is deserving of the praise and the thanks of the American people for his activities along that line.

Mr. President, we are talking about war and how to raise the money for a future war when we have not paid off the debts of the last war. Here we are talking about how to draft men for future wars, when we have not made arrangements to take care of the disabled and the deserving ex-soldiers of the last war.

I say that before we even consider sending any of our boys to their death upon foreign shores we should first consider taking care of the veterans of that other war by providing beds for them and adequate hospital facilities in this country. I say that before we contemplate going into another war, Mr. President, we pay the debts of the last World War.

There has been some talk about the selling of bonds. Bonds have to be paid back. We are talking about raising money for the next war and I want to say to the Senate right now that if the people of the United States, those who pay taxes, knew how much they are going to be called upon to pay as the result of the billions of dollars we are expending now, they would say, "No, let us not talk any more wars. We have not paid for the last war. We have not provided the money for the defense appropriation we have made now."

That is what we ought to do. As we make these appropriations and authorizations, which the American people are demanding that we make to build up our defense, I think that on the same day we ought to send the tax collectors out and collect the money, because when it is all over some people will say, "Why has my income tax been raised? Why do I have to pay all this money to the Government?" Then they will be told, "Why, you ordered it. You said you wanted us to make these appropriations, and you knew at the time you did it that you would have to pay for it, and that is why we are going to collect it now."

But some people are going to forget that when the war hysteria dies down, and they are going to raise the dickens about it. They will forget all about the fact that they have demanded that we do this and that, and when we come before them several years from now and they are squawking about the tremendous taxes and the burdens placed upon their shoulders we will say, "Do not blame us. You suggested it. You requested it, and you wanted it then. You demanded it."

The time to collect the money for this tremendous national-defense program is right now, when those who are demanding that these appropriations be made can be called upon to pay for them.

Mr. President, why consider a future war? Why consider a future war from the standpoint of providing money for the conscription of boys in that future war when there is more danger right here within our own midst than exists for us in other countries.

The Reverend Gerald L. K. Smith, being aware of that, has done what? He has had attached to these petitions 1,200,000 signatures, petitioning the Congress of the United States—to do what? To outlaw the Communist Party, to outlaw the German-American Bund, to outlaw the Fascist organizations in this country, and to outlaw all other forms of un-American activity within our borders.

So today, while the Reverend Gerald L. K. Smith is speeding back to Detroit, Mich., I want to say to him that I am in 100-percent accord with what his petition sets out, because for the past 3 years I have been suggesting that we destroy the subversive un-American forces within our midst before alien enemies and termites destroy us.

I thank the Reverend Dr. Smith for his fine cooperation in the presentation of the names of 1,200,000 men and women through the able senior Senator from Michigan.

I wish further to say to the Reverend Dr. Smith that before these petitions were presented here I had introduced in this body a resolution that would destroy, that would outlaw, the Communist Party, the German-American Bund, and all other similar organizations in this country. I wish to say to the Reverend Gerald Smith that there are millions upon millions of people in the United States who share his attitude in reference to that matter, because our danger is from within. We must destroy the enemy within our homes, within our own land, before we make appropriations to meet attacks from those 3,000 miles beyond one ocean and five to six thousand miles beyond the other ocean.

Mr. President, I wish to apologize to our Presiding Officer for having taken up this time, because I know how interested he is and how anxious he is to get back to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs for further consideration of that most important bill in which we are all interested.

In conclusion, in order that I may not be misunderstood, let me repeat that I believe that no member of the committee, if he thought we could obtain the men we need in our national-defense program through voluntary enlistment, would want a conscription law. If anybody could show me that volunteers would come in sufficient numbers to fill up the ranks of the Army and to man the mechanized equipment we have in mind for the development of national defense, I should not want conscription. But the evidence we have before us from high officials is to the effect that voluntary enlistments would not be sufficient.

Mr. President, I am an isolationist. I am a noninterventionist, and I have no apologies to make to anybody. I think that our duty is to the American people. I do not think it is incumbent upon us to murder our boys and bankrupt our Nation to settle territorial lines in Europe or in Asia.

I shall remain an isolationist, because I am interested only in the people of the United States. As an isolationist, I believe that our Government would be much better off if we should devote our time, our energies, and our money to the welfare of the American people, rather than try to police the world, settle everybody else's wars, and take care of the men, women, and children of the world, while at the same time neglecting our own people.

In this connection, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD at this point an editorial entitled "Isolation Vindicated."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Enquirer of July 8, 1940]

ISOLATION VINDICATED

A short 2 months ago there were very few people in the United States who would have paid any attention to a warning that the Anglo-French alliance was fast approaching a complete break-down. But the break-down has come all the same.

One great lesson which America must take to heart, as a consequence of the momentous upheaval occasioned by the destruction of the Anglo-French military, political, and economic combine, is that it is incumbent upon her, in her own vital interest, to keep resolutely free from commitments in Europe and Asia.

Once more it is easy for all Americans to perceive, if they have the will to do so, that George Washington was eternally right when he went to such pains to impress upon this Republic the folly and disaster which must inevitably result from our refusing to stand on our own soil and becoming involved in trans-Atlantic affairs.

It cannot be denied that there are men occupying key national positions in Washington and elsewhere who, if they could but have discovered a means of carrying out their hearts' desire, would have placed the United States in the current European war, side by side with England and France, just as soon as hostilities began last fall. Leaving aside all other factors, had we been stampeded into the conflict, we would have been doomed to defeat because of our distressing unpreparedness and the lack of capacity in those who would exercise dictatorial powers in Washington to wage a successful war of such gigantic proportions.

Notwithstanding what has occurred in Europe since last September, there are still in our National Capital men who long to play the ghastly game of war with the young bodies of millions of American boys. They have learned nothing, and have no desire to learn anything, from the epochal smashup between England and France and the other mighty considerations which must be taken into account. Theirs is a madness which the Republic cannot afford, if it would save itself from the trials and terrors of a native dictatorship and the loss of everything which we Americans cherish.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I also ask, in connection with my remarks in regard to the "fifth column," that there be printed in the RECORD an article which I clipped from the Washington Daily News many months ago. The article is from the pen of Mr. William Philip Simms and deals with certain activities in France which were certainly not for the welfare of that country.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PARIS EXODUS

(By William Philip Simms)

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE, June 19.—Just before I scrambled out of Paris, a couple of jumps ahead of the Germans, I stood with a French labor leader at a window overlooking a street leading to one of the city's southern portals.

The avenue was jammed from curb to curb with heavily laden refugees, many of them afoot and others in automobiles or taxicabs or on bicycles. Some trundled carts in which children were riding. There were even a few horse-drawn vehicles.

It was a dusty, unkempt, exhausted stream of humanity, benumbed by calamities already suffered and by dread of what was to come. The people staggered along, starting and stopping as a few police tried to exert some control of the traffic. Meanwhile, as if lashing these homeless ones on toward a destination unknown even to themselves, there was the ceaseless noise of enemy drumfire from east and north and west.

"I wonder," said the labor leader, "whether you will ever see anything like that in America. For your sake, I hope you never shall."

Then, apparently more to himself than to me:

"That"—pointing to the tragic procession below—"is one of the things that democracies must learn how to avoid. It is a result of a combination of many things—of Trojan horsemen and 'fifth columnists,' of actual enemies, secret and avowed, undermining a country from within.

"It is also the result of the mistake made by sincere supporters of democracy who, while pursuing ends desirable to themselves, wholly forgot that without adequate national defense the social gains, however marvelous, were doomed to be lost, and much more with them.

"What a lesson this should be for the future—for America and for democracy in general. The democracies have a tremendously difficult problem ahead, but it must be solved if any of them is to survive. They must find a way to make capital, labor, and government all realize that the general good of one is inseparably bound up with the good of the others.

"They must find a way to prevent Trojan horsemen and 'fifth columnists' from using free institutions to destroy those same institutions. What I mean is that in Germany and Russia there is no such thing as freedom of speech and assembly and religion—no civil liberty. Those expressing views contrary to the idea of the governments are promptly liquidated.

"Yet agents of Hitlerism and Stalinism, paid and unpaid, have been given free rein in countries like mine—and yours—where they invoke the very freedoms they seek to destroy in order to conceal their nefarious activities.

"Of course, the solution is difficult, but it must be found as a matter of sheer self-defense in such a world as this."

Mr. REYNOLDS. In addition, and in conclusion, I have before me one of the finest articles I ever read in my life, by a man who wields a keen pen, and who has millions of readers daily. We will all admit, I believe, that he has as much courage as any man who ever wrote an article for publication anywhere in the country at any time. I refer to Mr. Westbrook Pegler. He has "guts," nerve, and courage. He speaks out, and is not afraid to do so. In this article he tells us that we have been too soft with those who are trying to destroy our Constitution. He tells us that those who are trying to destroy our Constitution are the very ones who seek its protection when they are themselves apprehended. I commend to the readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and particularly to my colleagues, this article by Mr. Westbrook Pegler, under the heading of "Fair enough." Let me read the concluding paragraphs:

The question is, Shall the Constitution be invoked to facilitate its own destruction? And the answer to that, in a word, is "No."

He concludes:

It still remains to be admitted that some individuals will be falsely accused. Nobody will endorse that, and the blame falls on the Communists, Nazis, and Fascists. But let's have it understood that the American Constitution is not now and never was intended to stand guard over those who conspire against the freedom which it guarantees.

I repeat, Mr. President, that the ones who are now strenuously endeavoring to destroy our Constitution are the very ones who seek its protection when they are apprehended.

I ask unanimous consent that the article to which I have just referred be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FAIR ENOUGH

(By Westbrook Pegler)

This is the day I kick the giblets out of the fine, fastidious interpretation of the United States Constitution which holds that it guarantees to enemies of the liberties written into the document itself the same protection that it offers to loyal Americans.

This paradox is presented in a protest of the Civil Liberties Union against an order of the United States Civil Service Commission which bars anyone "established as a member of the Communist Party, the German Bund, or any Communistic or Nazi organization." The union resents this action on behalf of all the civil liberties of all of us as "a discrimination against citizens because of their political views or connections."

In reply to that I will ask one myself:

Why not discriminate, not only in the civil service, but in every other area of American affairs and in every possible way, against people whose political beliefs and associations commit them to a program of hostility against the American Nation and its liberties?

This wet-eyed, tremulous, Mister-Chairman type of argument has heretofore compelled those who love the Constitution most to grant immunity and license to those who hate it most and are openly or furtively fighting to destroy it. In easier times all Americans have been more tolerant of these enemies in line with the new exploded Hyde Park "let-them-yap-their-heads-off" theory of the English Government. But it isn't merely what they say that makes these enemies of the Constitution dangerous; it is what they do under protection of the very document which they would tear up and what they do or intend to do may be calculated with fair accuracy from what they say and from their associations. If the Communists, the bunds people, and the half-Americanized Italians who rally to Mussolini are to be given the same consideration that is deserved by loyal Americans, the Constitution becomes the shield and weapon of its own foes.

The Constitution never was intended to protect its enemies. It was intended to protect the liberties of the loyal people of the United States, and if it seems a little ambiguous, that is only because its meaning has been fogged up by discussion in the debating schools.

All loyal Americans, at one time or another, take an oath to uphold and defend the Constitution, and nothing in the document itself can be interpreted to mean that they must not "discriminate" against those who plainly indicate a determination to abolish it or "revise" it out of recognizable shape by treacherous, legalistic manipulations of its own provisions and parliamentary sleight of hand.

It was the simple intention of the founding fathers, as it has has always been the faithful purpose of genuine Americans—many of whom, incidentally, were born abroad—to prevent officious interference with the freedom of Americans. Had they meant to forbid the defense of Americanism they would have said so. They did not foresee that Communists, Nazis and, lest they be overlooked in this dangerous time, many half-Americanized Italians would organize conspiracies here to embarrass the people, to assist Stalin, Hitler, and Mussolini in a war on freedom and to sabotage the effort of this Nation to defend itself.

The difficulty in identifying the enemy is exaggerated. The groups to which they belong are legal in the sense that they are permitted to organize. But by their works and loyalties shall ye know them; and the injury to liberty is trivial and unavoidable if a Communist, Nazi, or Fascist is discriminated against by comparison with the injury that liberty will suffer should they win their way.

The question is, Shall the Constitution be invoked to facilitate its own destruction? And the answer to that, in a word, is "No."

It still remains to be admitted that some individuals will be falsely accused. Nobody will endorse that, and the blame falls on the Communists, Nazis, and Fascists. But let's have it understood that the American Constitution is not now and never was intended to stand guard over those who conspire against the freedom which it guarantees.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am grateful to the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Robert Porter Patterson, of New York, to be Assistant Secretary of War, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported favorably the nomination of Dr. Clarence Poe, of North Carolina, to be a member of the Federal Board for Vocational Education for the 3-year term expiring July 17, 1943.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

COAST GUARD

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast Guard.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the Coast Guard are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, have we not omitted the nomination of a United States district attorney for the eastern district of Texas?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That nomination was confirmed earlier in the day by unanimous consent.

Mr. McNARY. Today?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Today.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. HARRISON. In accordance with the order previously entered, I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being under the order previously entered, until Monday, July 29, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate July 25, 1940

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JULY 25, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. W. C. Brauer, pastor of the Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church, Evansville, Ind., offered the following prayer:

To Thee, Heavenly Father, we offer our heartfelt thanks and praise for the bountiful goodness Thou hast so graciously bestowed upon our country. We humbly acknowledge before Thy presence, that we and our people are unworthy of such divine blessings and do deserve that Thou wouldst turn Thy face from us. But, bold in the assurance of the full atonement of our Redeemer, we implore Thee not to remove from our land Thy gracious and divine protection.

Grant unto us ever to be mindful that Thou art Lord supreme and we but Thy servants. In these perilous days give us that wisdom and sincerity of purpose necessary, so that by our deliberations, righteousness and peace, justice and well-being may be promoted throughout the borders of our States. Thine is the power we need; Thine is the kingdom we seek; Thine alone shall be all glory. Amen.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that over the week end a great many Members are going on some kind of a first trip on a ship, and it will be impossible for them to make that trip and get back before Monday night. On that account I may state to the membership of the House that on Monday, unless matters come up by unanimous consent, there will be no business transacted.

In all probability, and I think certainly, the T. V. A. bill will be up on Tuesday. On Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of next week whatever bills come from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs that are necessary as authorizations, under the last recommendation of the President, will be taken up if they are ready, and if the Appropriations Committee is ready the latter part of the week on the additional $4,000,000,000 preparedness measure, in all probaility that will be taken up. I think this will make a rather full program for next week.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. There are some privileged matters from the Committee on the Judiciary that we might want to take up next week if it could be arranged.

Mr. RAYBURN. If we can carry out the program I have just outlined, of course, that would be fine, if they are privileged matters. If not, they may be taken up the following week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As I understand, the gentleman wishes the military-defense bill to come first?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is correct.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. There are a number of rules pending; for instance, a rule for the consideration of a bill concerning wire tapping. Will that measure be held up until the measures the gentleman has spoken of are taken up?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. I might state also that there are many rules here that have been reported by the Rules Committee. The order in which they will come up has not been determined, because I certainly do not think we can reach any of them next week.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. With respect to the national-defense appropriation bill that the gentleman speaks of which the Committee on Appropriations may report out, has the President made a statement as to how he is going to spend that money?

Mr. RAYBURN. The Appropriations Committee ought to know that if anybody does; I do not. That is a matter that is within the province of the Appropriations Committee to develop, and I am not a member of any committee.

Mr. RICH. We certainly ought to know exactly what we are going to spend $4,800,000,000 for. Congress, it seems to me, ought to know about that if we are to make the appropriation.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is certainly in position to get the answer if anybody is.

Mr. RICH. We will try our best to get it.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 554), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 554

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of House Joint Resolution 583, a joint resolution making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

CABLEGRAM FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES OF THE ARGENTINE NATION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following cablegram from the President of the Chamber of Deputies of the Argentine Nation:

PRESIDENT OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES OF NORTH AMERICA:

In the name of the Chamber of Deputies of Argentina, I thank the House of Representatives of the United States of North America, through its President, for the respect paid on the occasion of (the celebration of) the declaration of our independence. Greetings to the President.

Respectfully,

CARLOS M. NOEL,
President of the Chamber of Deputies of the Argentine Uation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a resolution passed by the Danville Chamber of Commerce, and an editorial from the Danville Bee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a statement by Rev. Charles W. Fillmore, of Indianapolis, Ind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a few excerpts from certain letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert a short resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include two brief editorials from the Asbury Park Sunday Press.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a very splendid address delivered recently by Hon. Josephus Daniels.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter from D. W. Peacock, of the Peacock Military Academy, of San Antonio, to Maj. Gen. Claude V. Birkhead, commanding general, Thirty-sixth Division, Texas National Guard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Also, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on another subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REFUGEE CHILDREN

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, there have been introduced before the Committee on Immigration about six or seven bills relating to refugee children from the persecuted countries abroad. A great demand has been made by Members of Congress and other organizations for a hearing. I rise to advise the Congress that the committee has set hearings for the 7th and 8th days of August, at which time the committee will hear the testimony on all bills relating to refugee children.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on three different subjects. First, on the subject of mercy ships for the rescue of refugee children; second, on the subject of antitrust laws and labor unions; third, on the subject of merchandising; also to include a statement of Malcolm T. McNear. I have been informed that there would be an extra charge of $68.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and any other special orders I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point and to include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I was astounded to read in the RECORD of July 11 that the Representative from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] attempted to reduce our national-defense program to the realm of partisan politics by making a partisan political attack upon my efforts to launch our Nation upon an immediately effective defense program.

There is no need for me to defend my record for national defense. As ranking minority member of the War Department Appropriations Subcommittee for the past 8 years I have consistently argued, in committee and on the floor of the House, for a greater and more adequate defense program. In fact, back in 1933, 1934, and 1935 I was crusading, with other members of our committee, for more aeronautical research for the Army Air Corps, for more modernization and mechanization of the combat forces, and for proper facilities for training the personnel in the requirements of modern warfare.

It may be noted that the other members of the committee and I were crusading for this when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] was still in private life.

My friend from the other side of the aisle has attempted to criticize my vote against the purchase of 5,500 planes, which were included in the War Department appropriations bills for the fiscal year of 1940.

Certainly I voted against the appropriation for those planes. I argued that of that number, 2,200 were planned to be purchased as a reserve, which meant that those machines, obsolescent when ordered, would be obsolete by the time they were drawn from the reserve. In that same bill I fought to take the money which would be used for purchase of these reserve planes and put it into research and development. It had been my constant contention that this country was not spending enough money on developing a faster fighting plane, one less vulnerable than those our defense forces were then using, and one which had a greater cruising range.

As a result of my efforts, we were able to get sufficient money appropriated by the Congress to make possible a program of research and development. If it were not for that program, we would not have the 400 mile an hour fighting plane we have today—a plane which is equal or superior to anything that flies in the European skies.

For the edification of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] may I say that not one of those 5,500 planes which were appropriated for by the Congress over my protests, were ever delivered to the Army. And I am sure that General Arnold, Chief of the Air Corps, thanks God now that the never had any of those obsolescent planes foisted upon him.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] challenges also my vote against the appropriation for a third set of locks in the Panama Canal. Certainly I voted against that appropriation. These locks were to be built exactly parallel to, and within a short distance of, the existing locks. I strongly opposed the appropriation of $277,000,000 for this third set, because the construction would extend over a period of 6 years. It was my contention that this country would be better off were it to take that $277,000,000 and immediately buy much-needed critical items of equipment for our defense forces. I opposed the appropriation further because construction of this third set of locks would take from our country and send to Panama, on a 6-year project, skilled mechanics who are vitally needed here now to help bolster our continental defenses and to make the machines of war which we lack at the present time.

I believe the most charitable construction I can put upon the unjust attack upon me by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] is that he just did not know the complete story of our national-defense problems and of my efforts to help our Nation to solve them. Should the attack be based on honest ignorance of my long record of promoting our defense program, may I suggest he confer with Gen. Malin Craig, the former Chief of Staff of the Army, or with Gen. George C. Marshall, the present Chief of Staff. I am sure that these gentlemen, who are acquainted with my record, will be delighted to enlighten him.

Under permission granted me by the House I wish to insert in the RECORD a copy of an editorial from the Trenton Times of July 15. This newspaper, an independent Democratic daily, is the largest in my district. The news columns of the paper carried the story of the unjust and unpatriotic attack of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] and on the following day this editorial appeared which, I believe, fully answers any argument the gentleman has advanced in the past, or may be planning to advance in the future.

The editorial follows:

CRITICAL BOOMERANG

Democrats in the House at Washington have started assailing Representative D. LANE POWERS for alleged opposition to several "defense proposals" advanced prior to the outbreak of the European war. The assertion is that Mr. POWERS, along with others of the Republican minority, thus took an unpatriotic stand decidedly harmful to the American people.

It should be pointed out, however, that, before Hitler launched his "blitzkrieg" into Poland and the Low Countries, and before talk had begun as to politicalized Nazi penetration into South America, there was little to suggest a menacing condition so far as the Western Hemisphere is concerned.

Certainly the Roosevelt administration, with detailed State Department information at its immediate disposal, should have been aware of the totalitarian threat sooner than should a minority member of the House Military Affairs Committee. But it is a fact that the new dealers did not come forward with a national-defense program of any real adequacy until the collapse of France.

The Budget cuts which Mr. POWERS suggested when there was no thought of American involvement with the European struggle were predicated upon the sound idea of reasonable Federal economy. And at that time there was every reason why some effort should have been made to reduce wasteful and extravagant spending in whatever direction, as, indeed, there still is along every line except preparedness.

If the Democrats make a misguided attempt to shift defense responsibility from the shoulders of the congressional majority to those of the minority, they are likely to place themselves in an extremely embarrassing position from which it will be impossible to retreat.

The blunt fact is that no one in the United States, leaders or citizens, fully grasped the threatening implications of totalitarian development until mechanized might began to assert itself on field of battle. Partisan critics who are now directing shafts of ridicule at patriotic Americans like Mr. POWERS are assuming the role of the Monday morning quarterback who, after the plays have been called and executed, belatedly arises to explain what should have been done and to heap censure upon the third assistant coach.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a letter written to the editor of the New York Times dated July 13, 1940, by Dr. Arnaud C. Martz, president of Bucknell University.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject Pertinent Questions of Today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include two short articles from the Washington News.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include three short radio addresses I delivered over the western Montana network.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an excerpt from the New York Times and also the keynote speech of the Governor of Minnesota at the Philadelphia convention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the other special orders are disposed of today I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXPENDITURES IN GOVERNMENT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, things are getting worse and worse every day. The statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, on July 20, shows that we have gone in the red $358,198,164.88 in 20 days. That is $17,909,908.24 a day, or $746,246.20 an hour in the red, or $12,437 a minute in the red. That is almost twice as fast as we went into the red last year; then we were $3,700,000,000 in the red for the year.

Now, where are you going with this great national-defense program that we are harboring at the present time? No economy in government and national defense that staggers our imagination and probably will completely wreck us, unless we get some business sense in our government operation. By the time the Republicans get into power next January it is going to be most difficult for them to get along without increasing the taxes twice as much. What you Democrats should do is to give us another tax bill. You have given us one this year, but you should give us at least two or three more like that if we are ever going to survive, with all your waste. What we need most is economy in government—stop the waste and extravagance, consolidate departments, and cut out many, many bureaus.

When Willkie gets in we will win and we will balance the Budget and we will save this Nation; we will give jobs to Americans and not the dole. We will protect the farmers and happiness will be ours. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein a letter from the Secretary of War and a portion of an editorial from the Baltimore Sun.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include an article entitled "Mobility in the Engineers," prepared by Col. Stewart C. Godfrey, Corps of Engineers, and Chief of the Operations Training Section of the Office of Chief of Engineers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that following the other special orders of today I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a copy of an address I have delivered before several conventions of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE AMERICAN SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the Conference of Pan American Foreign Ministers now in session at Havana, Cuba, is holding the attention of the peoples of every country in the Western Hemisphere. The results of that conference, it is expected, will be of vital interest to all these nations. It is already becoming clear that great economic "readjustments" are at least contemplated. If our representatives at the conference are operating true to the form heretofore displayed by the Roosevelt administration, the "readjustments" may be such as to strike a vital blow at certain legitimate and profitable agricultural activities in this country.

Mr. Speaker, my mind goes back to the Presidential message of February 8, 1934, in which Mr. Roosevelt discussed the domestic-sugar industry, indicating very clearly that he believed this to be an inefficient industry having no place in our domestic economy. Among many other significant statements, he said, "I do not at this time recommend placing sugar on the free list." If that statement indicates anything, it indicates he had that ultimate objective in mind. If further confirmation is needed to establish the administration's sugar policy at that time, it was supplied by Mr. A. J. S. Weaver, Chief of the Sugar Section of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, in his testimony before the House Committee on Agriculture on February 19, 1934, when he conceded that this expression of the President indicated sugar was later to be placed on the free list "by a succession of moves which would reduce the great shock." Still further confirmation of the Presidential state of mind in connection with the sugar industry was supplied by the Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. Henry A. Wallace, who still holds that office while at the same time seeking the office of Vice President on the New Deal ticket. In a book entitled, "America Must Choose," published in February 1934, in which Mr. Wallace discussed the question of rehabilitation of agriculture and industry in the United States, he said:

> This will involve a radical reduction in tariffs that might seriously hurt certain industries and a few kinds of agricultural businesses, such as sugar-beet growing and flax growing. It might also cause pain for a while to wool growers and to farmers who supply material for various edible oils. I think we ought to face that fact.
> Now, if we are going to lower tariffs radically there may have to be definite planning whereby certain industries or businesses will have to be retired. The Government might have to help furnish means for the orderly retirement of such businesses, and even select those which are thus to be retired.

"Now, if we are going to lower tariffs radically there may have to be definite planning whereby certain industries or businesses will have to be retired. The Government might have to help furnish means for the orderly retirement of such businesses, and even select those which are thus to be retired."

On February 20, 1934, Prof. Rexford G. Tugwell, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, in his testimony before the House Committee on Agriculture, made the statement, in effect, that he "would not extend protection to any industry which could not stand on its own two feet."

Mr. Speaker, I refer at this time to the attitude of the Roosevelt administration during the earlier months of its existence only for the reason that Secretary of State Hull and the other American delegates at Havana, following the usual custom of our American delegates in conference with representatives of other nations, have declined to state what proposals have been submitted to the conference. Knowing the attitude toward the American sugar industry displayed by the administration in former days, and still persisted in, those of us who recognize the great value of this splendid agricultural interest, not only to the producers of sugar, but to consumers of sugar as well, are naturally apprehensive of what may emanate from the Havana conference.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace at one time made the statement that the American sugar industry, particularly the beet-sugar industry, was an inefficient one, and ought not to have been established in this country, that it should be eliminated, but "it is politically impossible to do this at this time."

It has been suggested in high administrative circles that in order to enlarge on our good-neighbor policy we buy from the other nations of this hemisphere their agricultural surpluses and assume the responsibility of disposing of those surpluses to the other peoples of the world, and this notwithstanding the fact we are unable to profitably dispose of our own agricultural surpluses. In view of this proposal, and in view of the known administration hostility to the American sugar-beet industry, some of us are wondering whether the conference at Havana and world conditions generally are going to make it "politically possible" to complete the destruction of the American sugar-beet industry.

Mr. Speaker, in the Journal of Commerce of New York of July 24, 1940, there appears an article entitled "Scrapping of Beet Industry Is Urged—Genuine Reciprocity Seen Need if Sugar Problem Is To Be Ironed Out." According to this article, the scrapping of the sugarbeet industry in the United States through action by the American Government is being urged as a progressive step in promoting the inter-Americas cartel plan. The Luis Mendoza y Cia of Habana, one of the large Cuban sugar companies, in commenting upon the Pan American Conference, stated such a move would make for real reciprocity and rationalization of agricultural interests.

In our last review—

The company said—

we pointed out what we believe to be the economic slant of the approaching Pan American Conference of Ministers. Its chief purpose in this direction, we remarked, will be the attainment of a closer cooperation between the nations of the Western Hemisphere. It was our contention that the mutual protection of natural products as determined by the soil, climate, and geographical position of each region, and the native ability of its people to take advantage of these inherent qualities—the abandonment of every ultraprotectionist scheme favoring artificial industries and hothouse crops based on subsidies and tariff barriers—should become the theme song of the Habana conference.

* * * The one indisputable fact is that such an opportunity to attack the problem at its root will seldom if ever arise in the future. Heroic solutions are rife even in the United States, as witness the following quotation from Time magazine for July 8:

"Cuba has depended on the European market to get rid of 33 percent of her crop. * * * In Asia, * * * India * * * can now turn exporter. * * * If the New Deal is serious about its hemisphere-cartel scheme, it may be forced to revive a * * * radical scheme: The United States to get an independent valuation of beet properties, buy their owners out"—referring of course to submarginal beet properties.

Such step, though at first sight impracticable, would justify every conceivable sacrifice. It would be the practical realization of our ideal of inter-American trade—every country producing and exporting what it is best equipped to produce and export—and the reparation of many inequities within the Western Hemisphere.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the American farmer can easily and economically raise every pound of sugar the American people can consume. He should be permitted to do so. Earlier statements by the President, his Secretary of Agriculture, and others that the American sugar industry is an inefficient one is entirely at variance with the facts and should have long ago been so recognized by those who are in a position to have those facts. Notwithstanding this, the refusal of the administration to permit a normal expansion of sugar raising in this country during the past 7 years indicates clearly that the Presidential mind on this question remains the same as in 1934. In view of the fact our Representatives are toying with the proposal to take over all agricultural surpluses of this hemisphere when we cannot even dispose of those from our own farms, it seems reasonable to suppose that this administration may accept this opportunity to eliminate our domestic sugar industry. That the matter is being given consideration at Habana is indicated by the prominence given to the statement of the very important Cuban sugar company quoted above and to the subtle method in which those proposals to destroy the American industry are camouflaged.

The first reaction of any intelligent man upon reading the article referred to is to say that the idea is too fantastic to be considered seriously. But is it? We cannot forget the self-sufficient and fervid declarations of these "brain trusters" when after the election in 1936 they met every protest and every question regarding their theoretical proposals with the all-embracing answer, "We have a mandate. The American people have approved the New Deal, and we must expand the new dealisms."

Surely we all know that such a preposterous proposal as that of this impertinent Cuban company will not be seriously considered, at least publicly, before November. But we just as surely do not know what importance will be given to it should the new dealers receive a "mandate of mandates" next November for the continuation of their policies and control for the next 4 years.

Mr. Speaker, I consider it my duty as a Representative from one of the great sugar-producing districts of the United States to issue this warning as to what may happen and what is being advocated by practical, if tactless, foreigners, while our own statesmen speak in honeyed words about third terms and a League of Nations in the Western Hemisphere. Pan American cooperation is an excellent idea in principle, but if its application means that we must sacrifice some of our great industries and the means of obtaining a livelihood for 100,000 farmers and 1,000,000 laborers in 21 States and more, then it becomes high time for the American people to become realistic and to refuse to stay up in the clouds of international theoristic dreams.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have a third request if I may so far presume upon the Members of the House. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain material appertaining to the value to any congressional district of continuous and uninterrupted representation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein an article appearing in the Washington Post of today by Walter Lippmann, entitled "The Paper Scheme."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and to include therein an address delivered to the United States Chamber of Commerce by Philip D. Reed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HON. LEWIS W. DOUGLAS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a word in behalf of our esteemed former colleague the Honorable Lewis W. Douglas, of Arizona.

On Tuesday of this week, according to press reports, the President of the United States stated at a press conference that Mr. Douglas' slant of mind ran more to dollars than to humanity. Could anything meaner be said by one fellowman of another?

Any man who served in the House with Lew Douglas knows that charge to be absolutely false. A man of independent means, he was ever ready to lend a helping hand to those who were not so fortunate in their possession of this world's goods. He was generous to a fault, but with his own money; not with money of which he was in part trustee.

There was no New Deal philosophy in Lew Douglas' make-up as to public funds. He was for cures for the ills which beset us during his membership here and later as Director of the Budget, but he had the vision to see that spending and more spending of the taxpayers' money would not cure anything, but merely would lead to the gigantic debt with which we are now burdened, and which is still mounting independently of the huge defense bills now being incurred.

Can any of you see any encouragement for humanity in that picture? Its continuance is the course to want, to deprivation, and to despair for millions, with Federal resources no longer available and an impoverished middle class barely able to sustain itself. Lew Douglas, after all, was the champion of humanity. His has proven to be the sound philosophy, not built upon the sand.

As an American, I profess embarrassment that the incumbent of the office of Chief Executive would stoop so low. [Applause.]

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC WORKS BY THE NAVY DEPARTMENT

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order for the Naval Affairs Committee on Monday to call up the bill (H. R. 10200) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes.

The reason I make this request is because it will enable the Committee on Appropriations probably to incorporate in the next deficiency bill certain items the Committee on Naval Affairs has added here on the bill. The bill was unanimously reported to the House this morning.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this conform to the program outlined by the majority leader earlier today?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I just consulted the distinguished majority leader and he stated that nothing would come up on Monday except by unanimous consent. I am asking unanimous consent now that consideration of this bill be permitted on Monday.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the bill likely to cause any controversy?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The bill was unanimously reported by the committee this morning. The ranking minority Member and the other minority Members were present during the consideration of the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would say to the minority leader that if a controversy should arise that might involve a roll call, the roll call certainly would not be had until Tuesday.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am not going to call the bill up, of course, unless I get unanimous consent. If there is any objection we shall have to obtain a rule. I filed an application for a rule this morning, but I hope in the interest of time that it can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill that authorizes the construction of certain projects recommended in the Budget estimate that came over to us?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. Is the object of getting it passed Monday so that the items may be included in the bill the Appropriations Committee is now considering?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. Has arrangement been made as to general debate?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am perfectly willing to have the bill considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, or to have an hour's general debate, half to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota and half by me.

There is nothing controversial in the bill. The items in the bill have been recommended by the Bureau of the Budget, and its consideration on Monday is asked only that the items may be included in the appropriation bill now being considered by the Appropriations Committee. I may say that the items are those which appear in italics in that bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want the gentleman to understand that we do not desire to block any proper defense bill. It seems to me, however, that arrangements should be made for debate.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to call up the bill (H. R. 10200) on Monday, that there be 1 hour's general debate, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] and me.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman stated that the bill was reported by the committee unanimously. I would remind him, however, that there are 435 Members in the House. There is nothing in particular to be done on Monday. Does the gentleman believe that 1 hour's debate is sufficient on a bill as important as that?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We will have liberal debate under the 5-minute rule. If the gentleman wants a longer time to speak, I am satisfied it will be possible for him to get it under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman has asked for only an hour on general debate. Under the 5-minute rule one can get very little time. Suppose some Member wanted to speak for 15 minutes on the bill. The Republicans may now have only 168 Members, but we are going to have 300 Members when the next Congress meets, and we certainly do not want to be limited as this would limit us.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let us cross that bridge when we come to it.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman will permit an observation, I do not think it is necessary for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make a political speech every time he reserves the right to object.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am sure there will be ample time for debate. The amount involved in the bill is $59,000,000.

Mr. RICH. That is the reason there ought to be more than 30 minutes on a side.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I assure the gentleman we will give him all the time he wants under the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a memoranda that I have submitted to four different Government agencies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by former President Hoover at the Republican National Convention held at Philadelphia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

There was no objection.

REPORT ON ADVISORY COMMISSION TO COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a resolution which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the House of Representatives weekly, a report giving a brief outline by the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense, showing the progress of the work for the national defense.

Mr. Speaker, while the President and his administration are responsible for carrying out the program of national defense, the House of Representatives also has a responsibility in that it appropriates the money, and it should see that the administration expends the money wisely and at once for our national defense. Our responsibility does not stop with the appropriations. We have a very grave responsibility and a solemn duty to perform. I assure you that the country is going to hold every Member here strictly accountable if he does not get every bit of information he can and does not force the national-defense program to completion immediately. We are all very much distressed by the delay. The country is alarmed. We want action and we want it now.

THE PRICE OF PATRIOTISM IN PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, what is the price of patriotism in Pennsylvania? In my district the vast Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. maintains its great plant and this week it announced that all employees who are members of the Pennsylvania National Guard and who may be called up for service will be paid the difference between their Army pay and their regular pay for the duration of the service. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from the National Guard Association of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

THE CONGRESS SHOULD REMAIN IN SESSION

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, these are most unusual and critical times which threaten the very existence of the Nation. This session of Congress, under ordinary circumstances, would long ago have been terminated by adjournment and Members returned to their districts. Expressions from our constituents, however, indicate the fear and anxiety of our people and compel our most earnest attention. The people know and appreciate the gravity of the situation and insist that Congress remain on the job and in Washington, attending to the pressing business of the Nation. They demand that we provide the maximum for the defense of our beloved country and fortify against any extreme eventuality. The demand is clear-cut and unmistakable.

We must, therefore, comply with the command of the people. We must forthwith rearm to protect our ideals, our institutions, and our democratic form of government against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and under no circumstances become involved in the European war. I am willing and anxious to comply with the dictum of my constituents and to remain in continuous session as long as the emergency exists. Moreover, I say to you, Mr. Speaker, it matters naught whether or not my personal or political fortunes suffer if by my cooperation and presence in Washington I can hold in check the war mongers as well as the subversive anti-American agitators and thus help to maintain unimpaired our American heritage. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter I am writing to the gentleman from Texas, MARVIN JONES.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOYKIN.]

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article by David Lawrence on the third term.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address delivered by the minority leader of the House of Representatives, the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., at that free and uncontrolled convention held in Philadelphia recently.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if there is not some order that could be issued where we could blanket all the speeches made at Philadelphia and have them included here in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of no such parliamentary process.

Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE CONGRESS SHOULD REMAIN IN SESSION

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, in the mind of every American when he pauses to think, forcing consideration in the midst of the day's work and in the wakeful hours of night, are questions about today's wars—their dangers and causes, their extent in space and time, and the probable effects of the conflict on our lives here in the United States. Whether we are forced into war or whether we remain at peace, as I believe we shall do, there are matters of gravest importance which do concern every American, and the consequences of which no citizen can escape, even if he refuses to give serious study to the problems. First, there is the question of our defense, methods by which it may be speeded most effectively, its costs, and how they shall be paid. Second, the economic effect upon our Nation of the total disruption of normal trade and commerce throughout the world and the assumption of power in Europe by totalitarian governments. The question of paying the bills will touch every man and woman in this Nation, but no one doubts that we must provide for defense as our most certain insurance against war.

A clash between American and German economic interests is inevitable. Whether America can be strengthened by Great Britain remains to be seen. That is our great hope. Germany will have life or death rule over nearly half a billion people, and Japan dominates the Orient. Those who perform labor under both these ruling powers will be slaves of an economic system totally at odds with ours. Does anyone think this will not require some readjustment?

Let us look at the picture, trying to summarize the situation. Let us consider the effect on our own national life of all the swift and amazing alterations of the world's national boundaries and governments. What does it mean to us now? What will any particular outcome mean to us in the future? How will all this shape our defense program and how must it modify our economy? Must we reshape our governmental institutions or yield any of our political privileges? Is a clash over Hitler's aggressions in South America inevitable? These are questions in the minds of thinking Americans. I am here endeavoring to set forth the facts we face, and to examine the possible effects of this grave emergency on our national life. I set forth my opinions formed after study of sources at the center of our national life. I believe every Representative should try to paint the picture as he sees it, though events move so swiftly that desirable procedures may change overnight.

WORLD SITUATION TODAY

Dark and darker grow the war clouds in not far distant lands. The human mind just fails to comprehend the reasons for, and the results of, the collapse of the liberal governments of Europe. The rapidity with which one terrible disaster has followed another in the last few months is indeed frightening. This is not a war between nations. It is a world revolution. It is a war between different methods and ideals of government. Arrayed on one side are the nations we have come to know as the totalitarian states; by these, we mean governments ruled by dictators and by decrees instead of legislative bodies. Consent of the governed is not considered. Ruthlessness, fear, iron discipline, suppression of criticism and of free speech, together with entire submergence of the individual to the state are characteristics of totalitarianism.

Arrayed on the other side, in opposition to the strongly militarized dictator-controlled countries, have been the liberal governments of western Europe, of which Great Britain alone remains in the conflict. Those governments have been called democracies; their liberty-loving people have had governments based on law, and not subject to the will and whims of men who gain power. They have been pretty generally based on the consent of the governed and have enjoyed a fairly reasonable degree of free press, free assembly, free religious worship, and a large degree of personal liberty. They have given entire recognition of the right to individual property. In short, these governments are economically based on the capitalistic system, and politically, on the doctrine of equality of individuals.

It has been only a little over 20 years since the Treaty of Versailles was signed, officially ending the first World War. Students everywhere then believed that the democratic idea would extend throughout the world. It did seem as if that happy day was approaching. Russia, which for centuries had been the black spot of Europe, threw off the yoke of the Czars, and there were those among us who believed the Russian millions were entering upon a better day for the common man; but out of the tragedy of the Russian revolution has come a despotism as cruel and heartless as any which ever reigned on this earth.

DEMOCRACIES CRUMBLING

However, this is no time to survey the field to discover causes nor to fix the blame for the dreadful conditions which confront us. It is clear that we must face the fact that practically one-third of all the people of this world who have enjoyed some measure of freedom, liberty, and the right to the pursuit of happiness have, voluntarily or involuntarily, surrendered these privileges in exchange for forms of government as absolute and cruel as any that ever existed, not excepting the dark and cruel days of the worst Roman Emperors. From the English Channel to the coast of Japan, about 7,000 miles, across the largest stretch of territory of the habitable globe, liberty, freedom, and independence have disappeared. The laboring man in those vast lands is a virtual slave; the labor unions of the western countries have been abolished. Should one lose his employment in private industry, he must accept a very much lower wage in government camps, one which brings mere subsistence.

Back has come with terrific force the principle that might makes right; and out of the terrible jungle has come, once again, the statement of the predatory powers:

> The good old rule
> Sufficeth them, the simple plan
> That they should take who hath the power,
> They should keep who can.

Kindness, love, and charity seem to have disappeared from many of the lands where they formerly made life easier. With the collapse of France and her tragic surrender, the British Empire and the United States are left as the two great democracies now functioning based on the principle of the consent of the governed, and the people of Britain have surrendered age-old privileges for national safety.

It has been 164 years since Jefferson gave us the Declaration of Independence with its noble statement:

> That all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Those ideas, springing from the concepts of our forefathers, spread like wildfire throughout the world, and in many lands they had taken such firm root it was thought they could never be dislodged. We have seen the tender plant of liberty withering; now it has been plucked and thrown to the hot winds of human destruction. Liberty, very evidently, cannot be inherited; it must be won anew by every generation. Perhaps the roots did not go deep enough, and perhaps the "pursuit of happiness" about which Jefferson wrote so eloquently in the Declaration, has been turned to an unworthy substitute, the "pursuit of pleasure." In spite of the power and influence of that Declaration, the world seems to have grown greedy, soft, and unable to resist encroachment. It appears that we must have a rebirth, a rededication to noble purposes and finer lives. We Americans who have been nurtured on the principles of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, will never yield the priceless heritage of their ideals, even though Great Britain should succumb and we should be left the only great democratic nation in the world. It is true that if government is to rest safely upon the consent of the governed, its citizens must be independent, intelligent, interested in government, and competent to govern. The people must be infused with the spirit of brotherly love; greed to control must be curbed. Men must recognize that they truly are their brothers' keepers. There is, in such a free society, no place for monopoly of privileges nor of great riches.

Whatever may be the underlying causes, something has certainly gone wrong. Today we find everywhere existing the most terrifying conditions ever known in the annals of history. Now, in liberty-loving France, in fact in all Hitler-controlled Europe, it is a crime, punishable by death, to listen to a forbidden radio broadcast. The French press has not had a reputation for decency which would entitle it to much sympathy over suppression, but it was, after all, an instrument which might have been used for the welfare of the nation.

ARE THE DARK AGES RETURNING?

History tells us the story of the rise of a marvelous civilization in Greece, more than 2,000 years ago. Even today we admire their architecture, and study the teachings of their poets and philosophers, the works of their great dramatists, and their ideals of government. Greece taught the world to think and to reason, and to express thought. That intellectual civilization was engrafted onto the vigorous Roman culture, through which that powerful nation taught the world to govern effectively.

Students seeking a parallel for some of the acts of the present tyrants of Europe must go back to the blackest of the dark periods of history to find governmental crimes and cruelties rivalling those enacted today. The date of the fall of Rome used to be given as A. D. 476, the year in which the government of Rome was moved from the Tiber to the Bosphorus and the Dark Ages engulfed Europe. Learning was driven into the monastaries; monarchs reigned who were unable to write their own names. For a thousand years, ruthlessness, cruelty, and ignorance prevailed. To those thinkers and philosophers who lived in that dark period it must have seemed impossible that any great change could take place. They must have regarded the condition of the world at that time as something permanent, even though there were flashes of light, and students have discovered a thread of progress even in those days. Is the European world returning again to the conditions of those most unhappy centuries following the fall of Rome, before the discovery of America and the scientific awakening and invention which we thought had made the world a brotherhood? Is free commerce and travel between nations a thing of the past? Are avenues of almost instant communication between continents to be closed?

During the Dark Ages human beings by the millions starved. Now again Europe and China are victims of starvation; thousands of helpless women and children have suffered in order to supply food for the German Army. During the Dark Ages prisoners of war were ruthlessly killed. During the Dark Ages organizations appeared that were truly sadistic. Today overlords exult in destroying any person who opposes them, first thrusting them into the terrible concentration camps. The Prussian tyrants evidently enjoy human suffering. During the Dark Ages men of learning were hunted down and destroyed; so it is today in Germany. Einstein, one of the greatest mathematicians of all time, is only one of the geniuses in exile. Historians, artists, writers, teachers, philosophers, physicians—all those who lead men forward and minister to them have been forced to leave their homelands. Should the Dark Ages again engulf peoples they will be even more terrible than they were when men first struggled toward the light, because rulers of the totalitarian nations possess superior scientific knowledge and more efficient instruments for cruelty and inhumanity. They will enforce their rulings upon those whose memories hold the glowing picture of days of freedom in democracies.

HITLER AIMS AT WORLD DOMINATION

The German dream of European domination is not new, and it has caused many wars. Now it is expanding into a determination to dominate and control the world. Today there are four totalitarian nations with a common bond—Japan, Russia, Italy, and Germany. Hitler of Germany is the dominating force of that group of aggressors. The war party of Japan is all powerful, and is driving the Japanese people from one conquest to another. Their war party has succeeded in arousing a religious frenzy of "patriotism," unequaled even among the Mohammedans. They carry out their far-reaching plans with a fanaticism entirely foreign to our ideals, and beyond our understanding.

Out of the revolutions of oppressed Russia has come Stalin, one of the strangest, coldest, cruelest rulers ever to appear on the face of the earth. He is still the unknown quantity in this world's chaos. Indications are that he and his followers are not happy in an alliance with Hitler, the master mind of all. It is probable that if the Russian war machine is thrown into direct contact with the Hitler machine it will flatten out as quickly and as completely as the great French Army melted in the early summer of 1940.

Third in the group of powerful personalities of the totalitarian world is Mussolini, of Italy. He is probably less cruel and ruthless than his prototype, and once had a touch of humanity. It is possible that civilization in Italy might move on under his rule, but he is today in the shadow, and must yield to Hitler, the supreme lord of all. Indeed, it was Mussolini's hand that held the dagger "plunged into the back of his neighbor" when that neighbor was struggling for its very existence. That act clearly exemplified his character—and his weakness.

No words of mine can properly describe Adolf Hitler, that terrifying fanatic who is moved by determination to gain world domination. The most authoritative source for a description of this dictator and his aims is his own book, "Mein Kampf," the German Bible of today and the blueprint for his international structure. It is compulsory reading in the schools of Germany and all conquered territory, and should be so for our leaders. It is unpleasant reading, hard reading, and utterly repulsive, but it is our duty to understand the motives of the one who has plunged men into this dark hour of the world's history. It is fortunate, indeed, that he has made his motives and his philosophy so clear to all the world. It would have been better for us had we taken cognizance of Hitler's declaration of purpose as soon as it was made. It is even more important to us than to Germany. I quote from his book (translation published by Reynal & Hitchcock):

> A state which, in the epoch of race poisoning, dedicates itself to the cherishing of its best racial elements, must some day be master of the world.

There is no doubt that he aims at world domination, and that he will stoop to anything to accomplish his purpose. He teaches in his Bible that it is perfectly right to tell a lie; the greater the falsification, the more likely it is to go over. A treaty or a promise means nothing to him. He breaks those given under the most solemn conditions, and boasts of it. Every American radio listener has had the opportunity to measure the man by his recent utterances and his terrifying articulations.

In Herr Hitler's "Bible" I also find these words:

> But if a nation succumbs in its struggle for the rights of mankind, then it was probably found weighing too lightly in the scales of destiny to justify its good fortune of being allowed to continue on this mortal globe. For if a man is not ready or able to fight for his existence, righteous Providence has already decreed his doom. The world is not intended for cowardly nations.

Clearly, in this citation, he worships the god of power, believing that if there is any right, it comes only from the physical power to enforce it. The United States must be able to resist his oncoming legions in the southern countries of this hemisphere, on the oceans, beneath the water, and in the air. The vital struggle for the domination of the Americas is not far in the future, and should Great Britain crack beneath the strain, it will be upon us in full force. I do not mean that Hitler's tanks and airplanes will threaten our territory, but his power and domination will be ever-present in a thousand ways, beginning with our trade and commerce, and attacking the fundamental concepts established by our Monroe Doctrine. Continental solidarity has been our dream. Can we make it an actuality?

HITLER'S RISE

You cannot laugh off Hitler by calling him a crazy fool, though he may be a paranoiac, and if so, he is most dangerous to the safety and security of world civilization. Less than 20 years ago he was an obscure and unknown artist, a leader of a little group of men who held their meetings in a beer hall. Today he rules supreme in the once-proud capitals of Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Warsaw, Amsterdam, Brussels, Oslo, Copenhagen, Prague, and is the real power in Rome. His word is law, and he brooks no interference. Perhaps his head is turned by the supreme authority vested in him. He has won, so far, on account of his well-defined plan (fully set forth in Mein Kampf), his ruthless methods and his perfectly mechanized, coordinated, synchronized war machine. He came into power in Germany the same year that Roosevelt assumed the Presidency, and was elected leader—Chancellor—in 1934, in August. Just think, that in 6 years he has become the dominating figure of the whole world!

Hitler's motivating idea was to make a war machine that could win, whichever way he turned it. He sapped the energies and monopolized the mechanical genius of the German people. Though Austrian born, he is a true Prussian. He fired Germany with ambition and stirred up the leaders to teach the German frau that it was her duty to bring into the world children who should be taught and trained to rely upon the superiority of the German race. Peace societies are unknown in the land he rules. There were no organizations signing remonstrances against war and stating that for reasons of conscience or other motives they would not fight. Such people were sent to concentration camps or quietly liquidated. All means of communication between men and groups were completely controlled. A factor contributing to Hitler's success has been the military and moral weakness of his opponents and the fact that he was able to destroy their influence by diverting and dividing their strength.

If in any place in the world a military method of destruction of human beings was discovered, the Germans adopted it and improved upon it. Gas, tanks, airplanes, submarines, they perfected them all. The gasoline engine, which has so changed all our habits and modified our economy, has contributed vastly to Hitler's military strength. The idea of the tracklayer came out of the Boer War, and it was English, but Hitler's German mechanics have made a bigger and better one than ever was dreamed of by the inventors. The airplane came from the United States. Hitler improved upon our invention and has made one that was faster, lighter in weight, and far more effective.

When the Treaty of Versailles provided that they could not have airplanes, followers of this dictator took a few boards, made themselves gliding planes and soared for thousands of feet through the air until they learned how to glide perfectly. The submarine was not of German origin, but the Germans improved upon it until it is today the terror of the seas, and now the stoutest craft that floats can be sent to the bottom of the ocean by a torpedo fired from a submarine. Hitler has won, so far, because he and his followers have produced the most effective, ruthless, and terrifying war machine that has ever been devised. Why did England overlook and ignore this when he was practicing in Spain?

THE GESTAPO

Secret police and secret organizations wreaking vengeance are not new in the history of the world. We read of them in the days of Rome. We find cruel stories of their activities in the Dark Ages, and throughout the course of history. They were all terrible, but as nothing compared to the Gestapo. When Hitler came to prominence several years ago, he early became associated with Heinrich Himmler, the head of the Gestapo, who is the embodiment of all that is bad, inhuman, and cruel. His secret police is an army in itself, larger than our standing Army, including the National Guard. It will never be known how many men and women have been "liquidated," for no records are kept. There is no trial, no judge, no jury; only torture and death.

A German was talking with a friend some months ago and telling him of the efficiency of the German organization. Said the American, "That may be true, but if I hear someone at my back door at 4 o'clock in the morning, I know it is the milk man, and I can go back to sleep." That tells the story. Thousands upon thousands of people who might have led revolutions against tyranny—earnest, honest, thoughtful, brave men, have been invited to put on their clothes before sunrise while German agents of the Gestapo stood guard, and then they were taken away, never to be seen again. If they try to escape, they are simply killed, or at the least taken to concentration camps and starved to death. The prison camps of the czars on the frozen steppes of Siberia were comfortable, indeed, compared to the hell holes into which talented leaders have been cast. The acts of the Gestapo in Austria, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Norway, Holland, Belgium, Denmark, and now in France will never be wholly known as no records are kept and no reports made. The tragic story may be pieced together someday so it will be burned into the pages of history as a horrible warning to those who value freedom lightly. Control of the press, radio, and all means of communication is absolute.

Years ago, your ancestors and mine could have gone into the forest, carved out stout staves, and been ready to battle for their rights. That is all of the past. Revolution against armed dictators is well-nigh impossible. Now, those who would protest must have munitions factories, chemical plants, and years in which to prepare to fight. When our Government came into being, a revolution was possible. Blacksmiths could hammer out the guns for the Revolutionary soldiers. Someone has said it was not Jefferson who made effective the declaration of the equality of man, but it was Mr. Colt, the one who put the revolver in men's hands. As they used to say on our western frontiers, "Smith and Wesson made all men equal." Inventions like the radio and the telephone, which should have been blessings, and the armored car, the airplane, and the submarine have combined with the Gestapo to make Hitler's army the most feared, most hated, most effective organization ever known. The Gestapo is dedicated to the destruction of great men of independence, men like Bolivar, Lafayette, Kosciusko, Washington, Franklin, and Lincoln—heroes who have fought the battles for the rights of humanity through all the ages.

THE "TROJAN HORSE" AND "FIFTH COLUMN"

Nowadays we have historic incidents recalled to our minds by the constant use of two expressions relating to espionage and deceit between nations. Ten centuries before the coming of the Saviour the Greeks laid siege to the city of Troy, and the besieged inhabitants bravely defended their city. The Greeks, concluding that they could not scale the walls and take the city, constructed a large wooden horse and left it outside the city walls as they withdrew into the blackness of the night. The Trojans went out to plunder the abandoned camp of the Greek army, found the huge wooden horse, and brought it within the city gates, believing it a peace offering. The soldiers, emerging from the horse, opened the gates and made it possible for the Greek army to pour into Troy, slaughtering its trusting inhabitants. From this story have come the expressions "Beware of Greeks bearing gifts" and "The Trojan Horse."

The term "fifth column" is of modern origin. In the recent struggle in Spain one of Franco's generals said, "We have four columns approaching Madrid and we have a 'fifth column' within Madrid," meaning traitors to the Loyalist cause among the residents of the capital city.

These methods of penetration have been adopted, refined, and improved upon by the modern warriors from Berlin. Never in human history has deceit been used as effectively and with such long-time planning as within the past few years. It is well known that traitors in Austria opened the gates from within and made possible Hitler's first great victory. These methods defeated the Czechs, that small group of industrious, liberty-loving people. We hear that people living in Norway themselves gave false orders and guided German troops. The "fifth column" was so effective in Denmark that there was very little resistance left in that country, and in Holland that weapon worked efficiently and speedily. What shall we say of France? The real history will probably not be known for many years, but there can be no doubt that the "fifth column" was largely responsible for the German victory.

The knowledge of the treachery which has been so disastrously practiced elsewhere should not lead us to an orgy of suspicion and "red baiting." There are undoubtedly enemies within our gates who are seeking to undermine the morale of the American people. They are trying to secure aid stealthily and they are trying to influence public opinion in the most arrogant manner as well as with the most subtle devices. The American people must learn how to evaluate the propaganda of the printed word. We may well fear certain kinds of activities, and our Government has provided a means of locating and controlling them. There is an agency within the Department of Justice responsible for investigating subversive activities. When legislation is needed, they will recommend it. Cruel suspicion and slander should be avoided.

DEMOCRACY HAS NOT FAILED

Democracies in Europe have appeared weak and defenseless when fronting dictatorships in battle or in diplomacy; nevertheless I am not willing to admit that democracy has failed for all time. Like Christianity, it has never really been tried. The idea that a free people could govern themselves is relatively new in the history of the world, beginning with our own country. I am well aware of the fact that Plato talked about the ideal republic, and Rome claimed at one time to have had a republic, but not in the sense that we speak of democracy today. Their civilizations were built on slavery and serfdom and on an aristocracy. Those who made and enforced the laws were of a specially privileged class. When the first comers to this country settled on the Atlantic border they brought with them a burning zeal for freedom, liberty, and self-government. These ideas developed slowly and quietly until the period of the American Revolution, 165 years ago. Men like Thomas Jefferson, Thomas Paine, and Patrick Henry then formulated the American concept that the people who are governed should make the laws, acting through representatives chosen by their votes. This was a new and startlingly revolutionary idea. Nowhere in Asia had it been dreamed of, nowhere in Africa, nowhere in South America, and only in the minds of a very few in Europe had it been thought of until it came to flower in North America in 1776.

The French soldiers who were brought over during the American Revolution to fight with Washington were sent by a Bourbon King of France because he wanted to cripple England.

Many times have I said that had the kings and aristocracy of Europe really understood what the coming of our American Republic meant, they would have crushed our revolutionary forefathers with overpowering armies, and men like Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, and Adams would have paid for their boldness with their lives. Fortunately, the rulers were dullards and did not grasp the full meaning of the Declaration of Independence. In our own country there was, as ever, an influential group which deplored the action of the patriots. It is said that the largest "chamber of commerce" of that day rushed a letter to the English King disclaiming any association with or approval of such rebellious leaders as the signers of the Declaration. The liberals were unpopular, even then.

Without the American Revolution there would have been no French Revolution in 1789. The French Revolution was fostered by the ideas of Rousseau, Voltaire, and other thinkers, and stimulated by the American Revolution. The American idea influenced the whole Western World, and the divine right of kings gave ground everywhere to the new philosophy. In 1848 it looked as if liberty and freedom might sweep Germany, but the revolution failed, and its leaders became refugees in America, to which they made valuable contributions. Many American families of German ancestry trace origins to the scholars and leaders who joined us then, becoming generals, statesmen, and teachers.

THE ENEMIES WITHIN OUR GATES

When we think of the political bosses of our big cities, when we hear of the corruption in State government, and when we learn of questionable action in Congress through appropriation of public funds for private benefit or special privileges secured by evil lobbies, and of things that have gone wrong in public life from ocean to ocean, we are apt to become discouraged and say, "What is the use? Democracy is a failure. The people are so dishonest that they cannot rule themselves."

I know all these shortcomings and fully understand the attitude of utter discouragement. I know how public opinion is swayed by the newspapers, by lobbies, and by organized propaganda. I know how Representatives in Congress shake and quake and fail to vote their convictions because of the drive of newspapers through worked-up public opinion back home. A case in point occurred recently when 330 Members of the House voted for an unconstitutional bill to deport a certain individual without trial and without hearing. There was no law nor precedent for it. It was purely the drive of hysteria, largely worked up and promoted by those who had been harmed by this man's activities. It was the boldest attack in our history upon the citadel of our liberties. I know many voters are uneducated, many do not speak nor understand our language; some are criminals; others do not care and vote on name familiarity or follow the drift of the so-called public-opinion polls. The indifferent citizens are a powerful "fifth column." I know, too, that money largely influences elections of officials from constable to President.

Still, with all its faults, all its shortcomings, and all the vices of its citizens, this Government of ours in America today is the best government the world has ever known and the one most worthy of preservation so that it may be perfected. So I repeat, democracy has not failed; it has not really been tried, even in our United States, and in Europe where it has been attempted it has had even less of a chance to survive. That failure in Europe is the reason it is today so easy to crush the free governments with the iron hand of oppression, especially when backed up with a perfectly mechanized war machine.

Those who cry out against "politicians" forget that politics implement government. The kind of politics we tolerate determines the kind of government we shall have. Our dangers spring from special privilege and monopoly. There are those who seek every weak spot in our armor to attack us in order to monopolize government itself for their own power and enrichment. Just now, finding us defenseless, they are attacking with renewed and desperate violence.

We shall not be helpless in the face of any of these difficulties if our people will take the first essential step toward the preservation of our democracy. That means that they shall cease to be indifferent and will seriously study the situation, weighing the consequences of any action which the Nation may take. National unity is fundamental. No enemy can be overcome and no plan can be successfully put into effect without general approval. There are conditions which deny liberty. We must make certain that we maintain the conditions which guarantee liberty.

HOW WOULD HITLER FIGHT US?

It is clear that Hitler will pay but little attention to the United States until he has brought the British Empire to its knees and dictated terms of peace. Even if that momentous event should occur, it is not probable that he will start any invasion of this country. Should Hitler secure a part of the British navy and be able, within the next few years, to construct more formidable fighting ships, and make satisfactory terms with Japan, it is very probable that we might feel the full force of his power in a naval war, brought on by some dispute over the islands of the Western Hemisphere. Should Hitler obtain bases and landing fields in the islands of the Caribbean Sea, and should he rain bombs on the Panama Canal from these bases as he is doing today upon England, there is no doubt but what we would be in the conflict.

Many believe that the big battleship as a war weapon has been supplanted by the airplane and the submarine. Representative CARL VINSON, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, said recently on the floor of the House that we have simply got to continue building big battleships as long as Japan and Hitler are building them. We must be able to fight them with whatever weapons they may choose. There is no great probability of a German advance into this country through Mexico, though there are those among us who fear this contingency. Military students do not believe that Hitler, even with his marvelous war machine, could get the food, ammunition, and equipment necessary to advance his army onto American soil.

There is, however, no doubt that Hitler will fight us economically. The totalitarian nations control all Europe today, with the Nazi machine in supreme command. Our surplus agricultural and industrial products cannot be sold in Hitler-dominated countries without Hitler's permission. The fight at first is going to be in the economic world, where we are at a great disadvantage. It is not expected that shells will be dropped on Washington, D. C., New York, nor Portland, Oreg. We will probably not feel the effect of bombs that will destroy buildings, but we surely will feel the effect of an economic bombardment that may prove destructive to our present financial set-up. The trade relations with other nations which have been the bulwark of our capitalistic system are definitely broken or endangered. This will force upon us a totally new economic way of life which I shall discuss in a moment.

WHAT MUST WE DEFEND?

This is not the first time the United States has felt called upon to make its position clear to the world in relation to the nations of this hemisphere. President Monroe's message to Congress of December 2, 1823, set forth what has become known as the Monroe Doctrine which was never, however, ratified by any congressional legislation, though it has become extremely important in American politics. That message announced that the United States would not interfere in European affairs, but would view with displeasure any attempt by the European powers to subject the nations of the New World to their political systems. The Congress, during this session, has undertaken to define our present concept of the Monroe Doctrine.

Our Government has been greatly concerned to promote harmonious diplomatic and trade relations with our southern neighbors. This year there was celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the first Pan American Conference. Our diplomats are just now meeting to determine the points of agreement among the nations of the New World so far as present European relations are concerned. They have proposed a joint trusteeship, during the emergency, of the European colonies in the western world. American solidarity, in event of a Hitler victory in Europe, is a matter of such vital importance that many sacrifices may well be made in order to bring it about. The difficulty of undertaking the defense of South American countries against the encroachment of Hitler is that it commits us to defend many nations which do not want to be defended.

Many careful students believe that we ought not to extend our protective area much farther south than the eastern bulge of South America. Apparently, Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, Paraguay, and much of Brazil wish to tie up with the totalitarian idea and form governments on that model. They speak the Spanish language. They do not have our system of government nor our way of life. Germany and Italy have penetrated these countries for years. They control trade and commerce, air lines, even the governments themselves. These countries can easily enter into business and economic relations with the totalitarian nations of Europe. In fact, they are now relying on the profits from such trade.

Many of these countries are directly competitive with our agricultural production. Might it not be best to let them go to the Hitler-controlled world rather than to attempt to force them unwillingly, into our orbit? In most parts of South America they have very little idea of real democracy in government. Dictators rule there. Their products find a ready market in Hitler-dominated territories. They need the machines and industrial products which the totalitarian nations can supply, and barter is their method of trade. I was told a few days ago in one of our departments in Washington that agents of Hitler were now in parts of South America contracting for wheat and beef, offering in exchange machinery and goods made in Germany and conquered countries, and also directly competing with our industrial products.

We must, at least, throw a ring of steel around every island in the Caribbean Sea, the northern part of South America, the Panama Canal, Central America, Mexico, and Canada. The Hawaiian Islands are a part of the United States, made so by the law of admission, and must so remain. Pearl Harbor, one of the finest in the world, must be our western outpost. The western defense for the Panama Canal must be the Galapagos Islands. All of the Aleutian Islands and Alaska are now ours, and must so remain, with the fishing rights pertaining thereto. Air bases are being placed in Alaska for the protection of this sector.

The Philippine Islands wanted their independence and, under present law, they will get it in 1946. It was a very unfortunate venture when the United States entered upon the imperialistic policy which forced us to be interested in the Orient. Now we must allow the Philippine Islands to go their way as they have neither the inclination nor the ability to be part of a real democracy. They have never been, and cannot be, an integral part of this Government. Our possession invites trouble and involves great expense and difficulty. It goes without saying that Canada must have full protection as a democracy of utmost importance to us.

WILL OUR SOLDIERS BE SENT OVERSEAS?

The President, in his message to the Congress recently, made known his stand when he said that our soldiers should not be sent to European battlefields. I believe the Congress is in accord with that sentiment. It is alarming to think of the future of the United States should Great Britain break under the strain, and be obliged to sue for peace, as France has done. She does not need manpower, but she does desperately need mechanized fighting equipment.

MECHANIZED WARFARE

The internal-combustion engine has completely changed methods of warfare since the last war. No longer can battles be won nor the fate of empires settled by slow-moving battalions, either in open or close formation. The internal-combustion engine has made the submarine effective and deadly. Improved to the *n*th degree, it has made the tank an efficient weapon of war. A few evenings ago, Congressmen and Senators were invited to see a moving picture of German warfare. There were airplanes in such droves that they must have almost darkened the sky, and out from those planes, into the air, stepped armed infantrymen; with parachutes opening, they came down in clouds.

In this war Hitler and his efficient staff have simply outgeneraled, outmaneuvered, and outfought every nation against which they have moved. They are fully prepared and experienced after a concentrated effort directed toward destruction of many other nations. These modern methods adopted by Hitler first employ a large squadron of heavy bombers which drop bombs with terrific force, and spread terror everywhere. On their return trips they strafe with machine-gun fire anything visible on the ground. This is followed by a wedge of lighter planes with smaller bombs, many of them incendiary. Then appear squadrons of air transports bearing parachute troops. After these troops have been dropped on predesignated areas they return for other loads and they also strafe the ground on their return trip. Then the tanks appear on the ground, huge tracklayers weighing 30 to 60 tons, with lighter tanks on their flanks. Then the infantry moves up, not on horseback nor afoot but in speedy lorries or squad cars. Few men have actually been used in the initial stages of the attack; just highly trained technicians and engineers.

What a contrast to the slow-moving advance and regular siege work for which the Maginot line was built! No wonder the French were unprepared. Such perfect machinery can be met only by the same sort of a machine more efficiently managed, maneuvered, and coordinated. Britain must literally fill the air with its fighting planes and drive back with deadly precision the fast German planes. When armed tanks appear they must be met with armed tanks of greater strength and power. Indeed, it is a fight to the death, with no quarter. It is either "we or they." Either democracy must disappear or it must arm itself and be prepared if attacked to give blow for blow in this highly technical mechanized warfare. The preparation of such war machines calls for concentration of effort and wealth and purpose to a degree never before devoted to such a purpose, outside of Germany. It is rumored that the French failed because their leaders lacked patriotism and driving power and her industrial leaders demanded financial profits. Yes, industry as well as savings and men must yield to the necessity for national defense. We must not repeat that terrible error.

It is now stated that the Germans lost the first battle of the Marne in September 1914 because their front lines lacked ammunition. In this war no German advance, so far as we know, has lacked ammunition nor food nor any kind of supplies. Moving close behind every advance made by the German machine there has come in quantity ammunition, food, and all essential supplies. The rapidity of the German movement has made it impossible for its poorly equipped enemies to offer adequate resistance.

PREPAREDNESS—THE DEFENSE PROGRAM

There are four groups of citizens who will first be called upon to sacrifice personal interests in support of the national defense program. Their response will reveal to the world, as well as to our own citizens, our strength and our weaknesses. If any one of these groups begins by demanding exemption from the responsibilities which citizens face in a national emergency our democracy will indeed be imperilled. It is obvious that these groups are our industry, labor, taxpayers, and young men citizens. If industry should demand cash on the barrel head before undertaking manufacture of airplanes and defense weapons; if labor, which has been stabilized by legislative enactments of the past 8 years, should hesitate to perform its part without increased financial assurances; if taxpayers should revolt against the necessary sharing of income; and if youth should be found unwilling to dedicate to government a year of service we shall face a tragic era. Our country, also, would be left exposed to attack by those who are capable of united effort. I am confident that those who belong to each group so prize the privileges of our democracy that they will be found united against the sabotage of unwillingness to serve.

This is no time for recriminations because of our state of unpreparedness. Hitler moves swiftly. A year ago no one could have foretold what has passed during the summer months of 1940. We are now forced to take an inventory of our resources and to take action predicated upon the movements of the German war machine. The national defense program is going forward with superb efficiency so far as governmental organization is concerned. The President has selected advisers of known competence. These men are great industrialists who are sacrificing time and high salaries to the cause. They have been chosen because of ability and not for personal or political reasons. The Congress has cooperated with appropriations, authorizations, and legislation. Next comes the transformation of existing plants and the building of great new plants. The tools for making the war machines must first be made.

We have entered into a long-time program. The questions of taxes and profits may halt progress. It is almost unbelievable that a great industrial organization would hesitate to proceed with defense orders unless certain financial guaranties could be made. Naturally, they have a duty to investors, to owners of stocks and bonds, but a prior duty to government should cause every obstacle to be swept aside. What profits would be assured them under Hitler? Are profits more sacred than life or the freedom which thousands must yield, giving up gainful employment and the preparation for professional life?

Neither the Congress, nor the President can wholly solve the problem of defense. It rests with our people to cooperate after appropriations have been made and equipment built.

SELECTIVE SERVICE TRAINING

Liberal American speakers have, time and again, expressed pride in the fact that we maintain no great standing army. Thousands of American boys in universities and colleges have signed pledges never to join the Army nor to engage in any foreign war. American boys in land-grant colleges have been allowed to choose whether they should or should not take military training. Mothers by the thousands have taught their boys that they should never take part in military training nor war in any form. Mothers have sung with fervor "I didn't raise my boy to be a soldier." The feeling has been that military preparedness but courted war. We believed we could live at peace with our fellow men if we chose so to do. We did not expect that great nations would be defeated and subjugated until we also would be expected to pass under the yoke, but our enslavement would be economic.

I once heard Bryan say—

> We will not tolerate a huge standing army. Should we ever be attacked, a million men will spring to arms over night to defend our priceless heritage of freedom and liberty.

Eloquent words these, but how foolish they sound today. How helpless our soldiers would be with their rifles in an attempt to stop the mechanized army of Hitler. Overnight training of our devoted boys would fail completely against the life-trained soldiers of Hitler. How different our training here from that in Germany. There, every boy is taught from the beginning that the greatest reward of living is to fight for the fatherland, and that the most glorious death is on the battlefields, advancing the German cause. They sing Deutschland über Alles—Germany over all.

They have been regimented almost from infancy and taught to use the mechanized equipment of their most powerful modern army. Their German mothers have willingly bred warriors, have trained them, and dedicated them to conquest. They force us to counter with adequate preparation. May we never come to regard human life as subject to the purposes of aggressive war!

Now, spurred by public demand unprecedented in vehemence and unanimity, our country is building battleships, airplanes, and armored fighting equipment. Who will operate these war machines? Our vocational schools should plan their courses to make it possible to give young people this valuable training supplemental to other requirements. The more fully training and preparation can be combined with the usual ways of life of all our young people, the better it will be for them and for the country. There must be thousands of men technically trained, and other thousands of men to serve in a secondary capacity, or the equipment will be useless. Shall we depend upon volunteers, leaving to peaceful pursuits and financial gain those too indifferent, too fearful, or too greedy to volunteer? As all our citizens are supposed to be equal and equally to enjoy the Nation's blessing, shall they equally share in the task of defense, and how shall this be accomplished? I wish to make it clear that defense does not, and, I hope, never will mean war.

Very reluctantly I have reached the conclusion that we must inaugurate some kind of selective service. I look for the early enactment of a law which will make it possible for every man to find his place and be able to fill it, should it be necessary to defend our country and its institutions. I have nine grandsons, the eldest of age for service and flying a plane in order to be ready. I do not think any of the nine young men have a desire to win fame on battlefields; they just naturally will not develop into military or naval men. My namesake, a boy of 15, is deeply interested in the cattle ranch, and he hopes some day to produce more and better white-faced calves than did his grandfather. It is a sad thought to me that these young men, who desire to read and study and spend their lives in industry and on farms, will be obliged to take intensive training so that they may not be at a serious disadvantage should they be called upon to defend their native land.

It is my belief that a selective-service program is our only hope and their only protection, and that it is the only satisfactory and just plan for a democracy. I believe American young men will willingly ascribe to the pledge adopted by a church conference recently:

> We pledge ourselves to any sacrifice * * * that may be required for the defense of democracy against every foe, without and within.

If sanity returns to the world, the training will not have been in vain, and each man will always remember with satisfaction that he was one of those who played his full part during the great emergency. Without the selective-service plan, the bravest and most valuable are sacrificed for the protection of those who do not feel their responsibilities. I can never forget the words used by the father of a young man who was hurried from a threshing machine on an Oregon farm to perish within 6 weeks in the Argonne. The blank called for "cause of death." The father wrote, "Unpreparedness." Unless we train young men, we might, in case of attack, be sacrificing them just as this boy was sacrificed.

The volunteer system will not meet the needs, because it might disrupt our industry. Great Britain suffered because skilled men were removed from the factories. The government, and not the individual, decides in an emergency where each man should be placed most advantageously. It is better for the citizen that the government should determine this matter. The choice of type of service can be made only by those who have the whole plan in mind. Qualified men are already clamoring for an opportunity to register so their skills may be used by the country. Undoubtedly there should be a registration of all citizens in order to learn who is skilled in each type of labor, industry, or profession which would be called into play in a defense program. Those who are unskilled would be assured of technical training which would be advantageous in either military or civilian life. Every person who has a stake in the country will, very naturally, desire to have a place in its defense program.

Any selective training bill will have most careful study in committee, and full House and Senate debate. No action will be taken until the Congress and the Nation are thoroughly informed. It is important that legislation should be drawn with meticulous care. Legislators decide on matters of fundamental policy. Some think it better to require young people to serve during the college years, others believe they should be allowed to finish college. It is undoubtedly true that if the college course is interrupted many may not return to complete it. The importance of completion of college work appealed so strongly to me that I secured passage through the Oregon Legislature of the soldiers' education bill, following the World War.

I am not prepared to commend any particular plan or bill. I desire to deal only with basic principles. Just how any program would affect citizens cannot be determined until the Congress decides how many will be needed for training at any particular time, and what demands will be made for each type of training. It is altogether possible that the period of service would not be lengthy, and that the training would have compensating physical and material values.

One of the most significant statements I have recently read is that France has repudiated its Revolutionary motto, "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity," which has rung through that land for 150 years. No more are the French allowed to sing the Marseillaise, the most inspiring song for defense of liberty ever written. If we consign our defense program solely to the hands of those who volunteer to sacrifice the necessary months or years to purposeful effort toward defense preparedness, shall we also as a nation forswear liberty, equality, and fraternity?

WHAT DEMOCRACY REALLY MEANS

Democracy is a method of government of laws and not of men, the laws being made with the consent of the governed. Most democracies have a constitution or fundamental law. Our Constitution was immediately supplemented by the first 10 amendments, known as our Bill of Rights, which guarantee free speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of worship according to the dictates of conscience, freedom of the press, and the right to possess property, denying anyone, including the Government, the right to take that property without due process of law. Our democracy guarantees us the right of trial by jury. Laws shall be made only by duly elected representatives of the people. The new afternoon newspaper in New York has used as its editorial motto words which are especially significant today:

Liberty is always dangerous, but it is the safest thing we have.

In totalitarian countries the state is everything, the individual nothing. The dictator's word is absolute law, never questioned. There is no privilege of habeas corpus. There is no right of appeal nor privilege of petition. The Code Napoleon, the civil law of France, which has been the pride of the Latin nations for a century and a half, will soon be superseded by the decrees of dictators. Hitler has defined the democracies as being a chickenyard with all chickens cackling at once. He has also said that a democracy is a government by chatter. Under his reign, nobody cackles. They obey or they are liquidated. Dictators rule by creating fear.

OUR STORE OF GOLD

For centuries, trade between nations has been balanced by the gold ounce, the yardstick of commerce. Under Hitler, this measurement is abolished and paper money is no longer based upon metal. All Hitler-controlled nations have a managed currency. The world is returning to a system of barter, or the trading of products for products, which existed centuries ago. For instance, a country would take so many sacks of coffee and exchange for them a certain amount of machinery or industrial manufactured products, the ratio of values to be determined by edict of the dictator. The value of gold in a Hitler world is unpredictable. Hitler has declared "Gold is a dogma."

Speaking a few months ago to a group of Congressmen in Washington a lecturer recently returned from Germany said: "The German paper money just does not make sense." In Germany, the workman recognizes the paper that he gets for his labors simply as a receipt by which he is entitled to a certain amount of food or a certain number of articles which he desires. If he holds cards for more than he needs, the government uses the balance. Hitler does not recognize past obligations, bonds, nor promises to pay. Should he prevail throughout Europe, we must completely revise our ideas in regard to our monetary system, as we in this hemisphere will stand alone on a metal base for money. Under our system people have been encouraged to thrift. They have accumulated savings and have enjoyed interest paid on those savings. There is nothing in the new European system which parallels this.

We have here now the capitalistic system, under which we have piled up riches—for some—and on which we have built our hopes for universal financial well-being. Interest profits, dividends, security in investment, money as a measure of value; under this system we have developed the most luxurious civilization of all time. It is impossible for us to see how all the great business and the inventive achievements of the last century and a half could have been made without that system of financial reward for active, industrious men. Hitler may be striking the final blow to that system, just as the use of gunpowder is said to have ended the feudal system. The capitalistic system, if it is to be maintained at all in a Hitlerized world, must be revamped to operate under changed conditions and within a limited area.

We have today in the United States 80 percent of the monetary gold of the world. We have taken it in exchange for balances due us in world trade. We have paid for it in wheat, cotton, and industrial products. It is inconceivable that civilized nations, which have depended upon precious metal as a basis for trade and a measure of value, could abandon it so quickly. We should keep our gold, for in a few years, sanity will again return to the world and old values again will be recognized. England and the United States have just had conferences seeking to work out a plan for handling the gold situation.

FOREIGN TRADE

The following table, which gives some export statistics from this country for the year 1937, is enlightening—and alarming. It shows the percentage of each of the exported articles which found its foreign market in the Third Reich or countries now under its control:

Product exported:	Percent of total exports
Copper	42
Cotton	37
Oil	27
Tobacco and machine tools	18
Automobiles	15
Wheat exports	42.7

What does this table mean? We have already been notified by the German foreign office that we must play the game according to Nazi rules, or there will be no trade. We can sell Hitler probably a million bales of cotton, if we take in exchange for it tanks, airplanes, and machinery, the very things we want to sell. We might as well make up our minds now to reorganize our economy, because there is no question that our foreign trade is gone in Hitler-controlled countries. He is intent upon developing that trade with other countries which will take the products of the countries he controls—on his terms.

OUR PRODUCTION MUST BE CONTROLLED

Industry has long controlled its own production so as not to ruin its price structure and markets. A slight measure of control has been introduced into agriculture in the United States following Government subsidies and guaranties which would bankrupt the Nation if not kept within bounds. Even this has been resented by some who have not understood the matter. I realize how drastically further control of the production of wheat will affect our Pacific Northwest. In a good year we produce about 85,000,000 bushels of wheat, mostly of the soft variety. Seed, feed, and home consumption will absorb a little more than half that quantity. Why produce with no prospect of market? The South will ordinarily produce 14,000,000 bales of cotton. Our home consumption will absorb about 6,000,000 bales. Why produce to full capacity when it cannot be sold for money, and cannot be used in this country? For sale of these surplus crops we have depended on foreign markets, mostly in Europe. Those markets are gone. South America can meet the demand.

To me it appears foolish to say to the American farmer: "The Government will in no way control your production, but will guarantee your price." That means we would raise millions upon millions of pounds of cotton and bushels of wheat more than we need for our own consumption—and no place for it to be sold. We can sell but precious little in Asia, with Japan controlling the sea lanes. We can sell none in Africa, and, if we are sensible, we must know that we are barred from Hitler-controlled countries in Europe. We might as well face the facts and allow no demagogue to tell us that the American farmer will have freedom to produce as he sees fit. Because of changes in Europe, that control must reach, I fear, into every farm, hamlet, and village in this broad land, from ocean to ocean.

TAXES

Congress has, since the 1st day of May of this year, authorized the expenditure of $10,000,000,000 for defense, and has appropriated, directly and indirectly, most of that authorization. The total authorization is 10 times the assessed value of the State of Oregon. We have promised to raise part of that sum by taxes levied on the people, and the balance we will borrow in the money markets of the United States. Our whole system of taxation must be revised. I fear we must be taxed "until it hurts." That is not a popular thing to say, but it is the truth. Today in England inheritance taxes take the larger part of an estate, the amount depending upon the size of the estate; income taxes take a generous portion and reach down into the smaller income brackets—from 42½ to 90 percent of net income. The tax on every gallon of gasoline in England is 15 cents; this is about the retail price in Washington. Taxes must be based on ability to pay, and must take whatever portion may be necessary to arm our Nation for defense.

CAN ISOLATED AMERICA SURVIVE?

It is my firm belief that an area including the North American Continent, Central America, and the northern part of South America, the Hawaiian Islands, the Aleutian Islands—all can survive, and be self-contained and prosperous within the boundary lines which I have indicated. Hitler, Stalin, Mussolini, and the war party of Japan cannot live forever. They are just human beings, and must answer the fatal summons in the not-far-distant future. The history of the world teaches us that conquerors and dictators have been unable to pass their powers on to successors of their choice. Alexander tried it and failed; the Caesars failed; Charlemagne could not perpetuate his empire; Napoleon could not provide for his successors. There is no better example than the Mongols of the twelfth century, Genghis Khan and Tamerlane, leaders without peers in history, who were unable to rule through successors after they passed. Sanity must certainly return in time and until that happy day comes, our country can survive, and as a democracy. We have all the food we need. We have all the genius we require. Most strategic metals and minerals can be found somewhere within the boundaries indicated or substitutes provided. We are entirely self-sufficient, but we will be forced to changes in economic life which will work hardships on all classes—on the privileged classes, those who seek to monopolize government and prosperity and are now organizing to demand it—on the laborers, farmers—yes—all will feel the pinch of contraction and change.

Hitler has decreed that America must be crushed. That means that America must be made subservient to his wishes or chart an independent course, backed by strong defense. Let not those who enjoy great wealth think they could prosper under the rule of the Nazi. It is probably true that the collapse in France was largely due to the fact that the rich industrialists refused to give up their dividends and profits, and demanded privileges when France was straining every nerve and every energy to produce the machinery necessary to meet the oncoming German hordes. Perhaps the laborers of France did not devote themselves early and late to the production of the war machines. There seemed to be astonishing lack of coordinated effort. Perhaps what is known as the Cliveden set in England, the group that has ruled the British Empire for decades, was largely to blame for the failure of the British Empire fully to prepare to meet the German menace. We do recall that Chamberlain said after Munich, "This appeasement will prevent war in our time." Perhaps labor, too, jealous over what they had won, refused to do their part. It is certain that all the countries conquered by the Hitler war machine have been honeycombed with "fifth columns," by German plan or by treachery of citizens.

NATIONAL UNITY OUR DEPENDENCE

It is evident today that one of our greatest obstacles in America is the activity of those who would slow down production, stir up internal strife, and destroy morale. There are others who rush to Washington to demand a share of spoils, willing to hazard and delay the defense program for some local or personal gain. Where the ship should be built, or the airport located should be determined by possible military necessity and not by public clamor. We must present a common front, devoted to the preservation of our form of government, willing to forego advantages and to make sacrifices.

I have faith that our form of government, based on the consent of the governed, for which so many men have suffered and died, shall not perish.

A writer in a Washington paper recently struck a responsive chord in my mind when he quoted the following lines written by the Greek poet, Aristophanes, 23 centuries ago. They do seem applicable "to the present barbaric period in which bloody belligerency has all but supplanted rest and peace."

From the outcry and subtlety of hatreds
Give us rest * * *
Fuse again the kindreds of nations,
With nobler purposes touch our souls.

PROVIDING FOR THE RANK OF LIEUTENANT GENERAL IN PANAMA AND HAWAII

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3200) to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army in the military departments of Panama and Hawaii.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEARSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this bill meet with the approval of the minority members of the committee?

Mr. MAY. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that the House Committee on Military Affairs gave extended consideration to a companion bill and finally decided, after thorough consideration of the matter, to take up this Senate bill. After we had considered it very thoroughly and the objections had all been ironed out, the committee reported this bill unanimously and favorably. There was objection raised by one member of the committee who wished an amendment placed in the bill. I discussed the matter with the gentleman, and he has agreed to waive his amendment and is not interested in it at all at this time.

Mr. MICHENER. In other words, the Senate bill is as the bill was agreed to by the House Committee?

Mr. MAY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. It is with the consent of the minority members of the committee that the gentleman asks for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MAY. It was a unanimous report of the whole committee, the minority included, with the exception of the one gentleman whose grievance I have discussed.

Mr. FISH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how many lieutenant generals do we now have?

Mr. MAY. Frankly, I do not recall, but I believe it is stated in the report. This bill relates only to the two lieutenant generals at our two foreign posts, the Panama Canal, which the gentleman from New York knows very well is our life line, and Honolulu, which is the main outpost for the protection of the Panama Canal.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman does not know whether we have two or four lieutenant generals now?

Mr. MAY. I believe it is four, or perhaps five, with these two.

Mr. FISH. What is the increase in salary?

Mr. MAY. Five hundred dollars a year.

Mr. FISH. That is all the difference in pay between a major general and a lieutenant general—$500?

Mr. MAY. That is right.

Mr. FISH. This bill comes here with a unanimous report?

Mr. MAY. Yes; with no dissent whatever.

Mr. FISH. The bill covers only the departments of Hawaii and Panama?

Mr. MAY. That is right.

Mr. HINSHAW. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if these appointments to lieutenant generalships are permanent or temporary appointments?

Mr. MAY. They apply just during the incumbency of the general at that station.

Mr. HINSHAW. This is the same sort of appointment we make for the Chief of Staff at the present time?

Mr. MAY. That is exactly right.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what will be the additional cost to our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury if this bill is passed?

Mr. MAY. Five hundred dollars a year, as I have just stated in answer to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it necessary to have these additional generals in order to provide for an adequate national defense?

Mr. MAY. General Marshall tells us that it is vitally important at this time because they are badly and urgently needed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army", approved August 5, 1939, is hereby amended to include the major generals of the Regular Army specifically assigned by the Secretary of War to command the Panama Canal and Hawaiian Departments.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS], a member of the Committee on Rules, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the House Committee on Military Affairs on the bill which has just been passed be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The committee report is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred S. 3200 to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army in the military departments of Panama and Hawaii, having considered the same, submit the following report thereon, with the recommendation that it do pass:

The purpose of this measure is to provide that major generals of the Regular Army especially assigned by the Secretary of War to command the Panama Canal Department and the Hawaiian Department shall have the rank and title of lieutenant general while so serving; that major generals while holding the rank and title of lieutenant general, under the provisions of this bill, shall be entitled to receive the pay and allowances of a major general, and in addition shall be entitled to receive the same personal money for allowances as are now and may hereafter be prescribed by law for vice admirals of the Navy.

The Panama Canal and Hawaiian Departments are Territorial commands of great importance to our national defense and the steps which have been taken to solve our defense problems in this hemisphere have greatly increased their strategic and international importance and have added materially to the responsibilities of the commanders of these two areas with their increased garrisons.

In conformity with paragraph 2a of rule 13 of the House Rules there are printed in parallel columns the provisions of the existing law and the provisions of the proposed bill:

EXISTING LAW (Public, No. 290—76th Cong.)	PROVISIONS OF PROPOSED BILL
"That the major generals of the Regular Army specifically assigned by the Secretary of War to command the four armies of the United States Army shall have the rank and title of lieutenant general while so serving: Provided, That major generals, while holding the rank and title of lieutenant general under the foregoing provisions, shall be entitled to receive the pay and allowances of a major general and, in addition, shall be entitled to receive the same personal money allowances as are now, or may hereafter be, prescribed by law for vice admirals of the Navy: Provided further, That should an officer, while serving in the rank of lieutenant general be retired from active service, he shall be retired with the lineal rank and the retired pay to which he would be entitled had he not been serving in the rank of lieutenant general, the provisions of section 1254, Revised Statutes (10 U. S. C., 1025), to the contrary notwithstanding."	"That the act entitled 'An act to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army,' approved August 5, 1939, is hereby amended to include the major generals of the Regular Army specifically assigned by the Secretary of War to command the Panama Canal and Hawaiian Departments."

Attached hereto and made a part of this report is a letter from the War Department:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 25, 1940.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: Responsive to your request, the following report is submitted on S. 3200, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, a bill to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army for the military departments of Panama and Hawaii.

If enacted into law the proposed legislation would amend Public, No. 290, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved August 5, 1939, so as to extend the provisions of that act to the commanding generals of the Panama Canal and Hawaiian Departments.

The aforementioned act reads as follows:

"That the major generals of the Regular Army specifically assigned by the Secretary of War to command the four armies of the United States Army shall have the rank and title of lieutenant general while so serving: Provided, That major generals, while holding the rank and title of lieutenant general under the foregoing provisions, shall be entitled to receive the pay and allowances of a major general, and, in addition, shall be entitled to receive the same personal money allowances as are now, or may hereafter be, prescribed by law for vice admirals of the Navy: Provided further, That should an officer, while serving in the rank of lieutenant general, be retired from active service, he shall be retired with the lineal rank and the retired pay to which he would be entitled had he not been serving in the rank of lieutenant general, the provisions of section 1254, Revised Statutes (10 U. S. C. 1025), to the contrary notwithstanding."

In presenting to the Congress the proposal to create the grade of lieutenant general for the commanders of the four field armies, the War Department deliberately refrained from introducing the question of similar rank for the commanders of any foreign garrisons in order not to obscure in any way the great importance of immediately providing this increased rank for the Army commanders. The development of the four-army plan had been seriously unsatisfactory, and more vigorous leadership and coordination was essential. The overseas departments, on the other hand, were functioning efficiently. However, the Panama Canal and Hawaiian Departments are Territorial commands of vital importance to the national defense, and the steps which have been taken to solve our defense problems in this hemisphere have greatly increased their strategical and international importance, and have added materially to the responsibilities of the commanders of these two areas with their recently increased garrisons. For the foregoing reasons the War Department recommends favorable action on the bill.

The annual personal money allowance prescribed by law for vice admirals of the Navy is $500. The act approved August 5, 1939, authorizes this money allowance for the lieutenant generals commanding the four armies. By the terms of S. 3200 this allowance would likewise be provided for the commanders of the Panama Canal and Hawaiian Departments while holding the temporary rank of lieutenant general. The additional annual costs of the bill, if enacted into law, would be $1,000.

A similar report has been submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, on H. R. 7611, Seventy-sixth Congress, second session, a bill of the same purport and scope. In respect of the report on H. R. 7611, the Bureau of the Budget has advised that there would be no objection to its submission to the committee.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY H. WOODRING,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE SUGAR INDUSTRY

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, there is in session in the city of Habana, Cuba, at the present time what in my opinion is one of the most important conferences ever carried on between the Latin American countries to the south of us, 20 in number, and the higher-ranking officials of the United States, led by Secretary of State Hull. This conference is to deal with many problems, among which will come up for discussion, no doubt, the so-called inter-American cartel, along with so-called hemisphere defense.

On the first shake of the dice two high-standing and very important Cuban sugar companies have recommended the elimination of the territorial and continental cane- and beet-sugar industries of the United States and its possessions. I take the time of the House today simply to indicate to those sugar interests of Cuba that there are at least a few of us here who can read English and understand what they are driving at.

These two statements I have here that have appeared in the New York papers under the headings of the Czarnikow-Rionda Co. and Mendoza & Co. of Habana were undoubtedly prepared by the seacoast refining interests of the United States. I am somewhat familiar with the operations of these two companies in the United States and their connections in Cuba. I am also somewhat familiar with the seacoast refining business. I am satisfied that the language in these two statements, which appeared in the New York Journal of Commerce, has been largely designed by the seacoast interests.

The Czarnikow-Rionda Co. proposes that the protection be removed from the continental and insular possession sugars, which include Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and makes a very interesting comparison between the treatment accorded these insular possessions by the United States and that accorded by the British Isles to their colonial possessions. Reading the Czarnikow-Rionda Co. statement, we find this language:

> It could be pointed out that United States insular possessions have a different status than the British dominions and colonies. It is difficult to understand why this should be so.

These Cuban sugar factors are too smart to make a statement of that kind unless they intend to mislead. It is not difficult to understand why there should be dissimilar treatment accorded by the United States to our possessions and by Great Britain to its colonies, as far as sugar is concerned.

Going ahead the statement says:

> A British dominion has probably the same and perhaps even a higher status. Tropical labor and lower manufacturing costs are a vital factor in both the British Empire and the United States possessions.

It would appear that they very willingly overlook the wage and hour provisions, soil-conservation requirements, the income-tax burden under which Hawaii operates, in particular, and under which the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico operate to a more or less degree. Furthermore, Continental United States uses Hawaii and Puerto Rico as two vital arms of our defense, while the British Isles have not heretofore in a similar manner used the arms of Australia and Canada as vital units of their defense, and Czarnikow-Riondo Co. are very well informed on that subject.

This company also goes ahead to say that, "It must, however, be considered that the British industry is an infant industry."

They are now speaking of the sugar-beet industry established more than 15 years ago in the British Isles as a result of the terrible lessons the British learned from the last war. Although they had been a free-trade people for centuries, following the last war they established high protection for the beet-sugar industry in the British Isles to make themselves somewhat independent of the situation which they face this very moment. Since the breaking out of world war No. 2, the beet-sugar industry of the British Isles has paid in the way of defense insurance far more than it will cost those people in the form of subsidies in a period of 100 years, and how well the British people know that to be the fact.

Going on, Czarnikow-Riondo Co. says:

> In the United States the domestic beet and sugarcane industries are of much older origin and much longer established, and yet they must rely on high protection for their maintenance. In view of the above, any expansion of these industries would appear to be beyond all reason and not within sound economy.

At this very moment when we are pouring billions of dollars into a defense program not only for the benefit of our citizens, but the Cubans as well, these two Cuban sugar companies, taking advantage of the unprecedented situation now demand that we remove all of the insurance protection which our citizens enjoy by reason of the existence of the domestic sugar industry against their reexploitation by the foreign producers such as Cuba over whom we have no control whatsoever—whether in times of peace or war.

Moreover, instead of our domestic sugar industry which pays American standard wages and high taxes and conforms to costly soil-conservation practices and otherwise supports American standards and institutions, they propose to substitute their own industry which has never been known to have had standards with reference to wages, soil conservation, taxes, and which at the same time escapes many of the other burdens borne by the American producers.

Now, here is a Cuban sugar concern that has the audacity in this hour of national defense to come along here and propose to the American people that we again become dependent upon Cuba and other foreign countries, over which we have no control, for our supply of sugar in times of war, as well as in times of peace.

So far as I am personally concerned, that is an absolute insult to my intelligence. I think there are many millions of other people in the United States who would agree with me in taking that position, because they know that in the period of the first World War this country paid tribute to Cuba as a result of not being able to supply our own needs for sugar, and within about a 2-year period, in excess of the total dollar value of all the sugar properties, land, buildings, machinery, and so forth, in both continental United States and our insular possessions.

Now, going on to the proposition of Mendoza & Co., of Cuba, listen to what they propose. They come out and boldly propose the scrapping of the beet-sugar industry of the United States.

We find this language in their report, referring to the Pan American Conference, which is now in session:

> In our last review we pointed out what we believe to be the economic slant of the approaching Pan American Conference of Ministers. Its chief purpose in this direction, we remarked, will be the attainment of a closer cooperation between the nations of the Western Hemisphere. It was our contention that the mutual protection of natural products, as determined by the soil, climate, and geographical position of each region, and the native ability of its people to take advantage of these inherent qualities—the abandonment of every ultraprotectionist scheme favoring artificial industries and hothouse crops based on subsidies and tariff barriers—should become the theme song of the Habana conference.

If that is the proposal being submitted to our representatives down there, Secretary Hull and his assistants, who have heretofore indicated their willingness to go along with the Cuban proposition, insofar as sugar is concerned—and I refer back to the past seven and a half years—perhaps there is a movement on foot down there more or less encouraged by our own seacoast refiners—if not actually some of our official representatives—to wipe out the beet-sugar industry of 17 or 18 States of this Union. Mendoza & Co. further observes that—

> Cuba has depended upon the European market to get rid of 33 percent of her crop.

And—

> If the New Deal is concerned about its hemisphere-cartel schemes, it may be forced to revive a radical scheme—the United States to get an independent valuation of beet properties, buy their owners out—referring of course to submarginal beet properties.

What is submarginal property? What is the difference between submarginal property in the production of beef, hides, pork, and wheat and barley and sugar and all of the other products of Latin America which compete with the United States? Is it the purpose of the Pan American Union Conference now in session in Cuba to scrap and eliminate from production all of what they term submarginal operations in the United States? If so, that will probably include the cotton industry of this country, the peanut industry of this country, the sweetpotato industry of this country, and every basic food product produced by the American farmer.

In fact, practically every sphere of American production, agriculture and manufacturing, is submarginal in terms of Cuban standards of wages and other social costs. This fundamental approach can well be applied to every one of the 20 principal Latin-American countries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman to the fact that under a previous order the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] is entitled to recognition.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to yield for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This report goes ahead to point out that at any rate whether this or any other scheme should come up for discussion at the Habana conference—

> Let no one forget that genuine trade reciprocities must rest on the relative climates, natural resources, and geographical positions of the different nations of the Western Hemisphere.

It is important to carefully note here that nothing is said about taxes, fair wages, and other social costs.

So, after all, we may be going into pretty deep water. When we go along within the next week or 10 days or perhaps 2 weeks and further implement the Export-Import Bank by giving it an additional half billion dollars, as requested by the President the other day, and the bill for which has since been introduced, that will again take us into the big money for Latin America. The Export-Import Bank can go into Latin American countries and purchase $700,000,000 of farm surplus, foodstuffs, fats, and fibers, using the $500,000,000 additional now to be granted, plus $200,000,000 the Export-Import Bank has at the present time. And when we add that $700,000,000 worth of foods, fats, and fibers to the $1,500,000,000 already picked up or on which commitments have been made by the Commodity Credit Corporation of our own Government, we will indeed be in commodities in a very big way.

Have they found out a way to proceed with orderly marketing through adding $700,000,000 worth of foodstuffs, fats, and fibers already accumulated of $1,500,000,000? Is that the idea of orderly marketing? Is that the idea of reciprocity between Latin American countries and the United States? If all of this is to be done in the name of orderly marketing, what will we do about the subsidies on wheat, cotton, corn that we have been using? Is it orderly marketing for us to pay subsidies of $7.50 a bale on cotton which we ship out of the United States in competition with Brazil, for instance, when Brazil is not in any position to pay such subsidy? Is it orderly marketing when we pay from 27 to 32 cents a bushel subsidy on wheat, when those grain-producing countries are not in a position to pay similar subsidies? Certainly, we are getting into extremely deep water in connection with the cartel plans now being discussed at Habana, Cuba, but if it is the proposal of the Latin American countries, led by Cuba, with the terrific influence of the United States, to scrap or eliminate from the productive field those operations in this country which compete with those of Latin American countries, perhaps it is time for us to look into just what is going on in Habana. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] is recognized for 10 minutes.

IMMIGRATION OF WAR AND POLITICAL REFUGEES

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I shall shortly place in the hopper a resolution which I have prepared, and which I hope will be referred to the Committee on Rules, providing for an investigation by a select committee of the House of matters concerning the immigration of war and political refugees into the United States.

With the permission of the House, I should like to read the first portion of the resolution, and I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in full.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW (reading):

> Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a select committee of five Members of the House, and that such committee be instructed to inquire into the causes and effects which are resulting and may result from the immigration into the United States of political and war refugees from other countries in the world, and into the methods and facilities available and being employed by private citizens, associations, institutions, and others who are inviting and intend to invite such immigrants into the United States, and into all related phases of such immigration—obtaining all facts possible in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest, but which would aid the House in enacting legislation for the purpose of properly regulating such immigration, and protecting such immigrants, and particularly for protecting the interests of the people of the United States as a whole. The committee shall report to the House, with recommendations for legislation, and shall have the right to report at any time. In the event the committee transmits its report at a time when the House is not in session, a record of such transmittal shall be entered in the proceedings of the Journal and CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the House on the opening day of the next session of Congress and shall be numbered and printed as a report of such Congress.
> That said select committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman, and shall be served by any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 192).

I understand from remarks made earlier today in the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] chairman of the Committee on Immigration, that his committee will hold hearings early in August on several bills having to do with the immigration of political refugees. From letters received from home and from articles appearing in the newspapers, it would appear that the people of the United States are more particularly interested at this time in the emigration into the United States of children who may be war refugees from Great Britain and France. It was stated in the papers that some 200,000 of them waited in England for transportation abroad, and it was also stated that the British Government had felt that while transportation itself might be available to the United States, they did not have adequate convoy equipment in the form of destroyers, I presume, to protect those children on their way over here. That is important, but there are more important things still. If you would place yourself in the position of a father and mother of those children in war-torn Europe, you would find that you would have very considerable reluctance to send your children abroad, perhaps to places unknown, possibly to people unknown to you, a distance of some three or four thousand miles or more away, depending on what part of the United States they were expected to be sent, into circumstances of which you might have very little knowledge, and that you might possibly never see those children again; that either they might die in absence from their country or that you might be killed in the course of the war going on; and then what would be the future of those children? Many have said that they would rather trust to providence in England, go down together if need be, than to become separated perhaps forever.

In response to certain requests from my district, I have consulted with the State Department concerning methods and means and requirements for bringing British children into the United States. They inform me that the British immigration quota of 65,000 persons per year, with a maximum of 10 percent, or 6,500 persons per month, has not been reached and in all probability will not be reached. There is, therefore, ample allowance under the immigration statutes for all persons who presently desire to send their children to the United States, unless, of course, the numbers should greatly increase over present indications.

The State Department informs me further that it is necessary for persons in the United States who are prepared to receive these children to execute an affidavit in duplicate, stating that they will be responsible, financially and otherwise, for the care of these children, and that they will not be allowed to become public charges. It is possible, under the regulations issued by the cable companies, to cable these affidavits to our consul general in London, thereby beating the mail by some 10 days or 2 weeks or more. Of course it is necessary that the people who want to send their children to this country shall provide the expense of transportation from their home to the place they intend to go in the United States. It is frequently necessary for them also to provide funds for the adequate care of their children in this country, although those who are to receive them guarantee in their affidavits that they are both able and willing and will support those children after they arrive. Consequently this movement is practically confined to children of the classes that are financially able, whereas all children are in equally great danger and should be equally considered for protection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I assume therefore that the gentleman is in favor of helping these unfortunate children from Great Britain. I assume that from his discussion.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman can assume from my discussion that I believe the subject should be thoroughly investigated and more facts learned concerning the probabilities for the future of those children and the future effect upon the people of the United States in their immigration here.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Does not the gentleman think if we are going to do something for the unfortunate children that we ought to take care of some of the children from Holland, Belgium, and Poland who are in the same condition as that of the English children? I just call that to the gentleman's attention because we have eight or nine bills pending before the committee asking for that relief, and I fixed a hearing for the 7th of August. I am sure that every Member is interested, and I hope the Members will come and give us their advice and opinion.

Mr. HINSHAW. I will say to the gentleman that the problem is not confined to the children of Great Britain alone. My sympathies extend to all children throughout the world and particularly to those innocents whose very lives are in jeopardy from deadly bombs and death-dealing famine and other causes which are no fault of theirs nor their parents.

It extends to all of the children of the warring countries of Europe. The fact that I happened to bring up the subject of British children is because the requests that I have received in my office come entirely in connection with the British children.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the gentleman will yield further, it is my opinion that there are twice as many families in this country willing to care for children, even though we should bring in 100,000, than there will be children come in. In other words, there are 200,000 families in this country who want to be charitable and helpful in taking care of these victims of the war-torn countries of Europe.

Mr. HINSHAW. Answering the gentleman from New York, I would say there are probably thousands and thousands more families in the United States ready and willing to take children than there are families in foreign countries willing to send their children to the United States.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know about that. I merely give the gentleman my opinion.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I am glad to hear the gentleman state that this is not confined particularly to English children but that anything that is done to bring children over here should apply equally to the war-torn nations of Europe and children who are in distress. America wants to try to help all nations.

Mr. HINSHAW. As I said a moment ago, the reason I spoke particularly of British children is because the requests that come to my office have been in connection with British children. I have had no inquiries regarding children of other nations.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman will yield further, it should be understood that after a certain time elapses when the war is over and peace is reestablished in these European nations that these children are to be returned to their respectives homes and countries.

Mr. HINSHAW. I think that probably is the intention of the people who send them over and will be the idea of the people who receive them. But it must be remembered in this connection that this is one of the important things that ought to be investigated and studied. There probably will be many instances in which children will have no homes to which to return and they will become permanent immigrants to the United States. It may be that parents will not survive the war or, if they do that, they may be destitute and unable to repatriate their children. Many contingencies may arise.

Mr. RICH. Would it not then become the duty of the Nation from which the children come to take care of them? Would not that become their responsibility, and should they not take the children back unless proper authority exists for these children to remain here?

Mr. HINSHAW. I believe the gentleman will find that the immigration statutes provide that the person in the United States must be willing and able to receive and support these children. But if they come in under the quota as immigrants the United States cannot require their return except for reasons such as undesirability, and so forth.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If as the gentleman stated a moment ago there are many more families in this country willing to take foreign refugee children than there will be families in European countries willing to send their children here, I would remind the gentleman that there are hundreds of thousands of orphan children in America today to be taken care of. I respectfully suggest that people who really want to be helpful to children can take care of some of our own American orphaned children who are now being cared for in institutions by our overburdened American taxpayers.

Mr. HINSHAW. There is a great deal of truth in what the gentleman has to say. There are thousands of orphaned children in the United States, but also thousands of them are being adopted by the people of the United States every month. People adopt them legally and thereby place themselves fully in responsible position for their care, and under the judicial notice of a court of law, whereas these foreign children it is anticipated will be only a temporary burden upon the people of the United States and upon the individuals who take them, while no special statute protects them from exploitation and the responsibilities are very vague and indefinite.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. In closing I would like to call the attention of the Members to the proposition that if there is any general movement to bring children over here en masse to be assigned by properly selected and designated local American institutions to American homes, a great deal of care must be exercised. There may be laws on the statute books applicable and adequate to the present situation, but I have my doubts of it. Everyone knows that when a person goes to adopt an orphan in the United States he is examined as to financial responsibility, racial compatability, religious prejudices if he has any, the condition of the home, his education, and on many other subjects. Great care is exercised by the institution in examining the record and circumstances of the foster parents before the child is allowed to be adopted. If these foreign children are going to be sent here in large groups it is going to be necessary for the United States to set up an agency that will be capable of similarly investigating the people who will apply for these children, to care for them pro tempore. If they do not there will be undoubtedly some very unhappy situations arise, because unfortunately in this country as well as in other parts of the world there are those who might want to take the children for the purpose of exploiting them or their parents in order to obtain money from them, and so forth. Certainly some agency should be set up that would thoroughly investigate the reliability of those who apply to take these children.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Some of these children will come from homes that are amply able to take care of them. There certainly should be no loopholes whereby any American family which receives such children would be able to keep them away from their parents should the American family become fond of them.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman kindly repeat his question?

Mr. RICH. If an American family should get children from a foreign country and should become attached to those particular children while they are here, it certainly should not be the intent of any law that we may pass that those children will not be returned to their rightful parents when they want them to be returned, regardless of whether the American family wants to keep them or not.

Mr. HINSHAW. I understand the gentleman. The gentleman will remember the experience of a young English boy who was here and I believe is still here as a moving picture actor. He was placed under the guardianship of an American aunt and considerable difficulty arose with reference to the earnings of that child and what should happen to those earnings if the child remained here in the United States or was returned to his parents. A number of other things were also involved and it was a very serious court case.

Mr. Speaker, there are so many angles to this business that evidently have not been given serious consideration by our people, that I believe a full investigation should be made by a select committee of the House. The American people are the most sympathetic, the most willing to aid the sufferers of other lands, the most generous and the biggest hearted people, on the face of the earth. But while we are all of these things, it must be remembered that many serious problems can arise around this very generosity. These children are coming here as immigrants, not merely as visitors. Perhaps a new form of visitor's permit should be devised, permitting an indefinite stay dependent upon conditions abroad, instead of using the immigration visa. Temporary guardianship laws might be enacted. Machinery must be set up for placement of children that will protect the children and the parents of the children. The burden upon local school facilities should be considered. Guaranties of funds for repatriation should be thought of and a hundred and one other important matters looked into.

REFUGEE CHILDREN

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, the question of refugee children is, in my opinion, a very serious matter and warrants careful consideration by the Congress of the United States. We cannot help the democracies in any other way, perhaps, than to save their living children in this the land of the free. I know some Members will say, and I have heard my good friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] talk about taking care of our children here. As a matter of fact, our people never want to surrender their children nor do they want to surrender them for the purpose of adoption. They are not seeking this relief. I have gone through that in a hearing that we had on the Wagner-Rogers bill about a year and a half ago, and from the testimony before the committee, I do not think that is the question before the Congress today.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I respectfully differ with the gentleman. There are a great many orphan children in this country who would appreciate being cared for in homes. I know this from personal experience, because I have made a study of the orphan problem and have raised two orphans myself.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That may be so from the gentleman's experience, but the fact of the matter is that we are talking about helping humanity, helping the Allies, helping this and that, but we do nothing. We just talk. There has been a lot of talk for a number of weeks with regard to helping these unfortunate victims who are under the age of 14 or 16—these children who are being driven from one place to the other in countries that this Hitler madman has taken over.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I might say here that they are doing things in this country. On the radio in my district they are asking the people to take these children, so that the American people are awaking to the fact they want to help.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am thankful to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do not think we ought to discriminate and take care of the victims of England only. There are other little tots, infants, children, boys, and girls who come from good homes and who have a good background in Poland, in Holland, in Belgium, and in France. I think we could fix a quota of 100,000, and in proportion take care of that many children. I do not think the country has to be afraid of where we are going to get the money, because the money is not coming out of the Treasury of the United States at all. It is coming out of the generosity of the finest patriotic Americans in this country, who have formed themselves into many, many groups. These people are both Republicans and Democrats. The great mass of our people are willing to do something constructive at least to save these young people from death or starvation.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. When it comes to humanitarian problems you will find that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is just as much interested as anybody in this House, or anybody in this country, to try to help.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I know that.

Mr. RICH. I am interested in this problem, but when we bring over these children, take care of them, help them, and bring them into our homes, we want to see that they are taken care of and that they are given the best aid and assistance this country can give them. At the same time I agree somewhat with what the gentleman from Wisconsin said, We have lots of people in this country we ought to look after too.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think we can take care of the orphans in this country and we can also be generous and merciful in this time of great need. We can take care of these unfortunate children, as I said, who come from fine families and take them away from the conditions that have arisen in various European countries. We could do all these things if we want to do them and it should be done by all the people. This is not a political question. I think the Republicans and Democrats ought to go on record and help my committee to bring out a bill, which I hope to bring out, to take care of the children and protect them and see that they get homes and that the proper financing will be provided because I have been assured by a number of organizations in this country, in almost every State of the Union, that there is a community group ready to take chilldren now and, as I stated, from my brief observation I find that there are more families than we need.

Mr. McDOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDOWELL. What is to be the proposed maximum age of the children?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They will be not more than 16. We have cases where some people want to adopt the children. There are a number of orphan children whose fathers have been killed in this unfortunate war and whose mothers have disappeared. There are a number of fine American families who want to take care of them. We do not propose to send a Catholic child to a Jewish family. We want to give them the religion to which they have been used, and I assure the Congress that the men behind this movement in every section of the country are responsible, outstanding citizens who are really trying to do a job if the Congress will tie the technicalities of the law and give them a chance to do it.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDOWELL. I have in my office hundreds of letters from people in my city of Pittsburgh asking how these children can be delivered. They are willing to take them for the duration of the war, and to take them from all nations, including Germany. I should like to inform the gentleman, however, that it is my opinion that practically all of these generous folk in Pittsburgh are dead set against the proposal to send American ships to bring these children over here, but they are willing to take them when they are delivered on the American shore, and maintain them for the remainder of the hostilities.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman and I know that as rotten as Hitler is he would not dare to touch any ship that is carrying these unfortunate victims, the children of parents who have been killed by his machines. I do not believe that he is so rotten as to touch these ships, if we turn all our ships that are lying idle over to the Red Cross and let the Red Cross put them in service bringing these children over here. I do not believe there is any man in this country or in the world who would believe that the German dictator is so rotten that he would attempt to destroy a ship carrying these refugee children.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDOWELL. I agree that the Germans would probably not sink any boatloads of children. The Germans are not that kind of people. They would not do it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Germans are not, but their leader is.

Mr. McDOWELL. All right, I agree to that, but the German Navy is not going to sink these ships no matter whose ships they are. There are empty vessels leaving England every hour coming to this country for war supplies. A convoy would not be needed for these ships. I do not have any doubt at all that the American Government can make a proposal to the German Government to let these British ships carry children over here. The Germans are not interested in killing children.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know whether or not they would consent to letting these children be brought over in British ships, but it seems to me in all fairness and reason that even this man Hitler would not cause any difficulty at all if we told him that we were going to rescue these refugee children. I do not believe we would violate the neutrality law, that has been talked about so much in the Congress of the United States by many Members, including the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman concede that in all probability the ships that are now returning from Great Britain, and I mean by that, British bottoms, are probably returning empty, and there would be plenty of space available to bring in a number of children on these British ships, without involving the United States ships in venturing into the war zone?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want my colleague to understand that I am not trying to involve our country in a war.

Mr. HINSHAW. I understand that.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I take the position that the gentleman and every other Member of the House does, that we want to mind our own business, but at the same time humanity comes first, and I believe that with proper coordination and a proper constructive plan we can find a way to bring these children here, even if we have to send the ships that are lying idle over there under the Red Cross emblem, perhaps even advising all those involved in the war area that we are carrying children, not ammunition.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does the gentleman see any particular reason for sending American ships when British ships are coming back to this continent empty?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If there are British ships available to bring the children here, I say we ought to bring them in those ships.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDOWELL. In the next 10 days in the gentleman's own city of New York there will be in New York harbor enough British ships coming in empty to bring 100,000 children, regardless of where they come from. These British vessels come in with nothing in them but ballast, and there are enough of them coming in in the next 10 days to bring over all these refugee children.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am perfectly agreeable to any way it may be done. I want to do the right thing. I know everybody wants to do the right thing. I believe we owe it to the democracies and to the world that Congress cut the red tape of the immigration law and let these poor children, who are the victims of an unprecedented condition, come into this land of freedom. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a letter I have received from Mr. Addison G. Foster, of the Executive Office of the President, and certain telegrams dealing with the flood question in my State.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the National Resources Planning Committee and the work it is supposed to be doing in northern Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two topics, and in connection therewith to include in each case a brief statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

NO THIRD TERM FOR ANY PRESIDENT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the speech delivered last Monday, July 22, on the floor of the House—page 9575 of the RECORD—by our colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] in reference to the Democratic National Convention. The gentleman gave the Members of the House and the public a very enlightening résumé of what happened at the convention at Chicago. Naturally the Democrats are glad that their convention is over. I know I am, because the thing that we suspected would happen did happen—that is, that the dictatorial administration we have had for the last 7 years drove home the point that "He is the ruler and regulator of the American people, and he certainly showed at the Democratic National Convention that he was going to rule that convention." The White House did rule the convention. He nominated the ticket and the New Deal delegates accepted it 100 percent. Talk of a dictator. Our President now certainly proved this point.

The President in next January will not be for it—will be Mr. Willkie—and he will not want to be a dictator.

Mr. Roosevelt named himself as the Democratic nominee and, of course, will receive the greatest defeat in November that any President ever received, because anyone running for a third term and against a principle that was laid down by Washington and Thomas Jefferson is advocating something that should never happen in this country. It is time that the New Deal was kicked out, not only of Washington, but out of this country, and the American people are going to do the kicking in November when they cast their ballots, and you can just put your minds on that and see if that is not the case. America is against a dictator.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. Does the gentleman care to comment at this point on those Democrats who bolted the ticket?

Mr. RICH. It is just as Willkie says—he did not leave the Democratic Party, the Democratic Party left him. In other words, the New Deal stole the show and there is not any Democratic Party. All the people who are interested as Thomas Jefferson was in the Democratic Party, as it was outlined by the Jeffersonian Democrats, are all going over to the Republican Party to elect Willkie in November. It is the American way as outlined by the Republicans and the dictatorial way as the New Deal has proven.

Mr. PIERCE rose.

Mr. RICH. Governor, we are looking for you to be right over there with them and vote for Mr. Willkie.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I will have to yield first to the Governor of Oregon, since I have referred to him.

Mr. PIERCE. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that Washington believed that an emergency might arise that would require a man to serve more than two terms?

Mr. RICH. Oh, an emergency? That is all this administration talks about. They are trying to cover up their misdoings and their faults. Camouflaging the American people.

Mr. PIERCE. And further, Washington never said or wrote anything against a third term.

Mr. RICH. Did you ever read Washington's Farewell Address?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; indeed I have, and I advise the gentleman to read it before he displays his ignorance on the subject.

Mr. RICH. Ignorance? That is what I think of your statement.

Mr. PIERCE. Read what Washington said.

Mr. RICH. Read that again and then you will take your seat, because I am sure you have not read it for a long, long time and you have forgotten it. He certainly was against a third term.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. After examining the record, do you think it is proper to call the assembly of vassals and subjects of the ex-international banker New Deal Fuehrer Roosevelt a convention? Would it not be better to call it what it really was—an assembly of subjects and vassals of the New Deal Fuehrer whose main interest was to preserve and protect New Deal political jobs?

Mr. RICH. I think there were a lot of Democrats who went out there, Jeffersonian Democrats, in hopes they would not have a candidate for a third term and that they could freely choose a candidate, but when they were so stormed by the organization that was set up by the New Deal to put in Mr. Roosevelt for a third time, of course they had no chance to do otherwise, and like a lot of people who go to conventions when they saw they were licked before they got started, they turned around and went away. Even the Vice President left for Texas probably never to return. He wants to get away from it all.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And most of the real Jeffersonian Democrats who attended this assembly of New Deal vassals and subjects admit that Willkie will really drive the money changers from the temple of the Federal Government in November and that Franklin D. Roosevelt and his tribe of international bankers and New Deal disciples of Karl Marx will be able to return to their old stands in Wall Street.

Mr. RICH. If somebody does not come here and drive these money changers out of 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, no telling what will happen. You know that 5 years ago if anybody had talked about a public-utility man being a candidate for President they would have thought the world was going to be turned upside down. Now the people of this country realize that Mr. Roosevelt has been trying for 7 years to put 9,000,000 men to work and he has utterly failed. The only way that this administration can put anybody to work is to go down into the Federal Treasury and get the money and put them on the dole, relief, or public works, but now Willkie, a businessman, a man who has come up from the ranks, through the public schools and has gone up in business and made a success of business, is going to go ahead and will make a great success because of his experience in the business world. He will start industry, start agriculture, and he will put all men who will to work. A job for all—that is his slogan. The people of America want a man like that, and they are going to take a man this year that is going to be able to put the 9,000,000 back to work, and they are going to bank on Willkie to do it, and I will bank on Willkie, and I am sure, when they count the ballots in November, there will be such an outpouring of American votes into the ballot boxes for Willkie and McNary that they will be overwhelmingly elected. They want to get this Government out of the hands of the money changers, out of the hands of the economic royalists, out of the hands of people who are inefficient and not qualified to do a good job. Do you know it takes a real man to create jobs? It cannot be done by a politician; that has been proven in the past 7 years.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The gentleman does not want to accuse the New Deal of being opposed to utilities. When we examine the testimony of the Senate stock market investigation we find that Mr. Robert E. Healy, Chief Counsel of the Federal Trade Commission, and now a New Deal leader, testified and told about the robbing of utility-stock investors of more than $1,000,000,000 by Henry L. Doherty's Cities Service Co. The same Mr. Doherty, who was the right-hand man of President Roosevelt, who selected him to have charge of his many fund-raising birthday balls.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes more. We have lots of time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I do not object, because, in view of the fear among some people that the Democrats are going to try to smear Mr. Willkie, I am perfectly willing that the country know what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] have to say about the present President of the United States and the men, including myself, who were part of the convention. I want them to have their day, I want them to do all the smearing that they know how to do, and then we will have something to say after that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I shall not object, although we might take a different tone. For instance, when President Roosevelt entered the convention hall in Chicago in 1932 he entered to the strains of Happy Days Are Here Again. When Mr. Willkie entered the hall in Philadelphia to greet the convention the tune played by the band was Back To Work We Go. I think if we have more of that spirit we will get further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the majority leader, I do not want to smear anyone; I am telling the truth. You will be the minority leader in the next session. There are gentlemen on this side of the House who have asked to have Washington's Farewell Address read in the House every year condemning the fact that we should have a third-term candidate. Then you all know what Thomas Jefferson said about a third-term candidate.

If 10 years ago you would have taken a vote of the majority leader and practically every Member on the Democratic side of the House, there would not have been one man there who would be in favor of a third term for any President, it would not make any difference who he was, but because the gentleman in the White House can dictate because he has the power, and I do not know how he gets it, over this Congress, to drive through all the legislation he wants, I can easily account for all of those who went to the Democratic National Convention and turned over their body and soul, boots and breeches, shoes and stockings for the New Deal candidate, Mr. Roosevelt. With me, I would not care what Republican President wanted a third term, I would object to it. Eight years is a long time for a good one and too blame long for a bad one. I think, under present-day conditions, when we have gone through what we have gone through in the last 7 years and we have not accomplished what we were going to accomplish, when the Democrats failed to do what they promised to do with their platform which was formulated in 1932, then to come around now and use a national emergency to cover up everything so that we can go ahead and support the New Deal further and further—gentlemen, if you do that, then the worst is yet to come. America will be wrecked if you carry on this New Deal any further, and with all the regard that I have for the majority leader, and with all the regard that I have for my friends on the Democratic side of the aisle, I say that I think more of America than I think of any political party. I think more of America than I think of the Republican or the Democratic Party, and I say that we should forget parties, and I cannot content myself to think that I can get up here and say that I am for a third term for the President of the United States. I am not. It is a principle too sacred to American liberty; too sacred to our freedom. Why the men I know who gave in to the President I cannot understand. It is a mystery to me.

I have not yet come to the conclusion that he is the only man who can save this Nation. I think he will do more to wreck it than he will ever do to save it.

I want to get together with the majority leader. I love the gentleman from Texas, SAM RAYBURN. I think he is a fine fellow, but I do not like a lot of his principles. [Laughter.] There never was a finer fellow than the gentleman from Texas, SAM RAYBURN, and we like him, but we do not like his boss, the President. He is fooling him. That is just the reason we cannot reconcile doing some of the things he wants to do and, as a dutiful servant, probably he ought to stand up for him, but I think he had better sit down. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the Appendix an address delivered at Habana, Cuba, on July 22, by our distinguished Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.), pursuant to its order heretofore entered, the House adjourned until Monday, July 29, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1848. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 11, 1940, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on a preliminary examination and survey of, and review of reports on, Thames River and tributaries, Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island, including the Quinebaug River at Southbridge, Mass., authorized by the Flood Control Act approved June 28, 1938, and requested by resolutions of the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, adopted October 25, 1938, and November 4, 1938 (H. Doc. No. 885); to the Committee on Flood Control and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

1849. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill for the relief of Fred J. Duncan; to the Committee on Claims.

1850. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a proposed joint resolution transferring the administration of homestead projects established in the Virgin Islands from the Government of the Virgin Islands to the Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

1851. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to provide uniformity in temporary promotions in the Army of the United States in time of emergency; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1852. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to authorize the use of a tract of land in California known as the Millerton Rancheria in connection with the Central Valley project; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 10200. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 2801). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 554. Resolution for consideration of House Joint Resolution 583, a joint resolution making additional appropriations for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities of national defense; without amendment (Rept. No. 2802). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. KING: Committee on the Territories. H. R. 9123. A bill to approve Act No. 65 of the Session Laws of 1939 of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled "An act to amend Act 29 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1929, granting to J. K. Lota and associates a franchise for electric light, current, and power in Hanalei, Kauai, by including Moloaa within such franchise"; without amendment (Rept. No. 2803). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KING: Committee on the Territories. H. R. 9124. A bill to approve Act No. 214 of the Session Laws of 1939 of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled "An act to amend Act 105 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1921, granting franchise for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric current for light and power within Kapaa and Waipouli in the district of Kawaihau on the island and county of Kauai, by including within said franchise the entire district of Kawaihau, island of Kauai"; without amendment (Rept. No. 2804). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9046. By Mr. CROWTHER: Petition signed by Marian Ordyk and 150 members of the Third and Fourth Ward Polish Democratic Club of Amsterdam, N. Y., approving the policies of President Roosevelt with respect to aiding the Allies; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9047. By Mr. HART: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Hoboken, N. J., opposing House bill 10125; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

9048. Also, petition of Local No. 10, New York Federation of Post Office Clerks, offering full support for the program to strengthen our national defense; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

9049. By Mr. HINSHAW: Petition of Nona Tubbs, of Pasadena, Calif., and containing the signatures of 60 other residents of the Eleventh Congressional District of California, urging Congress to consider enacting House bill 5620, the proposed General Welfare Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

9050. By Mr. JONKMAN: Petition of the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Federation of Labor, by its secretary, Alby J. Conklin, recommending the inclusion of a stipulation in the appropriation bill for the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice, that such moneys shall not be used to criminally prosecute labor unions and officials thereof; to the Committee on Appropriations.

9051. By Mr. LEAVY: Resolution adopted by the West Wenatchee Grange, No. 1024, Wenatchee, Wash., on July 5, 1940, urging that the Representatives and Senators in Congress move with all possible speed in activating a program of national defense; pointing out that the belligerent nations are taking great strides in their armament programs; that the United States has fallen far behind in their preparation; and that it has been amply demonstrated that speed and preparedness are essential in modern warfare, and that being prepared to defend our Nation is a contributing factor in keeping us out of war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

9052. By Mr. SUTPHIN: Petition of the mayor and council of the borough of Keyport, N. J., urging the establishment of a naval base at East Keyport and Union Beach, and offering the services and pledging the cooperation of the borough officials in the present defense program; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

9053. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Lions Club of Waxahachie, Tex., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to the national-defense program; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE

MONDAY, JULY 29, 1940

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and most merciful God, who hast brought us to the beginning of a new week, grant Thy blessing, we humbly beseech Thee, to the Members of this Senate, that they may have the wisdom and courage to do only such things as will please Thee. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, July 25, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 3200) to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army in the military departments of Panama and Hawaii.

ACTIVE SERVICE FOR THE NATIONAL GUARD, OFFICERS' RESERVE CORPS, ETC. (S. DOC. NO. 265)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The increasing seriousness of the international situation demands that every element of our defense structure be brought as rapidly as possible to the highest state of efficiency, in training as well as in equipment and material.

The National Guard of the United States, an integral and vital part of the Army, comprises a body of men who have voluntarily assumed an obligation to serve the Nation in any crisis. To the extent possible under normal conditions, the officers and men of the National Guard have prepared themselves for this service, and I am assured that today the guard has reached the highest state of efficiency in its peacetime history.

The developments of modern warfare are such, however, that only seasoned and highly trained troops can hope for success in combat. Our citizen soldiery, no matter how willing and earnest, cannot possibly attain the necessary degree of efficiency through their normal training activities. Even our professional soldiers required months of intensive training to bring them to their present satisfactory state. We know too well the tragedy that ensues when inadequately trained men are assailed by a more skillful adversary.

Some weeks ago I asked the Congress for authority to order the National Guard into active service should an emergency require this action when your body was not in session. That proposal is no longer sufficient, as I am now convinced that the security of the Nation demands that this component of our Army be brought to the highest possible state of training efficiency more rapidly than its present program permits. Moreover, this group of men, who of necessity must be among the first to fight in the Nation's defense, have a right to the best preparation that time and circumstance permit.

Realizing as I do the personal sacrifice that a period of extended active duty demands of the National Guard, I have deferred until now any request for immediate action in this respect. I cannot, with clear conscience, longer postpone this vitally essential step in our progress toward adequate preparedness, and I am therefore transmitting herewith legislation that, if enacted, will enable me to order the National Guard of the United States to active service for such period of intensive training as may be necessary to raise its efficiency to a point comparable with that of our small Regular Establishment.

If this authority is granted, I propose to order the guard to duty in successive increments to permit the effective use of training facilities and equipment immediately available. Each increment will, of course, be released when it attains the desired state of efficiency.

Of equal importance is the Officers' Reserve Corps. This splendid body of officers has had little opportunity for service with troops, and to the maximum extent possible their training should now be perfected by an adequate period of active service. If ordered to active duty, they can acquire the desired efficiency and at the same time supply the increased need for officers in our expanded Regular Army. The authority I am requesting is therefore drawn so as to include the Officers' Reserve Corps.

I ask your earnest consideration of this program, and your prompt and favorable action thereon.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the proposed joint resolution accompanying the communication of the President.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution to provide for the strengthening of the national defense

Resolved, etc., That during the period ending June 30, 1942, the President be, and is hereby, authorized to order into the active military service of the United States for a period of not to exceed 1 year any or all members and units of any or all reserve components of the Army of the United States, and retired personnel of the Regular Army, with or without their consent, to such extent and in such manner as he may deem necessary for the strengthening of the national defense: Provided, That the members and units of the reserve components of the Army of the United States ordered into active Federal service under this authority shall not be employed beyond the limits of the Western Hemisphere, except in the Territories and possessions of the United States, including the Philippine Islands.

SEC. 2. All National Guard, Reserve, and retired personnel ordered into the active military service of the United States under the foregoing special authority shall, from the dates on which they are respectively required by such order to report for duty in such service, be subject to the respective laws and regulations relating to enlistments, reenlistments, employment, conduct, rights and privileges, and discharge of such personnel in such service to the same extent in all particulars as if they had been ordered into such service under existing general statutory authorizations.

SEC. 3. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby suspended to the extent that they may be in conflict with any provision hereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication from the President and the accompanying draft of a proposed joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and printed as a document.

LANDS AT VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION FACILITY, LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Administrator of Veterans Affairs, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to grant an easement in a small strip of land at Veterans' Administration Facility, Los Angeles, Calif., to the county of Los Angeles, Calif., for sidewalk purposes, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution of the Executive Committee, Northern Division, the Democratic Youth Federation of California, San Francisco, Calif., protesting against adoption of the so-called Smith amendments to the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of Father Divine and sundry other citizens of the United States, praying that the Americas be united for peace, and also praying for the enactment of pending legislation to prevent and punish the crime of lynching, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Municipal Employees Local No. 102, of Stockton, Calif., favoring the prompt enactment of a compulsory military training bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Executive Committee, Northern Division, the Democratic Youth Federation of California, San Francisco, Calif., protesting against the enactment of conscription legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial signed by James Henry Smith and sundry citizens of San Francisco, Calif., remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called Burke compulsory military training bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram embodying a resolution of the Midwest Federation of American Syrian Lebanon Clubs, Mrs. W. S. Zarick, secretary, Indianapolis, Ind., pledging continued allegiance to the Government of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

THE REPUBLIC OF LITHUANIA—RESOLUTION

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks and appropriately referred a resolution adopted by Connecticut citizens of Lithuanian origin and extraction at a meeting held in New Britain, Conn., on Sunday, July 14.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas we, American citizens of the city of New Britain and adjacent towns thereto in the State of Connecticut, of Lithuanian origin and extraction, assembled here in the city of New Britain, State of Connecticut, on Sunday, July 14, 1940, and declared our allegiance and loyalty to the United States of America and to its flag and for what it stands; and we, Americans of Lithuanian extraction, solemnly declared that we believe in the United States of America as a government of the people which is established by the people and for the people; and we believe that a democracy so conceived in liberty and dedicated to the freedom of all its people is the only type of government that can exist; and

Whereas we, American citizens of Lithuanian extraction, have become imbued with a spirit of tolerance and democratic principles, and, having a knowledge of the past history of Lithuania, where for many centuries the Lithuanian people have given of their lifeblood and material wealth to establish their independence and their right to life, liberty, the pursuit of happiness, and the sacred right to worship God; and that for the past 22 years the Republic of Lithuania has been independent and has established itself as one of the foremost smaller countries in Europe in the cultural, political, and economic sphere without help from the outside; and

Whereas we, as American citizens, are cognizant and apprehensive of the subversive and undermining acts of communism both here and abroad; and

Whereas we, Americans of Lithuanian extraction, note with fear and trepidation the present conditions in the Republic of Lithuania and fully realize the imminent danger of total annexation of the Republic of Lithuania by communistic Soviet Russia which undoubtedly would result in the extirpation of the now free and independent Republic of Lithuania: Therefore be it

Resolved, That all true Americans and the Government of the United States should condemn and take immediate steps to counteract all subversive and overt acts of communism within and without its borders, and should under no circumstances recognize the overthrow by force of arms the Republic of Lithuania and her former rightful government and the oppression of its peace-loving people by communistic Soviet Russia; and be it further

Resolved, That we, as Americans, lodge a formal protest with our immediate Representative in the Congress of the United States against the barbaric action of the communistic union of Russia, with the aid of its 200,000 armed forces, toward a free and peace-loving people; and that the action of Soviet Russia toward the Republic of Lithuania is hereby condemned and denounced.

This resolution was unanimously adopted on July 14, 1940, and ordered that a copy of same be sent to each Member of Congress for the State of Connecticut.

This is to certify that this is a true copy of the resolution so adopted.

Respectfully submitted.

ALGERT F. POLITIS.
Temporary Chairman.
JULIA JENNINGS, Secretary.

RESOLUTION OF LODGE NO. 227, BROTHERHOOD OF RAILWAY CLERKS, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks and appropriately referred a resolution adopted by Lodge No. 227 of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, of New Haven, Conn.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas we, the members of Lodge No. 227, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, New Haven, Conn., here assembled in regular monthly meeting, have emphatically agreed that we are unalterably opposed to America's participation in any foreign war; and

Whereas we are convinced that if this Nation were to become involved in a foreign war it would mean an end to our civil liberties and possible destruction of our democratic institutions; and

Whereas the only war that is of importance to us is the war against unemployment, disease, poverty, and destitution; and

Whereas with the present alarming steps of the administration to thrust America into war we believe it is necessary to redouble our efforts if this Nation is to avoid a tragic repetition of what happened in 1917; and

Whereas that in the present war hysteria there shall be no breaking down of labor legislation; and

Whereas we resent and oppose the President's suggestion that youth be conscripted for national militarization program; and

Whereas we are certain that the youth of our Nation are not willing to sacrifice freedom and democracy in order to fulfill the commitments and promises made in the channels and alleys of secret diplomacy to save the investments and fortunes of America's steel magnates and bankers in Europe and Asia; and

Whereas in the past the youth of our Nation have never failed to respond to the needs of our country, we are convinced that no regimentation or militarization is necessary in order to maintain their patriotism and adherence to American ideals; and

Whereas if the youth and unemployed of America are to be placed in steady gainful employment, it should not be as part of a labor conscription plan but as regular jobs at prevailing or union wages; and

Whereas we are positively for adequate defense, we feel that this can best be secured by safeguarding civil liberties and the gains made by labor, which were won only after so many years of struggle and at such a great cost and sacrifice; and

Whereas a small minority, better known as "economic royalists," who control more than 50 percent of our national economy, are consistently seeking to undermine our democracy by attacking the civil rights of noncitizens, of labor, of the unemployed, and of youth; that they are the real subversive "fifth column" element we are certain: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent post haste to President Roosevelt, and to our national representatives, also to the grand president of our brotherhood; and be it further

Resolved, That we propose to our national representatives that they take a consistent stand against any measure and maneuvers that run counter to our traditional democratic institutions or any legislation that may have a tendency to involve us in a foreign war.

(Signed) JAMES W. MCDONOUGH, EDWARD QUIRK,
MATTHEW T. CONNELL,
Resolutions Committee.

RESOLUTION OF CITY COUNCIL OF ROCKVILLE, CONN.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks and lie on the table a resolution adopted by the Court of Common Council of the City of Rockville, Conn.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That—

Whereas His Excellency the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States have both declared that our defense forces and their equipment are insufficient and inadequate to properly protect or defend our Nation in these days of swift and shocking developments, which has forced every neutral nation in this uneasy world to look to its defenses in the light of new factors. Let us measure our strength and our defenses without self-delusion. Our defenses must be invulnerable, our security absolute. There must be no middle stand in this matter. We stand ready to spend millions for defense, to give our services, and even our lives, for the maintenance of our freedom and the continuation of American liberties, institutions, and ideals so that our children and our children's children may enjoy the rights and privileges for which our forefathers fought and died that we now enjoy and hold so dear. Let us move swiftly to bring our national-defense requirements up to the standard necessary to protect and defend these rights and privileges. Let us, above all other things, be united in this effort to let the world know that we, a free people, intend to protect and defend a way of life which is precious to us all with our faith in God and our fellow countrymen; and

Whereas Maj. Gen. James A. Woodruff, commanding general of the First Corps Area, comprising all Army troops in New England, in complying with the defense policy and preparedness program of the Chief Executive of the United States, has solicited the assistance of all patriotic citizens to help this corps area to obtain its allotted quota of about 1,100 recruits to help increase the standing Army's strength; and

Whereas Col. George E. Freeman, chief of staff, Third Military Area, which includes Connecticut and Rhode Island, in compliance with instruction and orders of his superior officers, has inaugurated an enlistment drive in all the towns and cities in the third military area, so that the young men of these towns and cities may contribute their share to help strengthen the defenses of our country by enlisting in the Regular Army of the United States: Therefore it is

Resolved, That this honorable City Council of the City of Rockville, in the State of Connecticut, heartily commend and fully endorse the preparedness program and defense policy of the President of the United States, as approved by the Congress of the United States, and sincerely urge all citizens of our city to encourage and support the President and his military and naval officers in their efforts to make our defenses invulnerable and our security absolute; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution be given the proper publicity so that all unmarried male citizens between the ages of 18 and 35 may know that the Regular Army of the United States desires to fill the existing vacancies to full peace strength; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, Connecticut's congressional Representatives, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, the commanding general of the First Corps Area, the commanding officer of the third military area, and that a copy be spread upon the records of the city council.

RESOLUTIONS OF NATIONAL COUNCIL, JUNIOR ORDER UNITED AMERICAN MECHANICS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have before me a resolution which I shall not ask to have read. I should like to have it published under the head of resolutions. It has to do with the deportation of alien criminals, alien law violators, and alien undesirables. It is a resolution adopted by the Junior Order United American Mechanics, over the signature of Mr. James L. Wilmeth, secretary of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, at Philadelphia, Pa.

In conjunction with that resolution I ask that there be printed a bill which I introduced in the Senate several months ago, providing for the deportation of aliens inimical to the public interest, which includes alien criminals and undesirables.

There being no objection, the resolution and bill were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Re deportation of alien criminals and alien law violators and undesirables

The national board of the national council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, respectfully submits that this is the time when our Government should arrest and speedily deport aliens who have violated the laws of this Nation and who are now resident in this country, and in support we submit the following:

Whereas there are now alien violators resident in the United States whose deportation has been stayed for one cause and another; and

Whereas such aliens are, for the most part, employed in competition with our own American citizens; and

Whereas the laws of our land do not shield our own citizens when they violate the laws of the State or Nation, but such citizen violators are brought to speedy trial and, if guilty, suffer the penalty of their crimes and misdemeanors: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we favor the arrest and trial of aliens who are guilty of crimes and misdemeanors and illegal entry into the United States, and when found guilty they be speedily deported; and be it further

Resolved, That in all cases of deportation of alien law violators, where the countries whence they came refuse to permit them to return, that such alien criminals be restricted of their liberties in detention camps or where they will not be permitted to have their freedom of action, and that the countries refusing to take them back be notified of the action taken respecting them.

A bill (S. 411) to provide for the deportation of aliens inimical to the public interest

Be it enacted, etc., That any alien or group of aliens whose presence in the United States is inimical to the public interest shall upon warrant of the Secretary of Labor be taken into custody and deported forthwith.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, under the head of resolutions I also ask that there be printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Junior Order United American Mechanics, at Philadelphia, Pa., signed by Mr. James L. Wilmeth, secretary, in regard to stopping all immigration for the next 10 years, or until such time as every American citizen shall have found employment.

Some time ago I introduced a bill in the Senate, now pending before the Immigration Committee, providing that no one shall be permitted to enter this country from foreign shores until every one of our American citizens has been provided with employment. The resolution to which I refer has to do with that subject.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Junior Order United American Mechanics is the oldest patriotic fraternity in America, dedicated to the principles of virtue, liberty, and patriotism, having been organized in 1853, recently celebrating its eighty-seventh anniversary; and

Whereas in the declaration of principles to govern the said Junior Order United American Mechanics are contained some of the loftiest patriotic sentiments to be found in the platform of any organization, such as maintaining and promoting the interest of Americans and shielding them from the depressing effects of foreign competition, assisting Americans in obtaining employment, encouraging Americans in business, establishing a sick and funeral insurance fund, maintaining the public-school system in the United States, and promoting and maintaining a national orphans' home; and

Whereas said national council has been incorporated under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania many years ago and has grown from its humble beginnings to a fraternity Nation-wide in its organization and membership; and

Whereas among the cardinal principles which it has adopted and advocated have been the restriction of alien immigration and the deportation of undesirable, law-violating aliens; and

Whereas the said national council has, in the most practical way, been instrumental in teaching the lessons of patriotism to the children of public schools of the Nation, as well as to the citizens thereof, through the presentation of the flag of our country, to be flown over American schoolhouses, also at public expense; and

Whereas the said Junior Order United American Mechanics was among the first advocates of restrictive immigration laws, and assisted materially in drafting the first general law of this kind which was written on the statute books of the Nation, known as the Burnett immigration measure of 1917, and has assisted in other legislation, both State and National, which has contributed to the restriction of immigration to a large extent; also in designing and assisting in securing the passage of deportation measures and the strengthening of naturalization laws; and

Whereas with all the efforts that have been put forth in the interest of Americanism and the giving of the preference to Americans in every relation of life by the said Junior Order, there still remains in this country approximately 4,000,000 unnaturalized aliens, with more gaining admission to our shores through existing quotas from European countries and without quota from the countries of the Western Hemisphere, to the detriment of our American citizens, in direct and positive competition with our American workingmen; and

Whereas many of the aliens who have been admitted to this country have not thought enough of our country and its institutions to apply for citizenship, but are content to work for wages in competition with our own citizens or to carry on a competitive business; and

Whereas many aliens from foreign countries have gained admission to the United States through fraudulent and unlawful means and have brought increased burdens on the taxpayers of the Nation through trials for offenses committed against the laws of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the national council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, with its 32 organized State councils, and with councils or lodges in nearly all the States of the Union, requests and demands that the immigration laws of the United States be strengthened by the erection of barriers which would prohibit the incoming of more aliens for a period of 10 years.

JAMES L. WILMETH,
Secretary, Junior Order United American Mechanics, Philadelphia, Pa.

JULY 12, 1940.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have before me a resolution adopted by the Junior Order United American Mechanics, at Philadelphia, Pa., signed by Mr. James L. Wilmeth, secretary, imploring this Government to keep out of the quarrels of Europe. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD under the heading of resolutions.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the National Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, through its national board of officers, has observed the tendency toward involving the United States in European war; and

Whereas we are opposed to the American Nation engaging in, or taking part in, any European conflict, or war, at this or any other time; and

Whereas the experiences of the American people in the last war, in the loss of manpower, both killing outright and maiming and rendering helpless so many citizens of this Nation, as well as involving the United States in tremendous debt for outfitting, supporting, and transporting, and keeping the Army in the field, as well as the prodigious loans which were made to the Allies, little of which has ever been returned or repaid: Therefore be it

Resolved by the National Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, That we are bitterly opposed to the United States going into war and transporting armies across the sea for the help, aid, or benefit of any European country, and that we believe the only justifiable war at this time would be for us to repel invasion of any enemy who might try to overrun the United States.

RESOLUTION OF INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS STUDY CLUB

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, under the head of resolutions, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the International Relations Study Club, of Rutherford College, Burke County, N. C., and signed by Edna V. Abernethy, secretary, together with a newspaper clipping from the Hickory (N. C.) Daily Record of July 16, 1940, entitled "Resolution Urges Allies Cede Isles to United States for Debts," which goes to show that the good women of North Carolina and other sections of the United States are interested in that subject, concerning which I have been talking for many years past.

I ask that the resolution be followed by an editorial from the Washington Times-Herald, which appears to be a reprint from the Chicago Tribune of July 26, 1940. The editorial is entitled "Atlantic Outposts."

I ask that the editorial be followed by a news article from the same newspaper, the Washington Times-Herald, containing a dispatch from London under date of July 25, by the United Press, entitled "Holland Balks at Habana Plan; French Also Reject Protectorate Idea."

There being no objection, the resolution and accompanying newspaper articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RUTHERFORD COLLEGE,
Burke County, N. C., July 16, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
Member Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. REYNOLDS: We, the members of the International Relations Study Club, auxiliary of the Women's Society of Christian Service of the Methodist Church, met on July 16, and after reading your speech on the Proposed Acquisition of British Caribbean Islands and British Honduras, the following resolution of approval was passed:

"Whereas there are groups in America seeking to involve the United States in the present European war, and whereas we believe that the peace and security of the United States should be preserved: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Rutherford College International Relations Study Club hereby submits the following resolutions:

"First. That we urge the Congress of the United States to take all possible precaution in keeping the United States from entering the European war.

"Second. That we urge the Congress to build a defense program adequate to protect our country from foreign aggression.

"Third. That we urge the Congress to approve the joint resolution of Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS for the acquisition of British islands in the Caribbean and British Honduras to make Europe pay their war debts.

"Fourth. That a copy of this resolution be sent to President Roosevelt, Congressman A. L. Bulwinkle, and Senators J. W. Bailey and Robert R. Reynolds."

Yours very sincerely,

EDNA V. ABERNETHY,
Secretary, International Relations Study Club.

[From the Hickory (N. C.) Daily Record of July 16, 1940]

RESOLUTION URGES ALLIES CEDE ISLES TO UNITED STATES FOR DEBTS

RUTHERFORD COLLEGE, July 16.—The International Relations Study Club, at its monthly meeting here Monday afternoon, passed a resolution approving the proposal of Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS whereby the British and French West Indies would be ceded to the United States in payment on the Allied war debts, and the deposits of Germany and Italy in American banks would be attached.

The vote on the resolution followed a discussion led by Mrs. A. T. Abernethy on the topic European Colonies in the Western Hemisphere.

Reading the Monroe Doctrine, the speaker pointed out that in the 117 years since its adoption in 1823 no European possession in the New World has shifted from one European power to another. The present Congress has reaffirmed the Monroe Doctrine, and a diplomatic warning has been sent to Germany, Italy, France, Great Britain, and Holland, Mrs. Abernethy said.

The question of American defense was discussed in relation to the island holdings and four mainland possessions in the Western Hemisphere, which could be a source of difficulty. Many of these strategic islands lie close to the shore of the Southern United States, such as Bimini in the Bahama archipelago, less than 50 miles from Miami; Bermuda, about 530 miles east of Kitty Hawk, N. C.; Barbados, Jamaica, and British Honduras. France has Martinique and about 600 miles off the west coast of North America is another French possession, Clipperton Island, the nearest island to the Panama Canal. The Netherlands also has colonies in the Western Hemisphere.

The Southern Council on International Relations, the speaker said, suggests that defense of the Western Hemisphere is a matter of two things—first, economic self-sufficiency and continental solidarity; and second, battleships. All of the American republics, including the United States, are vulnerable to Old World pressure, because of their need to sell abroad, Mrs. Abernethy said, and one of the most successful techniques employes by the totalitarian governments has been the use of the economic pressure and puppet government.

Reading a speech of Senator REYNOLDS, the proposed acquisition of British Caribbean islands and British Honduras, as payment on the British war debt, Mrs. Abernethy also quoted Maj. George Fielding Eliot, who said: "Strategic value seen for United States in Atlantic island. Possession would give vast aid to defense." A motion was then made and carried approving cession of the islands.

The club met at the home of Mrs. L. C. Johnston, with the chairman, Mrs. G. T. Whitley, in charge. The program opened with soft music played at the piano by Mrs. P. M. Rutherford, followed by singing of America by the entire group. Rev. J. R. Duncan conducted the devotional. The chairman introduced Miss Maude Burrus, a visitor, who gave a number of entertaining readings. After Mrs. Abernethy's speech and passage of the resolution, the meeting adjourned with roll call answered by current events and the singing of God Bless America.

An ice course was served by the hostess, assisted by her sister, Mrs. Lucile Compton, of Washington, D. C.

ATLANTIC OUTPOSTS

A House Military Affairs Subcommittee has recommended to Congress that the United States immediately acquire and fortify naval and air bases in Nova Scotia and Bermuda.

Nova Scotia is Canadian territory. Our military interest in it is that it is the logical point for establishment of an American base for an attack on New England with its essential war industries. It is unlikely that the Canadians will be willing to cede us territory there. They consider themselves capable of defending their own shores and have good reason for that confidence. In any event the transfer of a Nova Scotian base is unnecessary.

DEFENSE TREATY WITH CANADA IS NEEDED

The same end can be served if this country will make an appropriate defensive treaty with Canada. Such a treaty, which the Tribune has recommended before, should be made at once, and should be followed immediately by staff talks between the armies and navies for common defense of Nova Scotia and other points in which we have a vital joint interest.

Some of the people who seek to embroil the United States in war in Europe have sought to represent that such an alliance would put us in the war. It would not. The United States and Canada have a common interest, which is the defense of North America. That the treaty would provide for. Each nation, likewise, has interests which the other does not share and those would be outside the purview of the defensive alliance.

Canada, in accordance with her duty as a member of the British commonwealth of nations, is making most valuable contributions in men and munitions to the defense of Great Britain. While Americans south of the border applaud her effort and loyalty, they are at the same time resolved that their ships and men shall not fight in a European war.

BERMUDA A DAGGER AT OUR HEART

If that war comes to Canada, the treaty, it is true, would oblige us to join in the defense of Canada. We should be equally obliged to join that defense if there were no treaty. Our own safety would demand it. The treaty would merely assure that our effort would be coordinated with that of the Canadians to accomplish our joint task more efficiently.

Bermuda is held directly under the British Crown. It is a dagger pointed at the United States, offering bomber bases within easy range of New York and other Atlantic ports. The fact that Great Britain will never drive the dagger home is irrelevant. What is important is that the loss of the island would be no great military loss to Great Britain, although it would be disastrous to the United States, and the British have taken insufficient measures to defend it. They have more vital interests to guard.

The defense of Bermuda must be in the hands of the nation to which it is of vital interest. Our only recourse is to seek an outright transfer.

In the Caribbean are other European possessions—British, French, and Dutch—that we must defend to defend ourselves. Only a few months ago President Roosevelt characterized demands that we acquire them as silly. His proposals to defend the Western Hemisphere are far sillier so long as he fails to get the island bases that alone can make the defense feasible.

A LOST OPPORTUNITY

A few months ago the President might have dealt with the French Government for its islands on the basis of the aid that the French were seeking and getting from American industry. Today that Government has been replaced by one that is a tool of Hitler. By his paltering the President has lost our opportunity to negotiate. It is unlikely that we can now get title to the French islands except by force.

The President's acts are so at variance with his words that little credence can be attached to the words. He talks, it is true, of defending the Western Hemisphere—North and South America—and pledges himself against sending American forces to Europe. But when he refuses to seek the bases without which our attempts to prevent invasion of South America would be fruitless, the logical conclusion is that his idea of hemisphere defense starts at the English Channel.

HOLLAND BALKS AT HABANA PLAN—FRENCH ALSO REJECT PROTECTORATE IDEA

LONDON, July 25.—The Netherlands Government here announced today that it still exercises full authority over Dutch possessions in the Western Hemisphere and had so notified the Pan-American Conference at Habana. "Therefore there can be no question of putting them under a Pan American protectorate," the announcement said.

VICHY, FRANCE, July 25.—Officials of the Petain government today replied to the American proposal for a "protective mandate" over European possessions in the Western Hemisphere with a statement that French sovereignty there must be respected.

Secretary Hull's proposal, it was said, was not communicated officially to the Petain government, which regards such a "protective mandate" as being wholly unnecessary as far as the French possessions of St. Pierre and Miquelon, Martinique, Guadeloupe, and Guiana are concerned.

There is no possibility of these possessions falling into Germany's hands, it was insisted.

"France intends to maintain her sovereignty over her American colonies, as well as their integrity," said a spokesman. "She already has begun her own inquiry pointed toward economic and financial development of those colonies to reward the loyalty of their populations."

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9389) to more effectively utilize certain lands of the public domain, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1986) thereon.

INVESTIGATION OF RAILROADS, HOLDING COMPANIES, AND AFFILIATED COMPANIES

Mr. WHEELER (for himself and Mr. TRUMAN), from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, submitted additional reports of that committee, pursuant to Senate Resolution 71 (74th Cong.) authorizing an investigation of interstate railroads and affiliates with respect to financing, mergers, and certain other matters, which were ordered to be printed, as follows:

Missouri Pacific System: Reorganization, expansion, and financing, 1915–30 (Rept. No. 25, pt. 7);

Alleghany Corporation: Acquisition of Missouri Pacific Railroad Co.—Devices used to secure consent of Missouri Public Service Commission (Rept. No. 25, pt. 8); and Missouri Pacific System—Intercompany dividends and advances, 1926–31 (Rept. No. 25, pt. 9).

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McKELLAR:

S. 4215. A bill for the relief of Caffey Robertson-Smith, incorporated; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MALONEY:

S. 4216. A bill for the relief of Dr. Paul Roger Zahlmann; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NEELY:

S. 4217. A bill granting a pension to Juliette Reilley Hughes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

S. 4218 (by request). A bill to extend to the Virgin Islands the provisions of certain laws relating to vocational education and civilian rehabilitation; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. McNARY:

S. 4219. A bill to authorize the construction of flood-control works on the Walla Walla River and tributaries, Oregon and Washington; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BARKLEY:

S. 4220. A bill to provide for the completion of the Mammoth Cave National Park in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. ADAMS:

S. 4221. A bill to provide for the acquisition of additional land along the Mt. Vernon Memorial Highway in exchange for certain dredging privileges, and for other purposes; and

S. 4222. A bill to provide for a grant to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. of a right-of-way across certain land owned by the United States; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

(Mr. REYNOLDS introduced Senate 4223, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING—AMENDMENT

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to Senate bill 4164, the proposed military training bill, in the form of title II which I ask to have printed and lie on the table. I wish to read it at this time. It is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. LEE to the bill (S. 4164) to protect the integrity and institutions of the United States through a system of selective compulsory military training and service: At the end of the bill insert the following new title:

"TITLE II

"SEC. 201. Whenever war or the imminence of war creates an emergency which in the judgment of the President is sufficiently serious to necessitate an increase in the Military Establishment by the drafting of manpower, the President is authorized and directed to cause to be taken a census of the net wealth and income of every citizen of the United States, every resident alien, and every nonresident alien having any wealth in the United States. Upon the completion of such census, the President shall cause to be computed each person's ability to lend to the Government and shall classify all persons accordingly.

"SEC. 202. (a) Whenever it becomes necessary for the Government to borrow money for the prosecution of war or to provide for such expenditures for national defense as may be necessary to meet any emergency which in the judgment of the President necessitates an increase in the Military Establishment by the drafting of manpower, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, determine the sums which are necessary for such expenditures and shall issue bonds in convenient size and denominations for such sums. Such bonds shall not be transferable, shall bear interest at a rate not in excess of 1 percent per annum, and shall not be tax exempt either as to principle or interest.

"(b) The President shall pro rate among the persons covered by any census taken pursuant to this act the sums which such persons are required to invest in each separate issue of such bonds. Such proration shall be on a graduated scale similar to that of the graduated income tax, so that each person shall be required to invest according to his ability. This proration shall be repeated from time to time as long as it is necessary for the Government to borrow money to meet the emergency which necessitates an increase in the Military Establishment by the drafting of manpower.

"(c) Each such person shall purchase such bonds in the amounts so allotted and within the time so prescribed.

"(d) The borrowing power of the United States under this act shall not be exercised after the termination of the emergency which brought such power into existence.

"SEC. 203. (a) The President is authorized, in his discretion, to provide, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the acceptance by the United States of property or services which are valuable for the prosecution of war or the improvement of national defense in payment for the bonds provided for by section 202 of this act. Such rules and regulations shall provide for the method of valuation of any such property or services.

"(b) The President is further authorized to provide, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the acceptance from any person, in payment for the bonds authorized by section 202 of this act, of notes or other obligations of such person, bearing interest at a rate not to exceed 5 percent per annum and adequately secured by liens upon specified property.

"SEC. 204. (a) The President is authorized to establish such boards, agencies, and tribunals and to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act.

"(b) The President is authorized to employ such officials and employees and to make such expenditures as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 205. (a) Whoever shall knowingly violate any rule or regulation of the President under this act, on the conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both.

"(b) Whoever shall willfully refuse or fail to purchase the principal amount of bonds which he is required to purchase under this act shall, upon the conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"SEC. 206. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

Mr. President, I ask to have this amendment printed and lie on the desk. At the proper time I shall offer it to the bill for military training.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

ACTS RELATIVE TO PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES (S. DOC. NO. 264)

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document the first and second Hatch Acts. The first Hatch Act was printed as a Senate document with an accompanying opinion of the Attorney General (S. Doc. No. 135, 76th Cong.). I do not ask that the opinion be printed, because the Attorney General has rendered no opinion on the second Hatch Act, but I do ask that the two acts be printed as a Senate document, together with the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FINANCIAL STATEMENTS AND OTHER INFORMATION CONCERNING CERTAIN GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The routine morning business is closed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3920, Calendar No. 1836.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that under the rules of the Senate the calendar must be called on Monday unless the Senate otherwise decides.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like to discuss with the majority leader Senate Resolution 292, which is on the desk. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is that a resolution which comes over from a previous day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Parliamentarian that Senate Resolution 292 was ordered to lie on the table. It did not go over under the rule. Therefore it does not come up under that order of business.

Mr. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again state that a rule of the Senate requires the calling of the calendar under rule VIII on Monday, and it will be called unless the Senate otherwise orders by unanimous consent. The Senator from Kentucky has asked unanimous consent to waive the calling of the calendar. Is there objection to that request? The Chair hears none, and therefore it is so ordered.

Now, the Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 292. Is there objection?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what is the purport of the resolution?

Mr. BYRD. The resolution calls upon the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information with respect to Government corporations. Under a similar resolution, passed by the Senate a year ago, the information was furnished up to July 1, 1939. This resolution simply provides that the same information be furnished up to July 1, 1940.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have examined the resolution. It is similar to the resolution which was adopted a year ago applicable to reports up to July 1, 1939, and I myself see no objection to its adoption.

Mr. BYRD. This resolution merely extends to July 1, 1940, the time for which the information is requested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia for the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 292) submitted by Mr. BYRD on June 22, 1940, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed (1) to prepare and transmit to the Senate forthwith or as soon as practicable a complete financial statement for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1940, of each of the agencies and corporations enumerated in Senate Resolution No. 150, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, agreed to June 27, 1939; and (2) to secure and transmit to the Senate immediately a copy of the last annual report of each such agency and corporation, whether or not such report, pursuant to law, is required to be made to the Congress. The financial statements of such agencies and corporations herein required for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1940, shall be of the same character and shall include similar information for such fiscal year as the financial statement of such agencies and corporations for prior fiscal years heretofore transmitted to the Senate pursuant to such resolution and printed in Senate Document No. 172, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session.

AMENDMENT OF RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3920, Calendar No. 1836.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to that course, but I think we should have a quorum present, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark, Idaho	Johnson, Calif.	Schwartz
Ashurst	Clark, Mo.	Lee	Schwellenbach
Austin	Danaher	Lucas	Smathers
Bankhead	Davis	Lundeen	Taft
Barbour	Donahey	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Barkley	Ellender	McNary	Tobey
Bilbo	Gerry	Maloney	Townsend
Bone	Gibson	Mead	Tydings
Bridges	Gillette	Miller	Vandenberg
Burke	Green	Neely	Van Nuys
Byrd	Gurney	Norris	Wagner
Byrnes	Hale	Nye	Wheeler
Capper	Harrison	Overton	White
Caraway	Hayden	Pittman	Wiley
Chandler	Holman	Reed
Chavez	Holt	Reynolds

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] are necessarily absent.

Mr. BARKLEY. I announce that the Senators from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS and Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senators from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY and Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senators from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE and Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3920.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3920) to amend the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, as amended June 20, 1939, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the pending bill is a proposed amendment to the Railway Unemployment Insurance Act, providing chiefly for more adequate benefits to be paid unemployed railroad workers under that act.

If I may briefly recite the history of the legislation, the Senate will recall that in 1935 we passed the general Social Security Act, levying a 3-percent tax on pay rolls, as a method of inducing the States to erect unemployment-insurance systems. As the result of that legislation, all of the States in the Union now have such unemployment-insurance laws.

In 1938, because of the special nature of the railway industry and the fact that the Congress of the United States had always dealt separately with matters pertaining to employment on the railway systems, a bill was introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and myself, which provided for the creation of a Federal unemployment-insurance law for railway employees. In the absence of experience in the administration of unemployment-insurance funds, we desired to make certain that the fund was absolutely sound. If anything, we erred on the side of caution to insure the actuarial soundness of the fund.

As is very evident now from a short experience, we provided very inadequate benefit payments to the railway employees. Although, as we all know, they are in a very hazardous employment and are particularly subject to technological unemployment, we actually provided benefit payments for workers on the railways which were less than those now paid in most of the States of the Union. I can illustrate that by showing that under the present law the average benefit payment per week for total unemployment last year was about $7, whereas the average among the States was $10. In short, we have been operating under a system, established by the Federal Government itself, which was very unjust to the railway employees.

Not having had sufficient experience, we did not know how far a 3-percent tax upon the pay rolls of the railway industry would go toward providing adequate benefits. The rate of tax, I may say, is the same as that levied upon the pay rolls of all other employers in the country under the Social Security Act. The experience of a year shows that the reserve has far exceeded original expectations. A very much larger reserve exists today than was anticipated, although, as I will show, a perfectly adequate reserve would remain even if we enacted the proposed law providing for more adequate payments.

The pending measure has the support of the Railway Retirement Board, upon which there is one representive of the railroads, and is sponsored by the representatives of all of the standard railway labor organizations.

It was anticipated that we would be able to enact the proposed measure into law before July 1, but because of essential national-defense measures we were not able to secure its consideration by the Senate until today. In the bill we have provided that the new benefit payments should become operative July 1. Of course, that date has passed, and I shall propose an amendment which, while it seems to be lengthy, merely postpones the date until October 1, at which time we hope the legislation may have been enacted into law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be in order after the committee amendments shall have been acted upon. The committee amendments are first in order. The clerk will state the first amendment of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, on page 2, line 9, after the word "employment", to insert "after June 30, 1940", and in line 11, after the word "employer", to insert "or as an employee representative", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. Subsection (g) of section 1 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1094), as amended June 20, 1939 (53 Stat. 845), is hereby amended by adding thereto the following sentence: "For the purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of benefits and the amount of contributions due pursuant to section 8 of this act, employment after June 30, 1940, in the service of a local lodge or division of a railway-labor-organization employer or as an employee representative shall be disregarded."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 14, to strike out:

(h) The term "registration period" means, with respect to any employee, the period of 14 consecutive calendar days which begins with the first day for which such employee registers in accordance with such regulations as the Board may prescribe, and thereafter each period of 14 consecutive calendar days which begins with the first day for which he next registers after the end of his last preceding registration period.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(h) The term "registration period" means, with respect to any employee, the period which begins with the first day for which such employee registers at an employment office in accordance with such regulations as the Board may prescribe, and ends with whichever is the earlier of (i) the thirteenth day thereafter, or (ii) the day immediately preceding the day for which he next registers at a different employment office; and thereafter each period which begins with the first day for which he next registers at an employment office after the end of his last preceding registration period and ends with whichever is the earlier of (i) the thirteenth day thereafter, or (ii) the day immediately preceding the day for which he next registers at a different employment office.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. Subsection (h) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(h) The term 'registration period' means, with respect to any employee, the period which begins with the first day for which such employee registers at an employment office in accordance with such regulations as the Board may prescribe, and ends with whichever is the earlier of (i) the thirteenth day thereafter, or (ii) the day immediately preceding the day for which he next registers at a different employment office; and thereafter each period which begins with the first day for which he next registers at an employment office after the end of his last preceding registration period and ends with whichever is the earlier of (i) the thirteenth day thereafter, or (ii) the day immediately preceding the day for which he next registers at a different employment office."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, in the table after line 2, to strike out "$199" and insert "$199.99", to strike out "$474" and insert "$474.99", to strike out "$749" and insert "$749.99", to strike out "$999" and insert "$999.99", to strike out "$1,299" and insert "$1,299.99", and to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$1,599.99", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. Subsection (a) of section 2 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) Benefits shall be payable to any qualified employee (as defined in sec. 3 of this act) (i) for each day of unemployment in excess of 7 during the first registration period, within a benefit year, in which he has 7 or more days of unemployment, and (ii) for each day of unemployment in excess of 4 during any subsequent registration period beginning in the same benefit year.

"The benefits payable to any such employee for each such day of unemployment shall be the amount appearing in the following table in column II on the line on which, in column I, appears the compensation range containing the total amount of compensation payable to him with respect to employment in his base year:

Column I Total compensation	Column II Daily benefit rate
$150 to $100.99	$1.75
$200 to $474.99	2.00
$475 to $749.99	2.25
$750 to $999.99	2.50
$1,000 to $1,299.99	3.00
$1,300 to $1,599.99	3.50
$1,600 and over	4.00

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 19, after the words "days of", to strike out "unemployment;" and insert "unemployment", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 12. Subsection (f) of section 2 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(f) If (i) benefits are paid to any employee with respect to unemployment in any registration period, and it is later determined that remuneration is payable to such employee with respect to any period which includes days in such registration period which had been determined to be days of unemployment, and (i) the person or company from which such remuneration is payable has, before payment thereof, notice of the payment of benefits upon the basis of days of unemployment included in such period, the remuneration so payable shall not be reduced by reason of such benefits but the remuneration so payable, to the extent to which benefits were paid upon the basis of days which had been determined to be days of unemployment and which are included in the period for which such remuneration is payable, shall be held to be a special fund in trust for the Board. The amount of such special fund shall be paid to the Board and in the collection thereof the Board shall have the same authority, and the same penalties shall apply, as are provided in section 8 of this act with respect to contributions. The proceeds of such special fund shall be credited to the account. Such benefits, to the extent that they are represented in such a special fund which has been collected by the Board, shall be disregarded for the purposes of subsection (c) of this section."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 20, after the word "an", to strike out "unemployment compensation" and insert "unemployment", and on page 11, line 5, after the word "Board", to strike out "Provided" and insert "And provided further", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 16. Paragraph (v) of subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(v) any day in any period with respect to which the Board finds that he is receiving or has received annuity payments or pensions under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, or insurance benefits under title II of the Social Security Act, or payments for similar purposes under any other act of Congress, or unemployment benefits under an unemployment compensation law of any State or of the United States other than this act: Provided, That if an employee receives or is held entitled to receive any such payment, other than unemployment benefits, with respect to any period which includes days of unemployment in a registration period, after benefits under this act for such registration period have been paid, the amount by which such benefits under this act were increased by including such days as days of unemployment shall be recoverable by the Board: And provided further, That if any such payment, other than unemployment benefits, is less in amount than the benefits under this act which, but for this paragraph, would be payable and not recoverable with respect to such period, the preceding provisions of this paragraph shall not apply but such benefits under this act for such period shall be diminished or recoverable in the amount of such other payments."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 13, after the word "make", to strike out the article "a" and insert "or", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 21. Section 6 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. Employers shall file with the Board, in such manner and at such times as the Board by regulations may prescribe, returns under oath of compensation of employees, and, if the Board shall so require, shall distribute to employees annual statements of compensation: Provided, That no returns shall be required of employers which would duplicate information contained in similar returns required under any other act of Congress administered by the Board. The Board's record of the compensation so returned shall, for the purpose of determining eligibility for and the amount of benefits, be conclusive as to the amount of compensation earned by an employee during the period covered by the return, and the fact that the Board's records show that no return was made of the compensation claimed to be earned by an employee during a particular period shall, for the purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of benefits, be taken as conclusive that no compensation was earned by such employee during that period, unless the error in the amount of compensation in the one case, or failure to make or record return of the compensation in the other case, is called to the attention of the Board within 18 months after the date on which the last return covering any portion of the calendar year which includes such period is required to have been made."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 1, after the word "made", to strike out "from" and insert "from,"; in the same line, after the word "whether", to strike out "changes" and insert "charges", and in line 2, after the word "made" to strike out "upon" and insert "upon,", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 22. Subsection (c) of section 11 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all moneys at any time credited to the fund are hereby permanently appropriated to the Board to be continuously available to the Board without further appropriation for any expenses necessary or incidental to administering this act. Determinations of the Board whether requisition should be made from, and whether charges or encumbrances should be made upon, the fund or an appropriation for administrative expenses arising in any other authorized activity of the Board shall be binding and conclusive for all purposes and upon all persons, including the Comptroller General and any other administrative or accounting officer, employee, or agent of the United States, and shall not be subject to review in any manner."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 13, after the word "following" and the quotation mark, to strike out "Provided" and insert "And provided further"; in line 14, after the word "That", to insert "for the purpose of registering unemployed employees who reside in areas in which no employer facilities are located, or in which no employer will make facilities available for the registration of such employees"; in line 19, after the word "accept", to insert "in such areas"; in line 20, after the words "registration of", to insert "such"; on page 24, line 3, after the word "of", to strike out "Columbia:" and insert "Columbia;", and in the same line, to strike out "And provided further" and insert "Provided", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 26. Subsection (1) of section 12 of said act is hereby further amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a colon and adding the following: "And provided further, That, for the purpose of registering unemployed employees who reside in areas in which no employer facilities are located, or in which no employer will make facilities available for the registration of such employees, the Board may, without regard to civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, appoint persons to accept, in such areas, registration of such employees and perform services incidental thereto and may compensate such persons on a piece-rate basis to be determined by the Board. Notwithstanding the provisions of the act of June 22, 1906 (34 Stat. 449), or any other provision of law, the Board may detail employees from stations outside the District of Columbia to other stations outside the District of Columbia or to service in the District of Columbia, and may detail employees in the District of Columbia to service outside the District of Columbia: Provided, That all details hereunder shall be made by specific order and in no case for a period of time exceeding 120 days. Details so made may, on expiration, be renewed from time to time by order of the Board, in each particular case, for periods not exceeding 120 days."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 24, after the word "this", to strike out "subsection" and insert "section", and on page 26, line 10, after the words "amount of", to insert "annuities, pensions, or death", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 29. Section 9 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"9. (a) If the Board finds that at any time more than the correct amount of annuities, pensions, or death benefits has been paid to any individual under this act or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 or a payment has been made to an individual not entitled thereto (including payments made prior to July 1, 1940), recovery by adjustments in subsequent payments to which such individual is entitled under this act or any other act administered by the Board may, except as otherwise provided in this section, be made under regulations prescribed by the Board. If such individual dies before recovery is completed, recovery may be made by set-off or adjustments, under regulations prescribed by the Board, in subsequent payments due, under this act or any other act administered by the Board, to the estate, designee, next of kin, legal representative, or surviving spouse of such individual, with respect to the employment of such individual.

"(b) Adjustments under this section may be made either by deductions from subsequent payments or, with respect to payments which are to be made during a lifetime or lifetimes, by subtracting the total amount of annuities, pensions, or death benefits paid in excess of the proper amount from the actuarial value, as determined by the Board, of such payments to be made during a lifetime or lifetimes and recertifying such payments on the basis of the reduced actuarial value. In the latter case recovery shall be deemed to have been completed upon such recertification.

"(c) There shall be no recovery in any case in which more than the correct amount of annuities, pensions, or death benefits under this act or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 has been paid to an individual or payment has been made to an individual not entitled thereto (including payments made prior to July 1, 1940) who, in the judgment of the Board, is without fault when, in the judgment of the Board, recovery would be contrary to the purpose of the acts or would be against equity or good conscience.

"(d) No certifying or disbursing officer shall be held liable for any amount certified or paid by him in good faith to any person where the recovery of such amount is waived under subsection (c) of this section or has been begun but cannot be completed under subsection (a) of this section."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 20, after "July 1", to strike out "1940;" and insert "1940,", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 30. Subsection (e) of section 1532 of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended by adding thereto the following sentence: "For the purposes of determining the amount of taxes due pursuant to sections 1500 and 1520 of this subchapter and sections 2 (a) and 3 (a) of the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937, compensation earned in the service of a local lodge or division of a railway-labor-organization employer shall be disregarded with respect to any calendar month if the amount thereof is less than $3 and (1) such compensation is earned between December 31, 1936, and April 1, 1940, and taxes thereon pursuant to sections 1500 and 1520 of the Internal Revenue Code or sections 2 (a) and 3 (a) of the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937 are not paid prior to July 1, 1940, or (2) such compensation is earned after March 31, 1940."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. WAGNER. Now, Mr. President, I offer the amendment to which I have heretofore referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 3, after the word "That", it is proposed to strike out "the provisions of this act shall take effect on July 1, 1940, except that a half-month which has begun prior to such date in accordance with the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act and regulations made thereunder, and which includes such date, shall continue, and benefits with respect thereto shall be computed and paid in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been enacted, and the provisions of this act shall become operative with respect to any employee having such half-month only upon the termination of such half-month," and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

The provisions of this act shall take effect on October 1, 1940, except that sections 2, 11, 28, 29, and 30 shall be effective as of July 1, 1940, and sections 19 and 20 shall become effective upon the approval of this act: Provided, however, That—

(a) A half month which has begun prior to October 1, 1940, in accordance with the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act and regulations thereunder, and which includes such date, shall continue, and benefits with respect thereto shall be computed and paid as if this act had not been enacted; and

(b) All benefit years current on September 30, 1940, shall terminate on September 30, 1940, or on the last day of a half month which includes September 30, 1940, and October 1, 1940, whichever is later, and, for the purposes of section 2 (c) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act as amended by this act, all benefits paid for unemployment in half months begun subsequent to June 30, 1940, and prior to October 1, 1940, shall be deemed to have been paid for unemployment within the benefit year ending June 30, 1941; and

(c) Benefits for unemployment in the first registration period, beginning after September 30, 1940, of an employee who has, subsequent to June 30, 1940, completed a waiting period under section 3 (b) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, shall be determined and computed as though such registration period were a subsequent registration period in the same benefit year.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, unless better order is kept we might as well adjourn the session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon suggests that there be better order in the Senate. All the Chair can do is to request order be maintained.

Mr. McNARY. The Chair has the power to enforce order. That power is defined by the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes. The Chair will use all the power he has.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is the amendment which was just read at the desk an individual amendment following the disposition of the committee amendments? Or is it offered as a committee amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is an amendment to the text. It is not a committee amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Let me ask the Senator from New York, has this amendment been submitted to the committee?

Mr. WAGNER. No; it has not. I may say to the Senator from Oregon that earlier I explained clearly the purpose of the amendment. It simply postpones from July 1 to October 1 the date when the proposed law shall become effective. When the proposed legislation was drawn and considered by the committee it was assumed by those who had confidence in the judgment of the Senate and the House that it would be enacted before July 1, and therefore we made the effective date July 1. That date has now passed, and all the amendment does is to change the effective date from July 1 of this year to October 1 of this year.

Mr. McNARY. Because of the disorder in the Senate Chamber I was unable to understand clearly the amendment as it was read by the clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon desire to have the amendment read again?

Mr. McNARY. No; but I inquire why was not the amendment submitted to the committee in the usual way?

Mr. WAGNER. The bill was reported before July 1, and it was expected by the committee that the bill would be immediately considered by both Houses of Congress and passed in time to be enacted before July 1. Now that date has passed and we have been away since then, so that a new date had to be determined. We conferred with the members of the Railroad Retirement Board about the change, and I am sure the Interstate Commerce Committee will agree to it. We cannot pass a law now saying that it shall be effective July 1, when July 1 has already passed.

Mr. McNARY. I am not criticizing the Senator. When a bill comes to the calendar, and changes are desired, the usual practice is to submit the changes to the committee before they are submitted on the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. That is true when the change is other than the change of the effective date of the bill. In such case what the Senator suggests should be done.

Mr. McNARY. If that is all there is to the amendment——

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; that is all there is to the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. I repeat, I was unable to hear all the amendment read at the time it was read because of the disorder in the Chamber. If that is the sole effect of the amendment, I shall make no objection to it. However, if it were to go to the substance of the bill, I think it would be better practice to submit the amendment to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to section 1.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. There are some details of the bill that I thought I should briefly explain and then conclude, for I am sure the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] will want to be heard.

The bill establishes a uniform benefit year for all claimants, in place of the present individual benefit year beginning with each claimant's first compensable half-month period. The present system has caused a great deal of confusion, which is eliminated by providing for a uniform benefit year beginning with July 1, and ending with June 30 of the following year. Incidentally, railway labor has accepted this change, although it is greatly to the disadvantage of some 29,000 employees. In order to make their contribution toward a better administration of the law, they are willing to make that sacrifice.

The waiting period has been reduced, broadly speaking, from 15 days to 7 days. During the first half-month registration period in which a claimant has 7 or more days of unemployment, benefits shall be payable for days of unemployment exceeding 7. In subsequent registration periods in the same benefit year, benefits shall be payable for days of unemployment exceeding 4 days. An important result is to reduce from 38 days to 22 days the time intervening between the first day of unemployment and receipt of the first benefit check.

The range of benefit rates per 14 days of unemployment is increased from the equivalent of $12.25 to $21 under the present law, to $17.50 to $40 under the present bill, for unemployed workers having comparable base-year compensation.

The maximum duration of benefit payments in any benefit year is increased from 80 days under present law to 100 days under the bill. Since the bill increases the number of compensable days in a registration period, this amendment is necessary in order to maintain the present 21-week duration of benefits.

Claimants may carry over into a current benefit year not more than 50 days—in addition to the 100-day maximum—of benefit payments unused in the preceding year. This amendment is especially important for the railroad workers whose employment is not seasonal, and who are therefore unemployed for long periods of time when they become unemployed at all. This follows a principle embodied in the British unemployment insurance system, and in the original State laws.

The need for increased benefits is clear and imperative. The present railway benefit rates average below $7 per week of total unemployment. This is far below the $10.19 average under State laws. As I have said, we are doing the railroad employees a very great injustice. In spite of the fact that we have this very large reserve, and that railroad workers are engaged in an unusually hazardous occupation, we are actually paying them $3 per week less than is paid to the unemployed, on the average, under the State laws.

It has been estimated that over 80,000 workers have received less than they would have received had they been insured under the unemployment compensation laws of their respective States. We are simply increasing their benefits so that they would compare favorably with those paid under the better State laws today. If the bill had been effective last year, unemployed railroad workers would have received $25,000,000 in benefits instead of $15,000,000 under the present law.

Incidentally, one Senator asked me the question again, although I thought I made that point very clear at the beginning, as to whether the proposed legislation will increase the tax on the railroads. I answer: "This does not in any way increase the tax imposed upon the railways." The 3 percent tax remains, and that is the same rate of tax paid by every other employer in the country under the Social Security Act.

The existing reserve is 9 times current annual benefit payments, whereas a ratio of 4 or 5 to 1 would be ample. Existing taxes are 4 times benefit payments, whereas a ratio of 2 to 1 would be safe in a year such as the present.

The average annual benefit load under this bill over a period of years would be about $50,000,000. In a year like the present the annual benefit load would be increased from 25 percent of tax income under present law to 43 percent under the expanded benefit scale. This leaves an amply safe margin of reserve.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What reserve will remain under the new system?

Mr. WAGNER. I am informed the reserve now is about $130,000,000, and that, even with this law in effect, the tax yield over the years will exceed benefit payments. The reserve will thus be increasing rather than decreasing.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The reserve is $130,000,000 and the annual estimated charge against the fund is what?

Mr. WAGNER. About $50,000,000 average over a period of years.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And it is estimated that on the new basis there will still be annual contributions to the reserve?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. There will be an increase in the reserve. There will be a slight increase in the amount which is there now—$130,000,000. So that with this bill in effect, the administration of the entire act will be on an absolutely sound actuarial basis.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, the Senator knows my views about the reserve.

Mr. WAGNER. I looked at the Senator while I was discussing that phase. I know of his interest in the matter. He is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. A reserve of 9 to 1 is absurd.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand that the base will not be increased, and that the reserve will remain about equal to what it is now.

Mr. WAGNER. If anything, the reserve will be a little higher.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yet in the minority report, which is attached to the majority report, it is stated that the amount of benefits will be doubled. If that be true, how can the Senator reconcile it with the statement that the reserve will remain about equal to what it is now? The 3-percent tax will remain the same, and yet the Senator says the reserve will be greater, even though the payments are doubled.

Mr. WAGNER. The payments this year have been only about one-fourth the tax.

Mr. ELLENDER. Will not doubling the payments require a greater reserve?

Mr. WAGNER. We should still have a large reserve left. The current payments would still be less than the amount currently collected under the 3-percent tax.

Mr. ELLENDER. Then the reserve would not be as great as it now is.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; it would be because there would still be an excess for each current year. The reserve will not be as great as it would if we should not double the benefit payments, but there will still be a margin.

Mr. ELLENDER. When the Senator said the reserve would be as great he was mistaken, was he not?

Mr. WAGNER. No.

Mr. ELLENDER. If the benefits are doubled, as the minority report shows, necessarily they would encroach on the reserve, would they not?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; but we are collecting a 3-percent tax all the time, which is currently yielding more than the amount we are paying out or would be paying out under the increased benefit scale.

Mr. ELLENDER. It is not proposed to increase the tax, but it is proposed to double the payments.

Mr. WAGNER. Our reserve is now nine times the requirements for benefit payments. There has been a general tendency, after a short experience by the States, to increase unemployment benefit payments because they are recognized to be inadequate. It has been discovered that the reserves are very much higher than was anticipated, comparable to benefit payments. We are doing here for railroad workers what some of the States are now doing for workers in industry at large. The States are not reducing the tax, but are increasing the benefit payments, which are now pitiably inadequate, certainly under this law as it is today, and under most of the State laws.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to make one further statement. In an article which appeared in the Social Security Bulletin, Mr. Altmeyer, the head of the Social Security Board, said:

> The benefit formulas incorporated in the early State laws do not represent what were considered to be adequate unemployment compensation benefits to covered eligible workers for the duration of their unemployment, but represent benefits which it was estimated a 3-percent tax could carry. In an effort to assure solvency of State funds, much too large a safety factor was used in the benefit formulas. As a result, the benefit formulas devised in those early days were exceedingly conservative. Despite the fact that a recession occurred in the early months of 1938, benefit payments, except in a few States, were therefore lower than had been anticipated, and surpluses began to pile up in the State funds. If this early conservatism evidenced in the benefit formulas in State laws were to result in the freezing of these benefit formulas and the accumulated surplus funds were now used as an argument for tax reduction rather than as justification for liberalization of benefit payments, the very purpose of the unemployment compensation system would be nullified.
> If the objectives of unemployment compensation are to be achieved there is no doubt that first and foremost benefits must be liberalized.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to make a general statement to the Senator in agreement with what he is now saying. It is my view, after a very considerable study of the reserve problem, that a needlessly large reserve is a tax-supported pension system or workmen's compensation system becomes the equivalent of an income tax on the workers of the country without any justification whatsoever.

Mr. WAGNER. Does not the Senator agree that it has a general deflationary influence?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, that is all I care to say.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, the bill under consideration is an important piece of legislation, having to do with a reserve fund of about $150,000,000 and an assessment of employers which brings in about $66,000,000 a year. I believe the Senate should be informed on this legislation. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bankhead	Bilbo	Burke
Ashurst	Barbour	Bone	Byrd
Austin	Barkley	Bridges	Byrnes

Capper	Green	Maloney	Taft
Caraway	Gurney	Mead	Thomas, Idaho

Ellender	Lucas	Reynolds	White
Gerry	Lundeen	Schwartz	Wiley
Gibson	McKellar	Schwellenbach
Gillette	McNary	Smathers

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, as I stated a few moments ago, this is important legislation. It has to do with a fund that is now being administered by the Railroad Retirement Board and which contains approximately $150,000,000. It taxes the railroads on all their employees 3 percent of the amount paid the employees in salaries, and it brings into the fund each year about $66,000,000, or will do so this year, depending on the number of the employed. So I should like to give a little history of this proposed legislation.

First, I will say that the Senator from New York introduced a bill known as S. 3920. A little later I introduced a bill known as S. 3925. The benefits under the present act would be increased by Senate bill 3920, 115 percent. Had the Senate bill 3925, the bill which I introduced, been accepted, the benefit payments would have been increased about 25 percent.

During the hearings there was considerable information elicited, and daily benefit rates were discussed so that now there is a bill in the nature of a substitute which I have had printed and which I intend to offer as an amendment to Senate bill 3920, which will, if it shall be accepted, increase the benefit payments about 30 percent above the present act.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Has the Senator offered the proposed substitute and has it been printed?

Mr. GURNEY. It has been printed, but I have not as yet offered it.

HISTORY OF RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT-INSURANCE LEGISLATION

The beginning of railroad unemployment compensation in this country dates back, as the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has said, to the enactment of the Social Security Act, approved in August 1935.

That act was not hurriedly drawn. It was the product of the best thought of more than 100 outstanding experts in the field of industry, commerce, Government administration, economics, labor organizations, welfare, and employment, who devoted months of intensive study to the whole subject.

The unemployment-compensation provisions of the Social Security Act established the framework and set up the general rules for a Federal-State system of unemployment insurance. Beginning in 1936, the several States enacted legislation to fit into this framework and meet these rules. Railroad employees were covered by the provisions of the various State acts. They were entitled to all the benefits set up in those acts.

Such then was the situation in 1938, when railroad employees asked to be removed from under the provisions of the several State acts and transferred to the protection of an act of their own. They supported legislation in Congress to establish a separate national system of unemployment insurance for railroad workers which they said was necessary to meet conditions of employment peculiar to their industry. Such legislation was enacted and became the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, which was approved June 25, 1938, and became effective July 1, 1939.

That was just a little over a year ago, and now, without sufficient experience, they seek to increase the benefits 115 percent above those provided in an act which has been in force only a year and about a month.

This legislation had the support of railway labor, and it seemed reasonable to assume that an adequate period of time would elapse, during which the operation of the act could be observed and analyzed, before any changes would be proposed. Such was not the case, however. Even before the act became effective certain amendments were offered. It is true that in the main these amendments were for the purpose of removing certain administrative complexities. There was, however, one amendment which tended toward liberalization, and which changed the method of determining the waiting period. These amendments were adopted and became law on June 20, 1939.

Surely now the situation, so far as railway labor was concerned, was satisfactory. But no. With less than 1 year of operation under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, as amended June 20, 1939, railway labor now proposes that Congress further amend the act to the extent that the benefit provisions and the annual cost thereof will be more than doubled. The Railroad Retirement Board, which administers the act and has all the records of railroad employment and unemployment in its possession as a function of its administration, has estimated that Senate bill 3920, which incorporates these amendments, will increase the cost of the present act by 115 percent.

This move on the part of railway labor was undoubtedly prompted by the fact that the period since July 1, 1939, has been one of exceptionally favorable employment conditions, and unemployment benefit payments have therefore been far below what might be experienced in a like period of less favorable employment conditions.

It is a matter of common knowledge, I believe, that railway management and railway labor generally confer concerning legislative matters of this kind and attempt to reach an agreement mutually satisfactory. The present proposals of railroad employees for liberalization were discussed at a number of such conferences, and the position was taken by representatives of management that such a radical increase in benefit costs as 115 percent was unwarranted and unwise in the absence of sufficient experience and factual data for reasonable estimates of cost over a period of years in the future, when employment will at times go down and unemployment benefit payments will heavily increase.

Railway management did, however, agree that some liberalization was justified, and proposed a more moderate increase in benefits which would increase the present basis of costs about 30 percent. Management also believed that there would be an incentive for carriers to stabilize their employment, to the advantage of both their employees and themselves, and suggested a graduated tax scale, to which I shall later refer.

Representatives of railway labor, however, were unyielding in their demand for more than doubled benefits and in their refusal to consider the proposal of the carriers for a graduated tax scale designed to stimulate the stabilization of railway employment.

As a result, instead of railway management and railway labor supporting one "agreed bill," two separate measures were introduced in May of this year. One is S. 3920, embodying the employees' proposal for increased benefits, estimated to increase costs by 115 percent, while the other is S. 3925, the carriers' proposal, the increased cost of which is estimated at 30 percent.

The Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce has considered both these bills after hearings before a subcommittee. The majority report of the committee favored S. 3920. The minority report, to which five members of the committee signed their names, favored enactment of S. 3925, with some slight modifications proposed by them.

I was one of the five who signed the minority report, and I favor the substitution of S. 3925, as modified, for S. 3920. Let me say in all earnestness that neither I nor the other four signers of the minority report have anything but sympathy for the unemployed worker. Our position, we believe, is not only not unfriendly to railway labor, but it is in the interest of labor. I believe the enactment of S. 3925 as modified by us will give railway workers more liberal benefits, will conserve the financial soundness of the unemployment-insurance system we have provided for them, and will offer their employers an incentive more fully to stabilize railway employment. All these things are in the interest of labor, not opposed to such interest.

Before passing to the purpose and provisions of these two respective amendatory measures, I should like to emphasize that the entire period since the enactment of the Social Security Act in 1935 has been one of experimentation and change. As I have already said, the present Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act has been operative less than a year. A complete cycle of employment and unemployment, under both favorable and adverse conditions, such as is vitally necessary for reasonable estimates of cost, has not yet been experienced. However, should it be regarded as mandatory that some change be made at this time, it seems obvious that the approach should be one of caution and conservatism rather than one of reckless abandon. I think that is a fair description of the contrast between a proposal to increase the cost of a system of unemployment insurance which has been in operation less than 1 year by 30 percent, and one that would increase the cost by 115 percent.

The economic and social uncertainties inherent in the present disturbed international situation present all the more reason for the most careful consideration of any proposals of the sort here involved.

FUNDAMENTALS OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

For a better understanding of the provisions of S. 3920 and S. 3925, I point out that while a system of unemployment insurance is a rather complex thing, there are certain basic fundamentals that can be simply described and easily understood. Briefly, these fundamentals are:

First. A wage-eligibility requirement.

This is a stated minimum amount of earnings in a defined prior period to be eligible for benefits.

Second. A base year or period.

This is the defined prior period, earnings during which determine eligibility for daily rates of benefit according to a fixed schedule.

Third. A benefit year.

This is a stated period of 12 months within which benefit days of unemployment may be compensated, up to a fixed maximum.

Fourth. A schedule of benefits.

This is a fixed schedule of daily rates of benefit, graduated according to the total amount earned by the employee in his base year.

Fifth. A registration period.

This is a stated unit interval of time for which an employee must register for unemployed days, and during which a fixed number of days of unemployment are compensable. It automatically becomes the period of time between payments of benefit checks for continuing unemployment.

Sixth. Compensable days in registration period.

These represent the number of days of unemployment in a registration period for which benefits may be paid.

Seventh. Maximum duration of benefits.

This is the maximum number of benefit days which may be compensated in a benefit year.

Eighth. A waiting period.

This is a fixed initial period of time for which an employee must register upon first becoming unemployed, and for which no benefits are payable. It must be served only once, however, in a benefit year.

COMPARATIVE PROVISIONS OF S. 3920 AND S. 3925

With these basic fundamentals in mind, a comparison of the respective provisions of S. 3920 and S. 3925, as modified in the minority committee report, may be briefly made.

The minimum earnings in the base year necessary to qualify for benefits under S. 3920 is $150. It is the same under S. 3925. Both bills provide that the base year shall be the calendar year immediately preceding the benefit year.

Both S. 3920 and S. 3925 provide a uniform benefit year from July 1 to June 30 for all employees. This amendment, as well as that with respect to the base year, is designed principally in the interest of administrative simplicity. They present no issue, because both bills are identical with respect to that provision.

The schedule of daily benefit rates in S. 3925, as recommended in the minority report of the committee, is identical with that provided by S. 3920. S. 3925 as originally introduced provided a benefit schedule suggested by Mr. Murray W. Latimer, Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board, who is sitting next to the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] at this time, and was submitted by representatives of railway labor as that desired by them at the time of their conferences with representatives of railway management. In fact, the schedule of benefit rates of S. 3925 as originally introduced was identical with that of S. 3906, introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] on May 2, which was reintroduced with a revised benefit schedule on May 6 as S. 3920. So again it appears that the theme of this legislation is change, constant change, frequent change, sudden change. However, S. 3925 as modified now contains the identical benefit schedule of S. 3920. This provision, too, presents no debatable issue.

The weekly benefit under this schedule ranges from $8.75 per week for a person whose base-year earnings were $150 to $200, up to $20 per week for a person whose base-year earnings were $1,600 or more. Under the present Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act the range is from a minimum of $6.53 per week to a maximum of $11.20 per week.

The registration period provided by both S. 3920 and S. 3925 is 14 consecutive calendar days. Both of the proposed amendatory measures propose to compensate for 10 days of unemployment in each registration period of 14 days. This is a much more liberal provision than that of the present act, which is 8 compensable days in each period of 15 days.

Summarizing the fundamental provisions of the two bills thus far, we find that as to wage eligibility, base year, benefit year, benefit schedule, registration period, and compensable days within a registration period there is no difference or issue. That this is true is due largely to concessions made by the railroads with respect to amendments advocated by the employees.

We now come to two basic provisions as to which S. 3920 and S. 3925 differ and upon which the carriers and employees take issue. These are the duration of benefits, which determines the maximum amount of benefits to be paid within the benefit year, and the waiting period.

MAXIMUM BENEFITS

As I have already pointed out, the present Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act provides for payment of 8 days of unemployment in each registration period of 15 days. The maximum number of days for which benefits may be paid is 80 within each benefit year. This means that benefits for total unemployment are paid for a maximum of approximately 21½ weeks. S. 3925 proposes to retain the present maximum of 80 compensable days, but to pay benefit for 10 days in each registration period of 14 days. While under this arrangement a totally unemployed person would draw benefits for 16 weeks instead of 21½ weeks, his weekly rate of benefit would be much greater. In addition, the great bulk of the employees would be entitled to larger maximum benefits over the 16-week period than they can now draw over a 21½-week period. They get more money over the whole period than under the present act and draw it in much larger weekly installments.

Since it has been stated by the Railway Retirement Board that only 13 percent of the unemployment in the current fiscal year has been of maximum duration, it is obvious that the proposal of S. 3925 is one of most material liberalization.

S. 3920 proposes to go even further, however, and to increase the maximum number of benefit days in a benefit year from 80 to 100. It would also provide a so-called carry-over of unused benefit days up to 50 from one benefit year to a succeeding benefit year. The addition of 20 compensable days in a benefit year would place the Railroad Act far ahead of the majority of State acts with respect to maximum duration of benefits. The carry-over provision is still a greater measure of liberalization which is new, novel, and expensive. It is new because no State law has such a provision. It is novel because, in effect, it is the grant of a special bonus to a man who is continuously employed, rather than unemployed, and gives the regularly employed man a special equity in an unemployment system to which he has made no contribution, and for which he has less need than an employee not so fortunately placed. It is expensive because, according to an estimate of the Railroad Retirement Board, it would of itself alone add an increase of 25 percent to the cost of the system, on top of all other increases in costs. That is, it would be a cumulative increase of 25 percent.

THE WAITING PERIOD

The second point of issue, as I have said, is the waiting period. The present act provides a waiting period of 15 days, with not less than 8 days of unemployment.

S. 3925 provides that an employee, to become eligible for benefits, must serve a period of 14 consecutive days during which he has had not less than 7 days of unemployment. This period must be served only once during a benefit year.

This requirement is admittedly as liberal as that of any State act, and more liberal than the waiting-period requirement of State laws covering 40 percent of the total employment embraced by the Federal-State system of unemployment insurance. Of the 49 State acts, including the District of Columbia, 47 provide a waiting period of either 2 or 3 weeks; only two provide a period of 1 week.

S. 3920 proposes a waiting period of only 7 days of unemployment in the initial registration period of 14 days. This means that benefits would be paid for 7 days in the first registration period. This is a more liberal provision than that of any State act.

It is argued by the proponents of S. 3920 that this change is desirable, because it reduces the interval of time between the first day of unemployment and receipt of the first benefit check. This interval of time under S. 3925 is 4 weeks. The same condition exists under the provisions of the separate acts of States which cover more than 40 percent of all employees included in the several State acts. Furthermore, railroad employees are in better position, with respect to receiving some cash income during the interval between first becoming unemployed and the first receipt of benefits, than the remaining 60 percent of employees covered by State acts. This is because of the semi-monthly pay period generally in effect on railroads, with actual pay days following the close of the pay period by 10 to 15 days. This means that as a general rule a railroad employee would, under the provision of S. 3925, receive two pay checks while waiting for his first benefit check. After receiving his first check, subsequent checks will follow at regular intervals of 2 weeks each.

It is obvious that the actual cause of this 4-week interval is the 2-week registration period which is provided by the act at the expressed wish of the employees.

The alternative and much more generous proposal of S. 3920 to pay benefits for 7 days in the initial registration period would be far more liberal than the several State acts, and would add to the cost of the system by 14 percent.

FUTURE COSTS UNDER EITHER BILL

Thus far I have referred to the increase which would result from enactment of either S. 3920 or S. 3925, in terms of percentage. What is this additional cost in actual dollars, and what is the basis of the estimate? The proponents of S. 3920 say that under that bill the benefit payments will average, over a period of years, between $50,000,000 and $52,000,000, or approximately double the present cost. How do they arrive at this result? It must be a pure estimate because there are no real supporting data. Bear in mind that this railroad unemployment-insurance system has been in operation less than 1 year, and only from the operations of the system since July 1, 1939, are there any records to show the unemployment of individuals engaged in the railroad industry. True, there are available mass figures with respect to the total number of full-time positions and the number of persons receiving pay each month, but at best these can only indicate trends because the unemployment-insurance system is based upon the individual's work pattern. A railroad may report that it has 1,000 employees in 1 month and the same number in the next month, but the individuals making up those 1,000 employees are not necessarily the same.

In 1938, when the railway-labor organizations came before Congress and asked for the establishment of what is now the present railroad unemployment-insurance system, it was stated by the Railroad Retirement Board that the benefit provisions then proposed would provide for payment equal to 147 percent of the amounts payable under the State acts. The Board further stated that the benefit provisions were as broad as could safely be made a part of the system, and supported by a 3-percent pay-roll tax. Congress acceded to the wishes of the labor organizations and gave them what they asked for. Now, with less than a year of actual operation under this system, we find the same parties before us with a proposal to more than double the benefit provisions. The proponents of S. 3920 do not know much more now than they did in 1938 about railroad employment as it affects individuals. It should be remembered in each month, beginning with July 1, 1939, there has been an increase in railroad employment as compared with the same month in the preceding year. Is that any kind of an experience record on which to base a request for more than doubling their unemployment benefits?

Railroads have their ups and downs—mostly downs—like all other industries. Employment is directly related to the volume of traffic, and that volume is not constant. It varies with the seasons and with economic conditions generally. In 1938 there was a severe drop in railroad employment as compared with 1937—not less than 200,000 railroad employees lost their jobs. Because of the extended period of the depressed business levels, all of these employees would have undoubtedly drawn maximum unemployment benefits. In addition, there would have been the usual seasonal unemployment, which is of such nature as to require the payment of about $16,000,000 in unemployment benefits during the current fiscal year. So from these figures we might reasonably estimate that unemployment benefits in 1938 would have been close to $60,000,000. Now, if a potential $60,000,000 of benefits be increased by 115 percent, the total would become the impossible sum of $129,000,000. Unquestionably, $16,000,000 is not the amount of annual average benefits that would be payable under the present act, and just as certainly $60,000,000 does not represent the average payment, but there is as much justification for taking one figure as the other. The only way we will ever determine the correct figure is through experience. In this experimental or determinative period there is no sound reason for establishing a system which we cannot with assurance say will be a reasonable one.

Does the record of the Railroad Retirement Board, in estimating annuities payable under the Railroad Retirement Act, give cause for any confidence in any estimate it may submit with respect to unemployment insurance? The record shows that Mr. Latimer supplied the House Committee on Appropriations with a comparison of the original estimated disbursements under the Railroad Retirement Act with the actual and revised estimated expenses for the years 1937 to 1941, inclusive. What does that comparison show? For 1937 original estimated disbursements were $10,860,000; the actual disbursements were $4,604,232. For 1938 the estimate was $58,280,000; the actual disbursements $83,029,794. For 1939 the estimate was $64,214,000; the actual disbursements $106,841,632. For 1940 the original estimate was $67,278,000; the revised estimate is $116,068,308. For 1941 the original estimate was $70,914,000; the revised estimate is $126,354,000. The total original estimated disbursements for these 5 years amounted to $271,546,000; the actual and revised estimated disbursements total $436,897,966, an increase of $165,351,966, or 61 percent. Voluble explanations of the causes for these increases have been offered, but that does not change the fact that as a consequence of erroneous estimates furnished to Congress the railroad retirement account is in a precarious position. Do we want to place the unemployment insurance account in a similarly precarious position? I for one do not, and that is why I advocate the more moderate increase in benefits provided by Senate bill 3925, rather than the more than doubled amounts provided by Senate bill 3920, on the basis of estimates submitted by the Railroad Retirement Board.

THE GRADUATED-TAX SCALE

The minority has recommended, in Senate bill 3925, the enactment of a provision for a graduated pay-roll tax scale. This scale would extend to the railroads, as Congress has extended to all other employers, the opportunity to earn a reduction in their pay-roll taxes, provided, and only provided, that employment is both regularized and stabilized.

A reduction of 1 percent in the tax would save the railroads more than $20,000,000 a year. Such a reduction would be due largely to the fact that the railroad benefit fund would receive from the State benefit funds, as a result of transfers required under the Railroad Act, more than $100,000,000, while the estimates of the amount to be transferred, as late as June 1939, were but $70,000,000. This difference of $30,000,000 is an unnecessary reserve. Couple this unexpectedly large transfer with the equally unexpected favorable employment situation in the current fiscal year and the result is a reserve fund of something over $130,000,000 on June 30, 1940, with an additional $15,000,000 due and payable within 60 days for the preceding quarter's taxes.

I have referred to the fact that until July 1, 1939, railroads and their employees were under the State unemployment insurance acts. The nonrecurring transfer of the $100,000,000 or more from the State benefit funds is the computed balance of railroad pay-roll taxes paid into those funds and not expended for benefits. Had railroads continued to be subject to the State acts they would have been entitled to such reductions in their tax rates as are provided under the applicable State experience rating systems. To transfer them to a national system supported entirely by their money, and then to deprive them of the opportunity to obtain a tax reduction, is the worst kind of discrimination.

I call attention also to the fact that when Congress passed the Social Security Act it recognized the experience rating principle through which employers may obtain tax reductions. It adopted the internal-revenue code, which also recognized this principle, and it passed the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act with an experience-rating provision. Of all the legislation enacted by Congress, only the Railroad Act deprives the employer of a tax-reduction opportunity. In the course of the hearing on the two bills—S. 3920 and S. 3925—Chairman Latimer, of the Railroad Retirement Board, opposed the principle of experience rating, and left no doubt in our minds as to that opposition. But what do others think about it? Actions still speak louder than words, and the facts are that an overwhelming majority of all State acts have a provision for experience-merit rating; and, as I said before, every act of Congress touching on this subject so provides, except the Railroad Act.

STABILIZATION OF EMPLOYMENT

Representatives of the railroads made the statement that railroads would rather pay wages for service than they would taxes for unemployment benefits. They also quite properly assumed that employees would rather receive wages than they would benefits. The graduated tax scale is designed to promote the accomplishment of these ends. Should Congress say that these purposes are not to be encouraged by excluding the provision for experience rating from the railroad act?

The railroads said:

> We do not know what we can do, but give us the chance and a reward if we succeed in stabilizing employment, and we will do our best. We believe that an incentive in the form of a tax reduction of $20,000,000 or more per year will enable us to attain some real stabilization.

Mr. Latimer offered some testimony as to the effectiveness of an experience-rating provision in an unemployment-insurance system. He went to great lengths in discussing railroad operations, to prove that they could not possibly gain from such a provision. But Mr. Latimer is not a railroad man, and it seems to me that instead of accepting his unsupported statement that railroads can do nothing about stabilizing employment, we should rely upon the statements and judgment of railroad men themselves.

ADMINISTRATIVE FEATURES

Let me now consider some of the administrative provisions included in the present act and perpetuated by S. 3920. First, there is the administration fund. That fund consists of 10 percent of all the pay-roll taxes levied on the railroads for support of the unemployment-insurance system. In addition to this current accumulation of funds, there is credited to the Railroad Retirement Board's administration fund all the taxes paid by railroads under title IX of the Social Security Act (and the same provision of the Internal Revenue Code) for the years 1936, 1937, 1938, and the first 6 months of 1939.

On current pay-roll levels and with a 3-percent rate, the administration fund receives some six million dollars a year. The additional amount transferred or transferable from the Federal Treasury is approximately $18,300,000.

Now, all these funds are permanently and continuously appropriated and available to the Railroad Retirement Board under broad authority to spend for any purpose which that Board may find to be necessary or incidental to the administration of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act. There is no limitation upon the amount which that Board can spend under this authority. There is no requirement that a budget be presented and justified before experts. All that is required is that the Board find that the expense is either necessary or incidental to the administration of the act. No other Government agency has such broad authority. No other Government agency is authorized and directed by Congress to collect taxes from a taxpayer and retain 10 percent of the amount so collected for expenditure within its own discretion, without the effective scrutiny of the Budget Bureau and appropriate committees of the Congress. Railroad representatives have characterized this procedure as furnishing a bank account with an original deposit of over $18,000,000 and recurring annual deposits of some $6,000,000 to the Railroad Retirement Board with a blank check book. I cannot help but concur in that characterization.

The majority says this arrangement is all right, and it says further that administration of the act by the Railroad Retirement Board has demonstrated that such provisions will not be abused. But is that last statement a fact? The House Committee on Appropriations does not think so, because, in reporting on the appropriation bill for 1941, that committee took occasion to say:

> It appears to the committee that while there may be some extenuating circumstances that would necessitate higher administrative costs in administering these payments (unemployment benefits) than would be incurred in administering other types of benefit payments, nevertheless, the present ratio of administrative costs to the amount of benefit payments is entirely too high and steps should be taken to bring about a reduction in overhead costs.

So much for abuse of authority.

I come now to the claim that it is impracticable to estimate in advance the requirement for administrative expenses of an unemployment insurance system. Is that a valid claim? Most certainly it is not. For proof of that statement I refer Senators to the fact that the Social Security Board, acting under the provisions which Congress placed in the Social Security Act, makes annual estimates of the administrative expenses for the 51 separate and diversified unemployment systems embraced within the Federal-State framework and secures from Congress annual appropriations to meet these expenses. Can anyone properly say that it is impossible to estimate in advance the cost of operating one single system in view of this record on 51 separate and distinct systems?

Again, the statement is made that not less than 10 percent of the pay-roll tax is required for administrative expenses of an unemployment insurance system. What are the facts in this case? As Chairman Altmeyer of the Social Security Board testified before the House Committee on Appropriations, the annual cost of administering the 51 Federal-State systems required 7.6 percent. When the railroad bill was before Congress the proponents said that it could be administered much more economically than the State systems because the Railroad Retirement Board was already doing much of the work required under the Insurance Act, in connection with its administration of the Retirement Act. The opinion was further expressed that the facilities of employers could be used in lieu of establishing new facilities which would still further reduce comparable costs. The railroads testified that immediately upon passage of the bill they got in touch with the Railroad Retirement Board and offered their services in helping to develop an efficient, economical administrative scheme. Under the plan adopted, the railroads have undertaken a major part of the claims work for which, as provided under the act, they are reimbursed only to the extent of actual, additional, out-of-pocket costs. Manifestly, this is a much more economical way to administer the act than for the Railroad Retirement Board to provide its own force for taking registrations at the thousands of points at which there is railroad employment. Thus, there should be no question about the Railroad Retirement Board needing less than the States for administering comparable acts, and as I have said before, the States spend only about 7.6 percent of their tax collections. Why should the Retirement Board require as much as 10 percent of the tax collections for administrative expenses?

There are other reasons why the administration fund should be safeguarded. The Railroad Retirement Board now administers two separate and distinct acts; one the Retirement and Pension Act, the other the Unemployment Insurance Act. The functions involved in administering these acts have many points in common. The Board and its employees render some service to both systems in carrying out their routine assignments. This calls for a division of expenses. Such a division is important, because the expenses of the unemployment-insurance system are borne solely by employers, while the expenses of the retirement system are payable in equal proportions by employers and employees. This latter arrangement is well known and is part of the agreement which resulted in the enactment of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937. Now under the Railroad Retirement Act the appropriations for administrative purposes are limited to the amounts which may be justified before the Bureau of the Budget and included in the annual appropriations by Congress. But under the Insurance Act the Board has practically an unlimited fund to draw upon. The possibility of using the insurance system's administrative fund to make up deficiencies in the retirement administrative fund can be readily seen.

As a matter of fact, when Mr. Latimer appeared before the House Committee on Appropriations to obtain his 1941 appropriation, Representative TARVER said to him:

> Isn't that a rather unsatisfactory system? For example—and I am not indicating you may desire to do this—but would it not be possible, if you did not have funds that you desired for the enforcement of the Railroad Retirement Act to employ a lawyer or other employee from this trust fund for the administration of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, which is substantially more than your needs, and charge one-tenth of him to the Railroad Retirement Act and nine-tenths to the Unemployment Insurance Act, although he might devote a substantially larger portion of his time than one-tenth to the work of the Railroad Retirement Act? Wouldn't there be considerable opportunity there for a shift of funds, so that funds intended for the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act could be used for the Railroad Retirement Act?

Mr. Latimer replied:

> I suppose we could get by until the General Accounting Office caught up with us.

By enacting S. 3920, we shall be perpetuating an arrangement whereby, as Mr. Latimer says, the Railroad Retirement Board could "get by" until the General Accounting Office caught up with it. I submit that this situation should be corrected now.

I also direct attention to the fact that bills are pending providing for the administration by the Railroad Retirement Board of two additional activities; one a system of unemployment insurance for maritime workers, and the other a workman's compensation system for railroad employees. If either or both of these bills should become law, there would be added reason for providing a distinct separation of, and specific appropriations for, the several administrative funds.

Senate bill 3925 is a step toward correcting this unusual situation. It does not propose to curtail in any way the legitimate expenditure of the Board, nor does it disturb the percentage of the tax collections which will go in the first instance to the administration fund. It merely provides an authorization for an annual appropriation for administrative expenses; and the Board would prepare, as do all other Government agencies, a budget estimate, submit that estimate to the Budget Bureau, and obtain its appropriation through the regular channels.

S. 3925 further provides that any sum in excess of $6,000,000 in the administrative fund on June 30 of any year shall be immediately transferred to the benefit fund. There is no necessity for accumulating huge reserves in the administrative fund, where they earn no interest and are of no use to any one. They might well be turned over to the benefit fund. At least they would earn interest while in that fund. Some realization of this fact is apparently had by the Railroad Retirement Board, as S. 3920 amends the present act so as to provide for transfer of excess reserves at the close of any year, provided the Board finds that there is a surplus over its needs. If we are to judge the future by the past, we cannot look forward with any great amount of confidence to large transfers.

There are included in S. 3920 other changes in the administrative provisions of the present act for which I find no justification. These include sections 25 and 26, which exempt the Board from certain of the requirements of the Civil Service system; section 27, which would allow additional leaves of absence to Board employees; and section 11, which provides for relief from liability of Board employees with respect to erroneous payments, such relief being not only prospective but retroactive. I shall not take the time to go into these matters in detail.

NOW NO TIME FOR RADICAL EXPERIMENTS

It is my personal thought that now is not the time to experiment with a statute which has been in operation less than 1 year. However, as both the railroads and their employees agree that some changes are highly desirable, I am willing to waive my own thoughts in the matter and support reasonable modifications. But we must realize that our railroads are in the front line of our national defense, and we should not completely ignore them in this or any other matter, nor should we permit our enthusiasm for social gains to allow the operations of this system under most favorable conditions to warp our judgment. I wish to reiterate the statement that no one knows what the average cost of the benefits under the present act or under either of the two proposals before the Senate will be. I, therefore, urge the Senate to adopt the views of the five minority members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce and enact the amendment in the nature of a substitute for Senate bill 3920, which I now offer as a substitute for the bill sponsored by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the Chair). The amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

> That subsection (h) of section 1 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1094), as amended June 20, 1939 (53 Stat. 845), is hereby amended to read as follows:
> "(h) The term 'registration period' means, with respect to any employee, the period of 14 consecutive calendar days which begins with the first day for which such employee registers in accordance with such regulations as the Board may prescribe, and thereafter each period of 14 consecutive calendar days which begins with the first day for which he next registers after the end of his last preceding registration period."
> SEC. 2. Subsection (j) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended by inserting the following sentence at the end of the first sentence thereof: "The term 'remuneration' also includes earned income other than for services for hire when in excess of an average of $1 per day during any registration period, if the accrual thereof in whole or in part is ascertainable with respect to a particular day or particular days."
> SEC. 3. Subsection (l) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:
> "(l) The term 'base year' means the calendar year immediately preceding the beginning of the benefit year."

SEC. 4. Subsection (n) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(n) The term 'benefit year' means the 12 months' period beginning July 1 of any year and ending June 30 of the following year, except that a registration period beginning in one benefit year and ending in another shall be deemed to be in the benefit year in which it begins."

SEC. 5. Subsection (a) of section 2 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) A qualified employee shall be paid benefits for each day of unemployment in excess of four during any registration period other than that prescribed as a waiting period in section 3 of this act.

"The benefits payable to any such employee for each such day of unemployment shall be the amount appearing in the following table in column II on the line on which, in column I, appears the compensation range containing the total amount of compensation payable to him with respect to employment in his base year:

$150 to $199.99	$1.75

SEC. 6. Subsection (b) of section 3 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the first sentence thereof and substituting therefor the following: "Within his benefit year he has had a waiting period of one registration period during which he had at least 7 days of unemployment."

SEC. 7. Paragraph (iv) of subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby amended by striking therefrom the term "half month" and inserting in lieu thereof the term "registration period."

SEC. 8. Paragraph (vi) of subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(vi) any day in any registration period comprising the last 14 days of a period of 28 days with respect to which the board finds that he earned, in train and engine service, yard service, dining-car service, sleeping-car service, parlor-car service, or other Pullman car or similar service, or express service on trains, at least the equivalent of 32 times his daily benefit rate."

SEC. 9. Subsection (a) of section 4 of said act is hereby further amended by adding at the end thereof the following additional paragraph:

"(vii) any Sunday which is not immediately preceded and immediately followed by a day of unemployment other than a holiday; and any holiday which is not immediately preceded and immediately followed by a day of unemployment other than a Sunday or other holiday."

SEC. 10. Subsections (a) and (b) of section 8 of said act are hereby amended to read as follows:

(a) Every employer shall pay a contribution, with respect to having employees in his service, equal to the percentage hereinafter set forth of so much of the compensation as is not in excess of $300 for any calendar month payable by him to any employee with respect to employment after June 30, 1939: Provided, however, That if compensation is payable to an employee by more than one employer with respect to any such calendar month, the contributions required by this subsection shall apply to not more than $300 of the aggregate compensation payable to said employee by all said employers with respect to such calendar month, and each such employer shall be liable for that proportion of the contribution with respect to such compensation which the amount payable by him to the employee with respect to such calendar month bears to the aggregate compensation payable to such employee by all employers with respect to such calendar month—

"(i) with respect to employment during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1939, and ending June 30, 1940, the rate shall be 3 percent;

"(ii) with respect to employment during any fiscal year after June 30, 1940, the rate shall be that appearing in the following table in column II on the line on which appears, in column I, a range of amounts within which falls the amount of the assets of the railroad unemployment insurance account as of June 30, of the preceding fiscal year: Provided, That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, the rate shall not be less than 2 percent:

Column I Insurance account assets	Column II Contribution rate, percent
Less than $100,000,000	3
$100,000,000, but less than $125,000,000	2
$125,000,000 or more	1

"It shall be the duty of the Board, as soon as practicable after the close of each fiscal year, to make a determination of the amount of the assets of the account as of June 30 of said year and give notice thereof, and of the resulting contribution rate for the ensuing year, to all employers and employee representatives subject to this act. In making such determination, the Board shall include as assets of the account, in addition to all amounts credited thereto, all amounts transferable to that account under the provisions of sections 13 and 14 of this act, and shall make reasonable estimates of the amounts so transferable if the exact amounts thereof have not been agreed to in accordance with the provision of said sections.

"(b) Each employee representative shall pay, with respect to his income, a contribution equal to the percentage prescribed in subsection (a) of this section of so much of the compensation of such employee representative as is not in excess of $300 for any calendar month, paid to him for services performed as an employee representative after June 30, 1939. The compensation of an employee representative and the contribution with respect thereto shall be determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if the employee organization by which such employee representative is employed were an employer as defined in this act."

SEC. 11. Subsection (c) of section 11 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the clause at the beginning thereof reading—

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all moneys at any time credited to the fund are hereby permanently appropriated to the Board to be continuously available to the Board without further appropriation for any expenses necessary or incidental to administering this act," and substituting therefor the following:

"There are hereby authorized to be appropriated from the fund such amounts as may be required to meet all expenses necessary or incidental to administering this act."

SEC. 12. Subsection (d) of section 11 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(d) So much of the balance in the fund as of June 30 of each year as is in excess of $6,000,000 shall as of such date be transferred from the fund and credited to the account."

SEC. 13. The provisions of this act (except section 11) shall take effect on July 1, 1940, except that a half month which is begun prior to such date in accordance with the act of which this act is amendatory, and regulations made thereunder, and which includes such date, shall continue and benefits with respect thereto shall be computed and paid in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been enacted, and the provisions of this act shall become operative with respect to any employee having any such half month only upon the termination of such half month. The provisions of section 11 of this act shall take effect on July 1, 1941.

DOMESTIC SUGAR INDUSTRY

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, at this time, when we are devoting our attention to building up our country's defense, it seems to me it would be well for us to consider the commodity resources which we should need in the event of war. In this connection I am thinking particularly of the domestic sugar industry.

During the last war we relied upon foreign producers for a major portion of our sugar. Everyone who remembers the Government's efforts to ration sugar knows the importance to us of our sugar supply. Following the war, when we were still relying upon foreign production, the price of sugar skyrocketed to 26 cents a pound and we were powerless to do anything about it.

Today the nations of Europe are again at war; and, remembering our experience 20 years ago, we should immediately take steps to insure our sugar supply. From the point of view of national defense, every commodity for which we are dependent upon foreign producers makes us increasingly vulnerable in time of war. It is to our national interest today, more than ever before, to produce in the United States as much as possible of every commodity we need.

However, this administration has followed a policy which has tended to discourage the domestic sugar industry in every possible way. It is only because of the opposition of Congress that Secretary Wallace and his theorists in the Department of Agriculture have not completely destroyed the western sugar-beet industry.

Let me recite some recent history. Prior to 1934 the United States had a tariff on Cuban sugar of 2 cents a pound. However, in June 1934 this tariff was reduced to 1.5 cents a pound by the President under the authority of the flexible provision of the Tariff Act of 1930—a provision which Secretary Hull, as a Member of Congress from Tennessee, had branded dangerous and unconstitutional.

Three months later the tariff on Cuban sugar was reduced to 0.9 cent a pound, under the authority of the Trade Agreements Act, which went far beyond the flexible provision which Secretary Hull had condemned. Last year the State Department was considering a further reduction to 0.75 cent a pound. Legislation accompanying this tariff reduction from 2 cents to 0.9 cent a pound provided for subsidies and production control of the domestic industry.

The present policy, in the main, is an extension of the program which began with the Jones-Costigan Act of 1934, declared unconstitutional in 1936. The Sugar Act now in effect allots 15.41 percent of the American market to the Philippines, 28.6 percent to Cuba, and 0.4 percent to other foreign countries. The remaining 55.59 percent is divided among the continental cane- and beet-sugar areas, as well as the offshore areas of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. The sugar industry on the American Continent is permitted to supply less than 30 percent of the American market, and the western beet-sugar area is limited to 23.19 percent.

A processing tax of 50 cents a hundred pounds is levied on sugar, and benefit payments, which amount to considerably less than the amount of the taxes collected, are paid to cane and beet growers, who are rigidly limited in the number of acres they may devote to these crops.

The administration has left little doubt as to its intention in setting up this sugar program. The President, in his message to Congress on sugar in 1934, strongly questioned the value of domestic sugar production, and intimated that it might ultimately be abandoned. Secretary Wallace quite bluntly stated the views of the administration in his testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee in 1934, when he said:

> The sugar-beet industry, as measured from the standpoint of free world competition, is inefficient.

What Secretary Wallace meant when he said that the domestic sugar industry is inefficient we shall try to see a little later. Other representatives from the Department of Agriculture came before the Senate and House committees to present the view that the American sugar industry is entitled to less consideration than foreign countries from whom we import sugar.

Senator Borah in 1934 summarized the administration's attitude toward the American sugar industry accurately and tersely in a single paragraph, which I will read:

> Some time ago we had before us legislation with reference to sugar, a matter of very great concern to the people of my State. There is not a Senator here who knows the facts about that matter who does not know that had the administrative authorities had their way the sugar industry in the West would have been doomed. It was so declared in plain language. It was thought to be an inefficient industry; but by reason of the fact that there were a Senate and a House where the voices of the respective Members counted, the program was so changed as at least to give the sugar producers a chance for existence. Men representing the Government appeared before the committees of Congress and coolly, rather indifferently, and with that solemn assurance so characteristic of a man learned in theory but illiterate in wisdom, declared that the sugar industry must be permitted to die; that it was not efficient and could not exist without doing violence to the integrity of that economic world which never existed, and never will exist, except in the fertile fancy of some restless dreamer. No thought was given to the thousands of farmers who had spent a lifetime almost in making the industry a success and whose very success gave the lie to theory. No thought was given to what was to become of these bankrupt farmers after the theorists got through with them. Had the power been given or had the power existed, this industry would have been destroyed by these theorists.

Mr. President, the sugar program was modified to give the sugar grower in the United States a chance for existence if the industry did not attempt to expand, but nevertheless, the law has been administered by Secretary Wallace and his associates to give as little advantage as possible to American growers. Quotas have been adjusted to permit the price to fall below what it had been in 1934, although even the administration's theorists admitted that in 1934 it did not give the farmer a fair return.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a table showing the average prices of sugar from 1928 through 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

TABLE 1.—Average prices of sugar, 1938 through 1939—cents per pound

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Not only the sugar grower but every American taxpayer has been injured by the administration's sugar policy. The administration, in its zeal to help foreign sugar producers, has deprived our own Treasury of a substantial amount of revenue. L. J. Taber, master of the National Grange, established this point rather well when he testified before the Senate Finance Committee recently during the course of the hearings on the Trade Agreements Act:

> Since 1934 we have reduced the duty on imports of sugar from Cuba from 2 to 0.9 cent per pound. Between September 3, 1934, and December 31, 1939, the Treasury sustained a loss of revenue in this connection amounting to $133,924,000. In the meantime, the retail price of sugar to the consumer has not been reduced to the extent of a single mill. The chief beneficiaries have been some of the biggest banks of Wall Street, which own the major portion of the Cuban sugar industry.

The sugar program has not helped either the grower or the consumer. The administration justifies itself in another way, however, by pointing out the benefits that will result from an increase in our trade with Cuba. A pamphlet published by the Sugar Division of the Department of Agriculture points out that between 1933 and 1938 Cuba's purchases from us rose from $22,674,000 to $75,152,000, or more than 230 percent.

The inference is that this increase in sales of American goods to Cuba was caused by our reducing the tariff on Cuban sugar, rather than what seems a far more probable cause, the general economic recovery since 1933. The pamphlet neglects to point out, however, that Cuba always has and probably always will buy far less from us than we buy from her. During the past 3 years, for every dollar spent in buying Cuban products only 65 cents has returned to the United States to buy American goods.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a table I have received from the Tariff Commission showing Cuba's trade with the United States during the years from 1925 through 1939. It shows conclusively that Cuban trade costs more than it is worth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Yet, the administration leaders, including the President, continue to point out the awful economic consequences of letting American sugar producers supply the American market. It was Mr. Wallace, the Secretary of Agriculture, who carried this argument to its final absurdity. In 1934, he appeared before the House Ways and Means Committee to testify in behalf of reciprocal trade-agreement legislation. At that time he said:

> We will have more net material welfare if we produce things we can produce efficiently and exchange them for goods produced more efficiently elsewhere; we can produce lard cheaper today than it can be produced in Cuba—Cuba has an outrageous tariff on lard. Why not send Cuba our lard and take from her sugar?

In other words, Secretary Wallace believed that by selling lard to some 4,000,000 Cubans the American farmer can be adequately compensated for the large portion of the American sugar market of 130,000,000 Americans which the administration has denied him.

It has not worked out that way. In 1938, the value of our purchases of Cuban sugar was $76,828,000. Our sales of lard to Cuba amounted to only $3,976,000.

Mr. President, since this example of how the sugar program was expected to benefit the American farmer was proposed in all seriousness by the man who has been Secretary of Agriculture for nearly 8 years, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point, in parallel columns, the value of our sugar purchases from Cuba, and the value of our lard sales to Cuba, from 1933 through 1938.

I think anyone can judge for himself after a single glance at this table what kind of a deal the Secretary of Agriculture gave the American farmer when he traded the American sugar market for the Cuban lard market.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order is made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[1] Preliminary data.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. It is unfortunate that both the President and the Secretary of Agriculture still feel that the farmer received a bargain when they traded $76,000,000 of his sugar market for a $4,000,000 lard market. I believe farmers, however, are beginning to realize that they have been "sold down the river."

Actually, if we received dollar for dollar benefits from our purchases from Cuba, we would be doing ourselves irreparable damage, perhaps, by curtailing our own industry. To the extent that we rely upon foreign producers for necessities that can as well be produced in the United States, we are unnecessarily placing ourselves at the mercy of an international situation that war and international crises make more uncertain every day.

But we do not receive dollar for dollar benefits from our sugar purchases from Cuba, and when we have dismissed all the other reasons given by the administration for importing more sugar from Cuba than all the western States are permitted to produce and sell, we return to Secretary Wallace's statement that:

> The sugar-beet industry, as measured from the standpoint of free-world competition, is inefficient.

"Inefficient" means only one thing. It cost more—probably about 2 cents more—per pound to produce sugar in Idaho or in Utah than it does to produce it in Cuba. The great "liberal" Secretary of Agriculture forgets to mention, however, that in Idaho workers are paid from 35 to 50 cents an hour, while in Cuba labor can be hired for as little as 10 cents a day. Under the same reasoning, Secretary Wallace and his associates in the administration might just as reasonably decide that because wool, or cattle, or beans, or sewing machines can be produced more cheaply abroad, the tariff should be removed, and the American producers, and American workmen abandoned to their foreign competitors. As a matter of fact, there is a great deal of evidence that their thinking runs along precisely that line.

Although President Roosevelt was elected in 1932 on the promise that farm tariffs would not be lowered, his Secretary of Agriculture has never subscribed to that view. In 1934 he published a book entitled "America Must Choose," in which he discussed the New Deal plans for agriculture and industry. In that book Mr. Wallace said:

> This will involve a radical reduction in tariffs that might seriously hurt certain industries and a few kinds of agricultural businesses, such as sugar-beet growing and flax growing. It might also cause pain for a while to wool growers and to farmers who supply material for various edible oils. I think we ought to face that fact.

In his book Secretary Wallace further said:

> Now, if we are going to lower tariffs radically there may have to be definite planning whereby certain industries or businesses will have to be retired. The Government might have to help furnish means for the orderly retirement of such business, and even select those which are thus to be retired.

In Russia, where the Government is less thoughtful, enterprises are occasionally liquidated. Here, because the President has announced himself as a great humanitarian, businesses will merely be retired, but the result will be the same. Farmers and laborers whose livelihood comes from the retired industries can look elsewhere for a living or go hungry, and even if every Cuban goes on a diet consisting solely of lard, the farmer will not be repaid for the loss of his market.

The latest inspiration from the White House is some mysterious creation the President calls a "hemisphere cartel." No one in this country has been told much about it, except that it will cost the United States billions of dollars. From the Havana Conference, however, a few suggestions have leaked out which indicate that the greater share of the cost will be borne, not by the Federal Treasury, but by the American farmer. In the New York Times of July 25 was a dispatch from Havana which said that delegates there were urging—I trust the Senate will appreciate the significance of this statement—

> "A heroic solution, really fair and efficacious" by which the Washington Government would appraise all the beet-sugar factories in the United States, buying them out and removing them from the field.

Remember, that comes from the Havana Conference.

Presumably, the "heroic sacrifice" would be left to the farmers and workers dependent upon raising sugar beets, who would be left with only the alternatives of finding jobs on the W. P. A. or joining the Army.

Time magazine also rather let the cat out of the bag in its issue of July 8, in which it suggested:

Hence, if the New Deal is serious about its hemisphere-cartel scheme, it may be forced to revive a still more radical scheme in the beet country. The scheme: The United States to get an independent valuation on the beet producers, buy their owners out.

The word from Havana indicates that the President's plan will not go through at this time. It will wait until after election; but meanwhile American farmers have been given a suggestion of what awaits them if President Roosevelt and Secretary Wallace are directing our affairs after next January. South American countries, you know, can produce a great many things, including cattle, beans, wheat, and wool, cheaper than they can be produced here, and there is no limit to which the retiring of American business and agriculture can go.

Frequently we hear the assertion made that the subsidy received by sugar-beet and sugarcane growers in the United States is proof of the domestic industry's inefficiency. Actually, the amount of the subsidy is less than the amount of the taxes collected. During 1939 sugar taxes in the amount of over $73,000,000 were collected and payments amounted to only $51,000,000.

When the domestic sugar industry can show a profit to the Federal Treasury of over $20,000,000, and sugar prices to the consumer are lower than at any time since 1932, it hardly deserves to be classified as inefficient. Secretary Wallace during nearly 8 years has been unable to persuade the farmers of my section that the industry producing one of their most profitable crops is inefficient, and I very much doubt that they will agree with the President that Secretary Wallace's views entitle him to promotion to the second most important post in the Federal Government.

There have been attempts before to cripple the domestic sugar industry. There has never been so brazen an attempt, however, to persuade the American people that destruction of the American sugar industry is a great liberal reform, designed to help the farmer whose livelihood is being destroyed. The anxiety for the welfare of the Cuban sugar industry arises almost entirely from the fact that a major portion of the Cuban sugar crop is owned by international bankers in New York.

The methods used by the international bankers to reduce the tariff on sugar and destroy the domestic industry have been unscrupulous in the extreme. They have been motivated by the great humanitarian desire to profit from labor which is paid 10 cents a day, and at the expense of honest, hard-working, American farmers who for a number of years have been fighting a losing struggle to maintain a decent standard of living.

In 1930 a Senate committee investigating lobbying condemned lobbyists of the international bankers for their effort to stir up hostility to the United States in Latin American countries upon the assumption that it, by its tariff policy, was mistreating Cuba. The report goes on to say that the attempt was "to no small extent successful."

So we find that international bankers are perhaps the strongest backers of the administration's so-called good-neighbor policy—the policy which requires us to keep the good will of other countries by giving them the American market at the expense of the American farmer.

I venture to say that not $1 of the dividends that have been paid or will be paid on Cuban sugar investments will benefit the people of the West—the people whose industry is being sacrificed to make dividends possible. At the present time American farmers are being sacrificed to the interests of capitalists who invested in Cuba with the full expectation of profiting from half-starved labor.

Moreover, the Sugar Act has not been administered so as to secure for American sugar producers the small benefits it is supposed to give them. Quotas have been consistently adjusted to depress the price of sugar.

Because of the fear of rising sugar prices due to war conditions, the quotas were suspended on September 11 of last year, and automatically the Cuban sugar tariff was increased from 0.9 cent to 1.5 cents per pound—still half a cent lower than it had been before 1934. The tariff was again reduced to 0.9 cent on December 27, 4 days before the 1940 quota went into effect on January 1 of this year. During this 4-day period the tariff remained at 0.9 cent per pound, and no quota provisions whatever protected the American market. During that time 284,000 short tons of Cuban sugar, valued at $11,000,000, which had been stored in bond in this country, were admitted. This amounted to over 15 percent of the entire year's imports; and during the 4 days $3,500,000 was lost to the Federal Treasury because of the reduced tariff.

During the present session of Congress Representatives from the sugar-producing States were hopeful of securing at least amendments to the present law which would result in a fair deal for the American sugar producers. A bill drawn by Representative CUMMINGS, of Colorado, was introduced, designed to improve the condition of sugar growers without injury to the consumers. It would have given the American farmer a larger share of the American market.

Hearings were held in the House committee for 3 days. There was virtual agreement on the provisions which would help the American grower. Then a letter came from the President which informed us that "no sugar legislation is necessarily required at this session of Congress, although it might be advisable to extend the life of the Sugar Act of 1937." That all but ended hope of securing justice for American sugar farmers at this session.

Because of the administration's hostility to the sugar industry, farmers have faced the growing season not knowing how much they will be permitted to grow, nor under what conditions they will be permitted to raise their crop.

These decisions are made largely by the Sugar Division of the Department of Agriculture here in Washington, which is administered by a statistician from New York, and which, I understand, contains not one farmer in the Washington office.

The administration has left us with the choice of extending the present law, which has left prices too low, and which gives foreign producers more of the American market than it gives the entire western United States, or of letting the present law expire, which would leave us with a reduced tariff and no quota restrictions whatever. This would place the domestic-sugar producer at the mercy of foreign imports without the tariff protection necessary to preserve our institutions and to protect American labor.

At the present time there are countless thousands of acres in the West on which crops of which we have a surplus are being raised. If the Government would permit them to do so, farmers could turn many of these acres to the profitable raising of sugar beets and thus an important step would be taken toward solving the entire farm problem.

We owe it not only to the sugar farmers but to the entire Nation to take steps at this time that will secure an adequate sugar supply, regardless of international developments. Events of the last war should have taught us that.

It is no longer only the interests of the domestic producer that are at stake, but the welfare of the entire country. Now is the time to abandon the policy of Secretary Wallace and his theorists, and start the development of a sugar industry capable of supplying our needs.

AMENDMENT OF RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3920) to amend the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, as amended June 20, 1939, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY].

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota should be adopted, it would mean simply that we would be giving the railroads a yearly benefit of at least of $20,000,000—perhaps as much as $40,000,000—which would be taken away from the workers, whereas the workers, even under the amendment, would receive very inadequate benefit increases not exceeding $4,000,000 in a year like the present. Of course, this proposal would also reduce the contribution into the reserve fund. We should be careful not to threaten that fund, because there may be years when employment may not be as high as it is now.

The bill which I am sponsoring, as I have said, is supported not only by the Railroad Retirement Board but by all of the labor organizations which are interested in this matter. Under that bill the workers would be given about $12,000,000 increase in benefit payments in years like the present one, and an additional sum would be held in reserve. Adoption of the substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] would put the railroads in a class by themselves, treating them much more favorably than any other industry in the country, because we would be bringing their tax down to 2 and ultimately 1 percent, whereas every other industry in the country pays 3 percent. And we would continue the payment of inadequate benefits to railroad workers. These benefits are pitifully low at the present time, and I am trying to bring them up to at least the amounts which are being paid to workers in the industries which are insured under the better systems. I think it would be exceedingly unjust to the workers on the railroads if the substitute should be agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, there is one pleasant thing about this controversy—that is, that we stand on common ground with respect to the principle of unemployment insurance. Those who favor the bill as presented by the distinguished Senator from New York, and those who favor the substitute proposed by the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, are all undertaking to write into law an improvement on the scheme of unemployment insurance.

There is always a grave question about what premium or what rate of charge should be made to establish a fund for any kind of insurance. It makes very little difference whether it be the loss of property by theft or by fire, or the loss of services through illness, or the loss of life, or the loss of employment; an inexorable law, the law of averages, governs. For example, I am told that, based on the theory of averages, if one tosses into the air a thousand pennies a sufficient number of times a certain event will recur a certain number of times, and thereby it is possible to ascertain an average upon which to reckon as certainly as in the case of any other law.

For insurance of this character, first to save, and, second, to promote a scheme that is so good for the public welfare, Congress is interested to have the rate of charge right, and it is also interested to have the amount of indemnity or benefit right, and the two are so related to each other in economy and practice that if we are not recklessly going to deal with this great scheme we ought to have experience extending over a reasonable enough length of time in order to know what is best to do, and what is best to avoid, for we can safely assume that if we hastily increase the amount of the benefits payable under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, if by increasing them 115 percent in one swoop we destroy the security that is involved in the safety fund of the act, we are not doing labor any good; we are hurting not merely the employee or the employer, we are hurting society; we are injuring the idea, and we are setting a very bad example of poor judgment as legislators.

Therefore it seems to those of us who propose the substitute, which actually does increase the benefit and proposes a diminution of the cost, graduated and reaching into the future, and based on what the experience of the past proves, that we must give weight to the fact that this law did not go into effect until the 1st of July, 1939; and here we are, just about a year after it was inaugurated, coming forward and saying, "We will increase the benefits 115 percent and clean up the surplus which is now in the fund"—created how? Let us see.

The idea of unemployment insurance is not a creature of Congress. It is not a new idea in the United States of America. Such insurance has been in existence in various States of the Union, and there had been accumulated this safety or surplus fund in order to assure continuity of benefits. It is these State funds, transferred over to the Federal Treasury, which created this large amount of money which constitutes the melon which we are now proposing to cut—and for whose benefit? Mr. President, it should be remembered that every dollar that goes into that fund under the proposed law, and that went into it under the act of 1939, is paid by the employers. There were $2,000,000,000 of pay roll on which the employers paid 3 percent. That is $60,000,000. The original act is so emphatic that I read it now. It is very short. I read from volume 52, Public Laws, page 1103 (52 Stat., sec. 8 (f)):

(f) The contributions required by this act shall be collected by the Board and shall be deposited by it with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, 90 percent thereof to the credit of the account and 10 percent thereof to the credit of the fund.

I will have something to say about that fund. Mr. President, I do not expect attention. The conduct of the Senate has indicated that it is not interested in this proposed legislation, but I must have quiet.

(g) The contributions required by this act shall be collected and paid quarterly or at such other times and in such manner and under such conditions not inconsistent with this act as may be prescribed by regulations of the Board—

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, may we have some order in the Senate, please? I am interested in this argument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). The Senate will be in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator from Illinois. It is exceedingly difficult to talk in this Chamber, anyway, and when the noise made in the Chamber is greater than the sound of the voice of the speaker I feel as if I am perhaps taking the time of others unwisely.

Now I come to that portion of the section to which I referred particularly, as follows:

And shall not be deducted, in whole or in part, from the compensation of employees in the employer's employ.

This means that every dollar of the cost comes out of the employers and not a dollar out of the employees.

The fund that is to be cut up now by this proposed legislation consists in part of this contribution and in part of those funds which had accumulated as a safety reserve and were transferred from the States to the Federal Government.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to know what amount of money was transferred from the various State reserves to the United States Treasury after this law became effective in July of last year.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am informed that it is approximately $100,000,000. I cannot turn to that part of the record. I see that the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] has risen. Perhaps he can answer.

Mr. WHITE. I think the Senator will find the figures on the top of page 17 in the minority report.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator. I read from page 17 of the report:

It was originally estimated that these transfers would amount to about $70,000,000, but now it appears that they will exceed $100,000,000.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator yield further for one question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. What has been the accumulation in that fund since the law went into effect and since all contributions have been made directly to the Federal Treasury?

Mr. AUSTIN. I cannot answer as to the amount of that.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. Following the language just read on page 17 of the report there is a full explanation in answer to the question by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. I read as follows:

The 3-percent pay-roll tax imposed by the act is expected to yield about $66,000,000 for the present fiscal year, of which $60,000,000 will go into the benefit fund and the remaining $6,000,000 into the administration fund. Only three-fourths of these taxes, however, will have been collected by June 30, 1940. As against this total of over $145,000,000 thus expected to be received into the benefit fund during the first year of the operation of the act, it is estimated that the total benefits to be paid during the year will be about $15,000,000 or $16,000,000. There should thus be an unexpended balance in the benefit fund at the end of the year of about $130,000,000.

With the last quarter still to come in of about $15,000,000, it will make a total in the benefit fund of $145,000,000.

Does that answer the question of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LUCAS. That answers the question. The point I am trying to clear up in my mind is, Upon what basis was the rate originally fixed, and why the increase of 115 percent during a short period of time?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, two different things are now referred to. The rate was 3 percent. When the law was passed a year ago, it was agreed that that was the minimum rate which would support the losses from nonemployment. The truth is that we have been through a fairly good period so far as railroad employment is concerned. Employment has increased rather than decreased, so we have not had a normal experience to judge whether the rate of 3 percent is too much or too little. That is one reason why we ought not to pass the bill. We ought to give the original law a chance to be worked out; and the proposed amendment in the nature of a substitute would do that.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me finish my statement, and then I shall be glad to yield. It is expressly provided that the cut in the rate shall not be made until after 1941; and then if it is made on the scale proposed, from 3 percent to 2 percent, there must be a condition precedent, namely, that the amount of the safety fund shall not be reduced below $100,000,000. If it is above $100,000,000, then the rate is to be reduced. The following year it will be reduced 1 percent further if the fund remains as much as $100,000,000. We would proceed on the present basis for a year. We would run for another year, and if at the end of that time experience should show that the cut could safely be made, we would make it. We would then go for the fourth year, and if experience should justify another reduction it would be made. We do not say, "We will adhere to 3 percent notwithstanding any experience," but we say that we will take care of the problem of a huge growing surplus by dividing it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I promised to yield first to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator proposes to take care of the excess reserve by giving it back to the railroads. I thought the Senator had not accurately stated the situation when he suggested that the bill which is pending would threaten the reserve fund. As a matter of fact, if there is any threat to the reserve, it is the threat which comes from the substitute. From what the Senator says, the workers will not receive the benefit of the larger reserve, but it is proposed to reduce the taxes. It is proposed to cut the melon, if that is the term the Senator prefers, and give it to the railroads. That is exactly what is proposed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, this bill is important enough to be entitled to discussion which adheres closely to the facts.

Mr. WAGNER. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. AUSTIN. The bill is entitled to discussion which is not heated in any way at all. I have no feeling which would justify any such emphasis.

Let me explain the proposal of the substitute. The funds which were transferred from the States to the Federal Government will never be transferred again. They are nonrecurring items. Once exhausted, they are gone forever. So the folly of distributing them now consists in the possibility that our experience with unemployment next year may be such that by reason of expenditures above that which is paid in currently by the employer—3 percent on the pay roll—the safety fund may be depleted to such a point that it will no longer be insurance, it will no longer be protection, and thereupon the very idea may be destroyed. If not that, then another amendment to the law may be necessary to increase the tax on the pay roll in order to rebuild that which we shall have so ruthlessly and recklessly removed.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask the able Senator from Vermont whether or not he can tell me what the reserve would be under the provisions of the bill which is now before the Senate. I understood the Senator to say that under the provisions of the substitute there shall be not less than $100,000,000 in the reserve fund in 1941, before the distribution is started. Am I correct?

Mr. AUSTIN. I think I understand the question.

Mr. LUCAS. What will the reserve fund be in the event the bill before us is passed?

Mr. AUSTIN. Under the provisions of the bill of the distinguished Senator from New York it is left to chance. Under the substitute it is not left to chance. The substitute provides a minimum of $100,000,000 before any reduction in the rate occurs. Of course, under both measures an event might occur which would result in sweeping out the reserve fund.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I think it is fair to say that under the bill I have introduced, which is pending, the reserve at the end of the year would be about $165,000,000, with all the increased benefits paid. Under the substitute the railroads are to receive the exclusive benefit of any accumulation above $100,000,000 by having a reduction in taxes.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct.

Mr. WAGNER. That is exactly the situation.

Mr. AUSTIN. That shows one of the beneficial purposes of the substitute. It is better for me to be employed, earning my compensation, than to be unemployed and receiving insurance. What is true of me is true of every other individual in the United States. Therefore, if I can promote such a relationship between myself and my employer that he will devote some of his capital to regularizing employment and preventing unemployment—serving the prophylactic purpose, as it were, of preventing unemployment—that is an improved social condition which has an indirect result on this type of legislation.

The substitute encourages such improvement, which the original bill does not do. The substitute holds up before the employer and the employee the possibility of some of the capital of the employer being diverted into regularization systems or schemes relating to employment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Is it not a fact that whether the industry regularizes employment or not, under the substitute any sum above $100,000,000 will go back to the railroads?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; it does not go back at all.

Mr. WAGNER. So the regularization of employment has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. AUSTIN. It does not go back at all. That is entirely inaccurate. No sum of money is paid to the railroads.

Mr. WAGNER. If under the 3-percent tax a railroad is required to pay an additional $20,000,000, and we say, "We will reduce the tax so that you will not have to pay the $20,000,000," the railroad is certainly getting the benefit of $20,000,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is quite true; but that is different from paying back any money to the railroads. After years of experience which are assumed to be enough experience upon which to rely, the Government—not the railroads—reduces the tax on the pay rolls; but the Government does not reduce it before the experience. The Government does it after the experience.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not a member of the committee which considered this legislation, and I am asking only for information. Is it the contention of the Senator from Vermont that all the purposes of the act relating to employees can be carried out at a lower cost than that under the present law?

Mr. AUSTIN. It is.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it the contention of the opponents of the Senator's position that the tax which now exists is necessary to carry out the purposes of the law with reference to employees?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not heard them make that claim.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then the point in debate is whether or not we have been taxing the railroads to a degree higher than has been necessary in order to accumulate a fund for the benefit of employees.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I make the answer a little more complete? That may prove not to be true. The point is that we have had an experience of approximately 13 months.

Mr. TYDINGS. And we have accumulated a surplus.

Mr. AUSTIN. We have accumulated a surplus which looks too large.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. But we are conscious of a labor condition in the railroads which has been extremely favorable to that result, and which may not recur. In the course of the 4 years contemplated by the amendment, it may happen that the rate may prove to be not too high. We are increasing the indemnity 30 percent. That increase of indemnity may prove to be too great. Let me observe, in passing, that it is higher than that of the States of the Union, with one exception; and that is California. The situation as to the State of California is subject to an explanation which takes it out of a fair comparison.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. This is the line of cleavage: The Senator proposes, as I understand, a broad policy to reduce the rate of taxation to such a point that it will be sufficient to carry the benefits now enumerated?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; not "now enumerated." We propose to provide better benefits.

Mr. TYDINGS. Well, "better benefits." As I understand, the Senator from New York objects to that policy. On what ground?

Mr. WAGNER. I will state the ground, if I may.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am a little confused as to just what the issue is.

Mr. WAGNER. The position we are taking is that the benefits which were originally provided were woefully inadequate, but we were told by the actuaries that it would be dangerous to make them any higher at the time.

The experience of a year has shown that the benefits are in excess of what was anticipated and that the workers could get a more reasonable benefit by retaining the 3 percent which every other employer in the country has to pay.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand, the Senator would keep the 3-percent rate and give the workers more benefits?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. TYDINGS. And, on the other hand, the opposition side would reduce the rate with a very slight increase in benefits; is that the issue?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; that is the issue.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I have been trying to find out.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, let us examine that claim.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not arguing it as right or wrong; I am trying to get what is in dispute.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to put something in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall surrender the floor if the Senator will allow me to ask him one more question.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me first state what the record shows about the increase in benefits related to the benefits already heretofore given by the States.

I call attention, on page 80 of the hearings, to the table under the heading "Minimum and maximum weekly benefits for total unemployment."

Under Senate bill 3925, which is the amendment now pending—and it will be understood that the amendment that was considered at the hearing raised the benefit 25 percent——

Mr. TYDINGS. To 25 percent.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; added 25 percent to the benefit, whereas the proposed substitute amendment adds 30 percent. It adds a little more than the amendment considered at the hearings. Having that in mind, these are the figures which the record shows. Under the proposed amendment the minimum benefit would be $7.50.

Mr. TYDINGS. For whom?

Mr. AUSTIN. For the benefit of an unemployed employee. Under the proposed amendment the maximum weekly benefit would be $20.

Mr. TYDINGS. For the term of unemployment or for so many weeks?

Mr. AUSTIN. For 80 weeks.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator want that statement to remain in the RECORD?

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to finish my remarks; then I will give the learned Senator an opportunity later.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well, if the Senator is willing to have it stand at 80 weeks.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understood the Senator from Vermont to say 18 weeks.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act of 1938—that is the one we are proposing to amend—it will be understood, provides $6.53 minimum weekly benefits.

Mr. TYDINGS. Minimum or maximum?

Mr. AUSTIN. Minimum, whereas the maximum weekly benefit is $11.20.

In New York—now we are coming to the State of the distinguished author of the bill—the minimum weekly benefit is $7, and the maximum weekly benefit is $15.

Is that one of the States whose benefit rates are such as to make the pending proposal outrageous? Compare the two. The minimum under this amendment is $7.50 and under the New York statute $7. The maximum benefit under this amendment is $20, while under the New York statute it is $15.

The table continues with Indiana, Wyoming, Maine, and South Dakota, and I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Minimum and maximum weekly benefits for total unemployment

	Minimum weekly benefit	Maximum weekly benefit
S. 3025	$7.50	$20.00
Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act of 1938	6.53	11.20
New York	7.00	15.00
Indiana	2.00	15.00
Wyoming	5.00	18.00
Maine	3.00	15.00
South Dakota	3.00	15.00

Mr. TYDINGS. I understood the Senator to say a moment ago that the maximum rate was $10 a week. I am sure from what he said subsequently he meant the minimum rate was $10 a week.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not recall making that statement. If I did, I must have been in error. I have it not in memory.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator draws a comparison between the minimum and maximum weekly payments under this act and under certain unemployment compensation acts of the States. Does that comparison apply to the relationship of railroad wages with other ordinary wages, or does it apply to applicable statutes of the States with respect to railway employees?

Mr. AUSTIN. This consideration is limited to railway unemployment statutes. It is different somewhat from the general unemployment statutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator realizes, I am sure, that it might not be entirely fair to compare railway wages with other wages, because, as a rule, I think they exceed other wages.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think that is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. So a fair distinction cannot be drawn.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not making a comparison between general wages and railway wages.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator says that the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota would not result in the payment to the railroads of $20,000,000, or whatever the amount involved is, but that it would result in a reduction of the tax to the amount of, say, $20,000,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. It might do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. But by whatever method it is intended to bring about the smaller payment by the railroads, not simply as railroads but as employers, under the 3-percent rate, whether it is a return to them of $20,000,000 or simply a reduction in their payment by $20,000,000, the employees would be deprived of that amount of money, by whatever process it is to be arrived at. Is that true?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; that is not so.

Mr. BARKLEY. What becomes of the $20,000,000? If the railroads do not pay it into the fund, who gets it?

Mr. AUSTIN. It is an insurance fund.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is an insurance fund for the benefit of the employees.

Mr. AUSTIN. The point is we are dealing with insurance, and a safety fund is merely an element of security. It is intended not to be paid to the employees directly and immediately, but it is there in case it becomes necessary, for the plan is not self-supporting. If it is not needed, the $20,000,000 would go into the Treasury of the United States to become a part of the fund; that is all.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. AUSTIN. It provides so much more insurance.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is held there for the benefit of the employees.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may be that the particular $20,000,000 paid in during 1 year might not be paid out in that year but would be held intact against the day or the year when it might be needed even to pay present benefits to the employees, because it is conceivable that this amount fluctuates from year to year; it is not always the same, and it might be conceivable that in some year, 5 or 10 years from now, the amount that would be paid in would be considerably less than in some previous year and, therefore, an additional amount would be needed.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is why we put a minimum in our bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; it seems to me that we are taking chances with a reduction below the 3-percent payment, which is the average paid by practically all corporations in the country with respect to unemployment insurance.

Mr. AUSTIN. Here is the point about that: We assume that $100,000,000 would be an adequate fund for the insurance, that is for security; so we put that stop order in there. There can be no reduction of this tax if that safety fund should fall below a hundred million dollars.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, if I may answer that question a little further, it is our belief that employees of railroads like any other employees, would rather have wages than benefit payments for unemployment, because of course wages are always higher than benefit payments under unemployment insurance. The theoretical amount of $20,000,000 we are talking about is 1 percent of the assessments the railroads pay each year into this insurance fund, and it is in the nature of a reward to the railroads. If they knew they were getting a reduction of $20,000,000 in their annual tax, that reward of $20,000,000 would be a great incentive for them to stabilize employment and continue to give jobs, and not lay off men, and thereby not have to pay unemployment insurance.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the Senator estimate how much increased employment would be brought about by spreading out $20,000,000 a year over all the railroads of the United States?

Mr. GURNEY. How much of an increase there would be?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. If we should divide that sum among the various railroads that contribute to it, how much would it amount to in increased employment?

Mr. GURNEY. A reduction of one-third of the tax they are paying at the present time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; it would mean a reduction of one-third of the tax they are paying at the present time, but how much increase in manpower would it mean?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I answer the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. With the permission of the Senator from Vermont, it would mean an increase of something between 1 percent and 2 percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. On all the railroads of the United States?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, $20,000,000 represents between 1 and 2 percent of all the railroads pay out for wages?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. It is merely a question of taking off that percentage from the national railway income of $2,000,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there anything in the substitute which requires the railroads to use that extra $20,000,000 in the employment of men?

Mr. AUSTIN. No.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield first to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], who has been trying for some time to interrupt me.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, does the able Senator agree with the statement made by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] today that although Senate bill 3920 does not increase the tax, but leaves it constant, and although the benefit payments are doubled, the reserves will be as great as, if not greater than, they now are?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is an estimate; and I should feel as if I were making an intemperate estimate if I should say "Yes" to that question or say "No" to it, because the system has been in operation for only 13 months, and we have had a very favorable experience as to unemployment. That is one of the reasons for not passing this bill and spending this money immediately.

What is the hurry, in any event? We are dealing here with a great social system covering the entire United States. What is the necessity for haste in regard to spending this money immediately? Will it harm the employee to have it there on tap, and allow a year or two of experience to educate us and him as to whether or not it is wise to have it? We are not taking it away from him by our amendment. We do not, as the Senator from New York says, pay back any of this money. It remains in the fund, and it is spread over the years, and during those years we will learn whether the experience justifies these very great changes. An increase of benefits of 115 percent is an inordinate increase.

Mr. ELLENDER. In dollars and cents, just how much does it amount to? Has the Senator information as to that?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; there are tables which show that, but I have not the facility of turning to them readily. I will ask the Senator from South Dakota whether he can state what 115 percent represents in dollars.

Mr. GURNEY. The amount paid out in the past year was about $15,000,000. If employment should remain constant, and business should remain as it now is, with the same volume of freight running, we could then naturally figure 115 percent more than the present $15,000,000, which would be approximately $32,000,000 or $33,000,000 a year.

Mr. ELLENDER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, before leaving this particular point I desire to call attention to what the hearings show with respect to the benefits proposed by Senate bill 3925.

It would increase the benefit payments by about 30 percent. Such an increase is certainly substantial, and is as great as is justified under present conditions.

The increase would proceed along three definite lines:

First. An increase in the scale of daily benefits to the men who, in their base year, earned $1,025 or more in wages.

Second. A shortening—I think this is important—of both the waiting period and the registration period, which would enable unemployed men to obtain their benefits sooner than under the present act, and at more frequent intervals.

And then here is a third one:

Third. An increase in the number of days for which benefits are payable within each registration period.

The last change, on which all parties represented at the hearings before the subcommittee were agreed, would increase the weekly benefits of unemployed railway men to levels which, both at the minimum and the maximum, would exceed the weekly benefits now payable under any of the State acts except the minimum rate in California.

Mr. President, is it not worth while to save this trust fund intact? We are now the trustees of that fund. We are expected, and I think we ought to be bound, to exercise more prudence and care in regard to it than we would with our own money. This is other people's money with which we are dealing. It is money which was contributed by the employer, and is for the benefit of the employee. Ought we not to be careful and not destroy this fund before we know what we are doing? Is there any earthly reason for haste in the destruction of the fund? Is it not better in the interest of the long program; is it not better in the interest of the social system which we are trying to improve and benefit; is it not better for the cause of the scheme of unemployment insurance that we hold our hand and not destroy this fund now just because we have some money? Let us pause and if, during the time provided by the amendment for its study and consideration it is proved that the fund is too large and is unnecessary to keep in the Treasury of the United States, then we can give it to the employees, and do it with the assurance that as trustees of the fund we have exercised care and prudence and done our duty with deliberation.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me before he concludes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask one more question of the Senator from Vermont.

As I understand, the present law affects all railroads throughout the United States.

Mr. AUSTIN. Up to a limit or down to a limit. It is this: Every employer shall pay a contribution with respect to having employees in his service equal to 3 percent of so much of the compensation as is in excess of $300 for any calendar month payable by him to any employee with respect to employment after June 30, 1939.

Mr. LUCAS. Practically every railroad employee in the country is affected?

Mr. AUSTIN. I think he would be.

Mr. LUCAS. One other question. I asked that question merely as a preliminary to this further question:

We have heard quite a little about twenty or thirty million dollars that is going back to the railroads in the event the substitute amendment to the original bill is adopted. I should like to know whether the evidence before the committee discloses what the railroads as a whole actually made, if anything, upon the total investment they now have during the past year, which I understand was fairly prosperous in comparison with former years.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know. I will ask the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], who is very familiar with the bill, to answer that question, if he can.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I have no figures on the exact railroad earnings. I am sure the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] would be able to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. LUCAS. The reason I ask the question is this: I go back a few years to the time when I happened to occupy in Illinois the position of chairman of the tax commission under Gov. Henry Horner. The members of the tax commission were directed and compelled under the law to assess for tax purposes the capital stock as well as the rolling stock of all the railroads that entered our State. I happen to know, during those years, the condition of the railroads under our jurisdiction as far as earning capacity was concerned; and while I entered upon the duties of that position somewhat prejudiced against the railroads because of the manner in which they had operated many years in the past, I came to realize during my service on the commission that if there was any one industry in this country which in my humble opinion needed aid and help, it was the railroads of America. I saw the short lines gradually becoming extinct, and I saw the long hauls asking for every conceivable help, from the Government down.

It occurred to me, therefore, that perhaps the railroads themselves might be able to use this twenty or thirty million dollars in a way which would aid in the rehabilitation and the continuance in properly maintaining these iron highways, which are so indispensable and absolutely necessary for the general welfare of our country.

It should be understood that I hold no brief for the railroads, yet we cannot under any circumstances let the railroads down. They are a necessary adjunct of transportation that deserve careful consideration of those who look with optimism for the future welfare of America. During recent years, they have been under Federal supervision and we know that they have been compelled to hew pretty close to the line, and rightfully so. It seems to me the successful operation of the railroad system of America is the basis upon which this unemployment reserve fund must depend.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. The earnings of the railroads of the country, based upon their property-investment account, which is not an entirely dependable figure, were about 2 percent. They might be a little over 2 percent.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will yield in a moment. To me the figure of $2,000,000,000 pay roll would be a great deal more significant if I could answer the question of the Senator from Illinois. I suspect that that return is upon a sum of money that is greater than the income of the railroads. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, commenting still further on the question of the earnings of the railroads, the Senator from Kansas has given the figures as I understand them to be.

Mr. REED. The approximate figures.

Mr. WHITE. The approximate figures. But it should be said also that probably one-third of the railroads of the United States are hovering on the brink of bankruptcy today, and there has been a committee appointed by the President, and a committee of the Senate, struggling for almost 2 years to find some way by which assistance could be rendered the railroad systems so that our transportation might be maintained at a high standard of efficiency.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the bill of the Senator from New York has no business before this body at this time. We had had, at the time it was introduced, less than 1 year's experience under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act.

Secondly, the Senator from New York should not have sunk to the cheapness of making a statement which might be misinterpreted, when he said that if we cut this melon the railroads would get the money. That is not true.

Up to July 1, 1939, railroad unemployment was handled as other unemployment has been handled, by the various States.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I shall be happy to yield in a moment, if the Senator will permit.

Mr. WAGNER. I was going to ask a question. If I made a cheap argument, I did not intend to do so, and I want to apologize to the Senate.

Mr. REED. Let me develop that point. I think I will show the Senator, at least the Senate——

Mr. WAGNER. May I ask a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. The bill of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] provides that when the reserve fund gets above $100,000,000—as it is now—then, instead of the workers' getting any benefit, the railroads shall get the benefit, by a reduction of taxes of 1 percent this year, and, undoubtedly, 2 percent next year. Who gets that melon, if there is one?

Mr. REED. I will answer the Senator from New York very much more understandingly and very much more comprehensively than he has stated the case, if he will permit me to go ahead now without interruption.

Mr. WAGNER. I have listened to the Senator so often that I am sure he can do that.

Mr. REED. So long as railroad unemployment was handled by the States, it was handled as other unemployment was handled. Whenever any one industry is separated from industry in general, I do not care whether it be a newspaper publishing business—such as I own—a railroad, or any other single industry, so that its unemployment problems are to be handled in that industry alone, then that industry carries the burden, whatever it may be.

If the substitute for the bill of the Senator from New York becomes a law, then a railroad will not get a dollar, and the Senator from New York left the impression to a casual hearer that if the substitute were adopted the railroads would get a melon.

How would they benefit? Let me say to the Senator from New York that at one time there were 2,000,000 railroad employees. At the lowest ebb the number went down to about 900,000. Railroad employment is now back up to 1,035,000, if my memory is correct. Railroad employment in the last year or so has been stabilized. Consequently there has been a minimum drain upon the unemployment-insurance fund. That condition is not certain to continue in the future.

The Senator's bill has no business here, in the first place, and if it had not been here, there would have been no substitute. I am a signer of the report on the substitute, being a member of the committee. The distinguished Senator from New York will doubtless remember the conversation in the committee when some of us expressed the hope that the Senator from New York and the Senator from South Dakota could agree upon a bill. The Senator from New York informed me this morning they were unable to do so.

Let me state all the substitute measure would do. The present amount in the fund is clearly excessive, and is not needed, and it will not be needed so long as railroad employment continues at its present level. The gentleman who sits by the side of the Senator from New York knows much about railroad pay rolls, as I am aware because he has testified before subcommittees of which I have been a member. The railroad pay roll of the country is about $2,000,000,000 a year, perhaps slightly in excess of that amount at this time. Assessing a 3-percent tax upon that sum would bring in something over $60,000,000 a year to take care of unemployment. In the last year only about $15,000,000 was necessary.

This is where the employer comes in, and the only place where he comes in. If railroad employment continues stabilized as at present, under the substitute bill there would come a time when the 3-percent tax would be reduced, and to that extent and only to that extent would the railroads benefit. Why should they not benefit? They are the employers. They have been now cut off from the general unemployment situation.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Not now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. REED. They have been cut off from the general unemployment situation to handle their own unemployment situation. The substitute bill provides that whenever the reserve fund falls below $100,000,000 the 3-percent tax shall be restored, in the event it has been reduced more than 3 percent due to either stabilized employment or an increase in employment.

Let me suggest to the distinguished Senator from New York that, after all, the railroads are essential factors in our whole scheme of things. They are not pariahs; they are not social enemies; they are among the greatest employers of labor in the country. They pay a wage scale above the average; and if they are to handle their own unemployment situation, and it is found that a 3-percent assessment on the pay roll is not necessary to take care of railroad unemployment, certainly there is no reason why it should not be reduced; and that does not justify the Senator from New York in leaving the impression upon the Senate that if the substitute bill, to which my signature is appended, were agreed to it would result in the payment of some money back to the railroads. That will not be the result. It is true that if they can stabilize employment—and we want a 4-year period in which to test out the substitute—there may come a time when it will be possible to reduce the present 3-percent tax upon the pay roll. The distinguished Senator from Kentucky asked a while ago what a reduction of 1 percent, which would be about $20,000,000, would mean. Generally speaking, it would mean 1 percent in employment. There would be an inducement for the railroads to stabilize their employment, if they could, rather than have the taxes raised.

I think the bill of the Senator from New York is unsound, unworthy, unnecessary, and that it has no business before the Senate now. The only reason why the substitute, signed by five members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate, is before the Senate is that those sponsoring it present it in an earnest effort to meet the problem fairly and squarely, with due regard for the railroad employees and the railroads themselves. It never would have the effect of returning any money to the railroads, as the Senator from New York a while ago intimated it would.

Mr. WAGNER obtained the floor.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WAGNER. A question of me?

Mr. GURNEY. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. GURNEY. To substantiate the information furnished by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] as to the operating income of the railroads, I should like to inform the Senator from New York that in 1937 the operating income of the class I railroads, the larger railroads, was 2.37 percent; in 1938 it was 1.43 percent; in 1939 it was 2.26 percent. That refers to the net operating income of the class I railroads, and I take it operating income means income before payments were made on any railroad bonds, or anything like that. So the average for the past 3 years would be 2 percent or a little less. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. WAGNER. To begin with, I have been in sympathy with the railroads and their misfortunes over a period of time, and as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency I have aided in every way I could to provide the authority to make loans to them for their rehabilitation. But the matter now before us presents an entirely different question. Here the question is, if some aid is needed for the railroads, whether you are going to take that out on the workers. No suggestion has been adopted heretofore when railroads were in difficulty that we should reduce the wages of the railroad employees to the point where they would receive a mere subsistence wage. We felt that the obligation rested on the railroads and on the public to see that those employees were given a fair wage.

Mr. President, I shall not discuss the assertion about "cheap" talk. What happened was that the Senator from Vermont talked about "cutting a melon," referring to this legislation which suggested a small—I still think really an inadequate—increase for the unemployed. My answer was that if there was any cutting of melons, then it was the railroads that got the benefit of the cutting and not the workers, because what Senators are providing by the substitute measure is that whenever the fund is above $100,000,000 the tax levy on the railroads for the unemployment-compensation fund should be reduced.

One Senator said a moment ago "Oh, some day there might be a reduction." Why, the substitute provides for a reduction this year of 1 percent on the tax, and probably 2 percent next year.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. REED. But we always provide for $100,000,000 reserve.

Mr. WAGNER. And my bill provides for more than $100,000,000. That is the difference between us. The fund under my bill at the end of this year will be about $165,000,000. In that we take account of the increased benefits and the amount which is collected under the 3-percent tax.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. Is the Senator sure he would have $100,000,000 reserve at all times under his measure?

Mr. WAGNER. I am reasonably sure at the present going, yes; and for some time to come. Conditions can get a great deal worse and the actuarial figures indicate that the sum would still be considerably above $100,000,000.

Mr. GURNEY. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I will yield. I will be a little more generous in that respect than other Senators have been.

Mr. GURNEY. If business is reduced there may not be so much employment, and not so much wages paid out, and the fund may not receive $60,000,000 a year.

Mr. WAGNER. We can indulge in all sorts of speculations and conjectures as to what may happen in the future, but from the present outlook we will have in this fund at the end of the coming year $165,000,000; and to the extent that we can predict, that is going to continue. There will always be a margin which will be adequate, so that our fund will continue to accumulate. There may come a time when you will want to raise the benefit payments to the workers still higher than they are today rather than permit the fund to go beyond a certain amount.

Mr. GURNEY. I wish to ask the Senator a question. Does not the Senator from New York feel that the incentive to provide regular wages and continuous employment would be great on the part of the railroad employers if they felt they could get away from paying 3-percent tax, and that they could stay at the 2-percent level?

Mr. WAGNER. I have heard the Senator state that in committee and on the floor. In the first place, there is nothing in this legislation providing that whatever sum is saved, in the form of taxes or in the form of money not paid to the workers, shall go toward employment of the unemployed workers. No specific assurances were given by anybody that the money would be so used. I think some of it will go into dividends. I do not object to that. But I think we want to provide a decent and adequate benefit for the unemployed during the period of unemployment.

Mr. GURNEY. Will the Senator yield for one further question?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. GURNEY. It would be better, though, to provide comtinuous employment so the employees could get wages rather than benefit payments?

Mr. WAGNER. Absolutely, if that can be done.

Mr. GURNEY. That is the difference between the two proposals.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; if you will provide in this legislation that whatever money is saved shall go toward the employment of somebody, then you have an argument. Otherwise this is pure oratory. I am sure the Senator is sincere. This, however, is pure expectation, but without any assurances of any kind.

A number of States have had the experience that we have had here. Their 3-percent tax has accumulated reserves higher than they have ever anticipated. And what have they done? They have done the just thing—increasing the benefits paid the workers—because that increase provides increased purchasing power, which in the end will aid the general employment situation.

We have discussed maximum rates. The Senator from Vermont has emphasized maximum rates. The thing that counts here is average rates, and the thing that counts here is the number of weeks or days that you are receiving unemployment benefits. You may have a rate of $15 or $20 a week and you may be getting it only for 3 or 4 weeks. That sounds like a very high rate, but it does not give the unemployed very much.

A moment ago, when I tried to correct the Senator, he got a little angry at me, though I did not mean to annoy him. He used the expression "80 weeks"——

Mr. AUSTIN. It should have been 80 days.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. All I meant to do was to correct the Senator. I meant to say to the Senator that I was sure he did not intend to say 80 weeks, but I was ruthlessly—one Senator suggests the word "blitzkrieged"—I was ruthlessly "blitzkrieged." That is the correction I wanted to make.

The provision now is for a maximum of 80 days of benefit payments. It now provides for a 15-day waiting period, and we are reducing the waiting period to 7 days. We are increasing the benefit payments to 100 days.

If you are going to subsidize every industry that finds it difficult to pay a 3 percent tax into the fund, that is one thing. I am making this statement now because the Senator says we must discuss the facts. I am discussing the facts. Every industry in the country today pays 3 percent.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. Is it not a fact that under a big majority of the State compensation laws a concern gets the benefit of the earned rate, and thereby lowers its payment to the State insurance funds?

Mr. WAGNER. That is a different situation. Only five States are granting actual tax reductions for "merit rating" at the present time. I know in my State we have refused to grant it, because it is not fair to the rest of industry; especially small business, which cannot regularize employment.

The taxes collected by the States are utilized for the purpose of taking care of the unfortunate unemployed. What they have been doing as the funds have accumulated is this: They recognize that we are not paying adequate unemployment payments. They are very small. They are going to be larger, let me say, year by year. They are going to be increased. These States are increasing their benefit allowances. They are increasing not always the amount per week, but they are increasing the length of period, and shortening the waiting period, and doing other things which we are doing here.

We are providing for a carry-over. Where an employee is entitled to, say, 100 days, and he has exhausted 50 days, we allow him to carry the other 50 days over to the next unemployment year for him, so that in that particular following year he will get an increased sum.

The Senator spoke of "maximum." I am now talking about averages. The average payment in the United States per worker per week under the State insurance funds is $10.19 per week, and under our Federal railroad unemployment fund it is $7 per week. It cannot be said that we are treating our workers as fairly as the States do—and those States are not altogether prosperous either.

The Senator said this bill should not be here. I am not ashamed of it. I have been trying for a long while to bring a better day to those who are more unfortunate than you and I. We are talking about giving a dollar or two or three or four dollars a week to a worker who is unemployed. That is the "outrageous" thing we are doing here. But on the contrary it is said we must save the railroads this $20,000,000, or perhaps $40,000,000 per year, by reducing the tax to 2 or 1 percent. It is argued we have to treat railroads differently from any other industry in the country.

I hope the time will come when we can reduce the tax. I hope the time will come soon, and it is coming sometime, when we will solve this question of unemployment, when we will not need to raise any money for unemployment insurance. But as long as unemployment is here we must treat the unemployed worker fairly. We are giving him little enough. Do not take it out of him. If we are to give a subsidy to the railroads, let us make it a general assessment, and not an assessment only on the unemployed workers.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] said something about the $100,000,000 reserve. He was waxing oratorical at the time, and I am not sure that I correctly understood him. He said that the $100,000,000 will never again be transferred; that it is here once and for all. Of course it is. The $100,000,000 arises in this way: In 1935, when we passed the Social Security Act, the railroad employees were included among other employees of the country, and they were to be cared for from State funds. The law went into effect in 1936. In many of the States it was discovered that there were great discrepancies in the treatment of railroad workers. Some who were insured in one State were receiving much smaller benefits than those insured in another State. There was also constant conflict as to whether an employee was really working in one State or in an adjoining State, because, of course, they were all engaged in interstate commerce. In addition, large sums accumulated in the reserves, swelled by the tax contributions of the railroads. That is how the $100,000,000 came about. We said to the States, "You received this money. You are not to utilize it now. You do not have to pay unemployed railway workers, because we shall take care of them nationally; so give us back the balance of the money which the railroads paid into the funds of the States." That money was transferred to the Federal fund under the Federal law. It is no different from the money which we are now collecting under the Federal system.

That accounts for the $100,000,000. At the end of this year we shall have $65,000,000 more. So we shall have $165,000,000; and I think it is a fairly safe prediction that all we shall use in benefits will be about $25,000,000. So we shall on the average use less than the receipts and we shall have an ever larger fund.

The Senator made another statement. I cannot believe he meant it. He said that what we are doing after 1 year is threatening the fund. What are we doing with the fund? We are holding it intact. We say, "You may not reduce it to $100,000,000. You must keep it all here, because we may have a bad year and we may want a little more money." The Senator is the one who is threatening the fund, because he proposes that after $100,000,000 is accumulated the receipts shall be reduced by one-third, and if the fund gets to $125,000,000 receipts are cut by two-thirds. We say, "No; we will not threaten the fund to that extent. We cannot say that $100,000,000 or $125,000,000 will always be enough, and we propose to keep a good large sum." We propose to keep $165,000,000, $170,000,000, or perhaps $200,000,000. The time may come when perhaps we ought to readjust matters.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] put it very plainly. We have this accumulated fund, which the railroads have paid in taxes, just as every other industry in the country has paid. When we enacted the law we recognized, as the debates will show, that the benefits were inadequate. The representatives of the railroad workers thought they were inadequate, but we were told that on a 3-percent tax larger sums could not be paid. Of course, the benefits are inadequate. The waiting period is too long. The number of days of payment is too short. But we were told that we could do nothing about it, because the fund would be made unsound, and this is a contributory system, an insurance system.

However, experience has shown that we were wrong. All that we propose to do by this bill is to pay, not a decent sum—it is pitiably inadequate—but something more than we are now paying.

The Senator says that this is unworthy legislation. I do not think he should so characterize it. I introduced it at the unanimous request of the brotherhoods. Every worker in the industry was represented on the committee which drafted the bill and asked me to introduce it. The Railroad Retirement Board, which has on it a member representing the railroads, unanimously said that it was fair legislation.

The workers are inadequately compensated, and the bill will give them a chance to receive just a little more. Unworthy? Then every worker on the railroads is unworthy, and we who are trying to build as best we can a better day for the average worker, the common man, are unworthy. That is all the bill does.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield. I will return good for evil.

Mr. REED. I am sure the Senator understood that the statement referred to was based upon the statement immediately following, that at the time of the introduction of his bill we had had less than 1 year's experience. With the indulgence of the Senator from New York, I may say that I have sat with subcommittees of our Interstate Commerce Committee dealing with the railroad-retirement question. Actuarial calculations were made upon an annual pay roll of $2,200,000,000, and upon those actuarial calculations certain rates of retirement were established. In the last session of this Congress we had probably 20 bills to amend the Railroad Retirement Act; and the railroad brotherhoods—so far as I know, unitedly—and the railroads—I am sure, unitedly—opposed any amendment until we had had more experience.

That is the only reason why I said that the legislation introduced by the Senator from New York had no place here, because at the time he introduced it we had had something like 10 months' experience. Within the past year I have sat with subcommittees listening to testimony on the Railroad

Retirement Act, which has had several years of operation—I have forgotten just how many—and we were urged not to change it, because it was feared that unless the railroad pay rolls should increase, the present retirement amounts could not be met out of the joint collection in that case, one-half from the employer and one-half from the employee.

I recognize that the distinguished Senator from New York is a great friend of labor——

Mr. WAGNER. No; I only want to be just to labor. I am no better friend of labor than anybody else.

Mr. REED. I, too, am trying to be just.

Mr. WAGNER. I want to be just to labor, as I want to be just to everybody else. I do not think it is fair to say that I am one-sided about the question. I want to be fair to everybody else; but I have discovered in my time that labor does need spokesmen.

Mr. REED. It happens that I have been one of labor's spokesmen all my life.

Mr. WAGNER. I am delighted to know that.

Mr. REED. The present law became effective only a year ago, and at the time of the introduction of the Senator's bill we had had only about 10 months' experience. I submit to the Senator from New York that upon a matter of this importance I was justified in saying at that time and under those circumstances that a bill of this kind should not have been introduced.

Mr. WAGNER. I am afraid there will never come a time when such a bill would not be characterized as being too early. It is always too early for bills which one does not want.

Let me answer the Senator from Kansas, and then I shall conclude. The Senator says that I should wait, that we should have more experience. Let us look at the proposal which the Senator is supporting. He goes so far as to say that at the end of a year we shall never need more than $100,000,000 or $125,000,000 in the reserve and that we should relieve the railroads of paying taxes in any sum above $100,000,000. The Senator goes much further than I do. He has already decided the question. He has decided that $125,000,000 is sufficient. However, he has decided the matter the wrong way. He wanted to balance the thing in some way. He did not wait. He simply increased the benefits an insignificant sum. So far as the total benefits are concerned, they are very insignificant. The Senator did not wait. He drafted his bill and said, "We will give the workers a little, and we will give the railroads the rest." I say, give the workers what I think anybody who is fair would say is not quite adequate, but which is something better, and keep the fund intact above $125,000,000. I do not dare say yet that $125,000,000 will be adequate. I want to keep the amount higher than that for the time being.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Just a moment.

It has been said that this is an insurance fund. That is not strictly accurate. It is money which is collected to be paid out. We do not have or want a full insurance reserve. Not being able always to predict the future, we want to have enough in reserve so that if unfavorable conditions come along we shall be able to meet them. However, the fund is collected to be paid to the workers when they are unfortunate enough to be unemployed. Let us not have that argument, because the Senator is on the wrong track.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York permit an observation?

Mr. WAGNER. I am afraid of observations. I yield for a question.

Mr. REED. No insurance money is collected for any other purpose except to be paid out.

Mr. WAGNER. That is what I say.

Mr. REED. That is what I say, too.

Mr. WAGNER. Then we are in agreement.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. Is it not correct to say that no proposal to limit the fund to $100,000,000 would have been made unless the Senator's bill had first been introduced?

Mr. WAGNER. I see. Then the object of the Senator's amendment is to defeat the bill which the railroad workers propose?

Mr. GURNEY. No. Will the Senator further yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. Is it not correct to say that under the amendment which I propose as a substitute the workers would receive a 30-percent increase?

Mr. WAGNER. It depends upon how the 30 percent is figured. It is a very inadequate increase. Our experience with the railroad employees and their organizations has been that they are just, fair, and reasonable. That is the reason why they have so much support. They never ask for anything unreasonable, and they regard the proposed increase as almost nothing.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. Is it not a fact that the 30-percent increase proposed in my substitute would produce benefits under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act equal to the benefits received by other classes of employees in every State of the Union?

Mr. WAGNER. I heard the Senator say that, but I disagree with him. It may be equal to some; but under the amendment proposed by the Senator, railroad workers would still be behind the parade. We want to catch up with what the States are doing, at least, and give railroad workers as much as the better State laws give the unemployed under their insurance systems. I am merely trying to reach that point. If I could, I would go a little ahead of it, because, as the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] pointed out a moment ago, the work of railway employees is much more hazardous than that of other employees in most other industries, and requires a higher degree of skill. They are entitled, if anything, to a little better treatment.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York again yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. May I conclude, then, from the Senator's statement that under Senate bill 3920 as the Senator introduced it, railroad employees would receive more in unemployment benefits than would any other class of labor?

Mr. WAGNER. I did not say that.

Mr. GURNEY. I ask could I draw that conclusion?

Mr. WAGNER. A moment ago I mentioned the fact that the average unemployment benefit paid to railway employees was about $7 a week, whereas the average in all the States, including every kind of employment, is $10.19 a week. What I said was that certainly the railroad workers ought to be at least on as high a scale as other workers because of the skill required and in some instances the hazard of their employment.

Mr. GURNEY. I could conclude, then, that railroad workers would receive greater benefits under this bill than, for instance, steel workers?

Mr. WAGNER. I did not say that.

Mr. GURNEY. I merely wondered if that is not a fact?

Mr. WAGNER. There is some misunderstanding on the part of one or the other of us. Shall I repeat? I said the average payment——

Mr. GURNEY. I should like to ask the Senator if, under the bill he is sponsoring, the railroad workers would get greater unemployment benefits than would other kinds of workers?

Mr. WAGNER. In some instances they might. I am talking about averages. The average in the States is $10.19, whereas the average for the railroad worker is $7. That is what I want to change. The Senator desires to keep it intact.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from South Dakota observed a moment ago that if the Senator from New York had not introduced his bill the Senator from South Dakota would not have introduced the proposed substitute. Are we to understand that the substitute, therefore, is not presented on its merits but simply as an effort to undermine the bill of the Senator from New York?

Mr. WAGNER. That is what I suggested; in an indirect way, it would defeat the proposed legislation. I am sure that cannot be the motive, but that might be implicit in the statement the Senator from South Dakota made.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of my remarks there be printed a copy of the majority report of the Committee on Interstate Commerce on the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report (No. 1752) is as follows:

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3920) to amend the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, as amended June 20, 1939, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with amendments and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

The committee amendment to section 2 of the original bill makes the exclusion, for some purposes, of certain railway-labor organization service apply only to that performed after June 30, 1940. It also places service as an employee representative within the exclusion, which is discussed hereafter in the explanation of the bill.

Another committee amendment substitutes for the 14-consecutive-day registration period provided for in section 3 of the original bill a registration period which will normally consist of 14 consecutive days but which may consist of fewer than that number if the claimant transfers his registration from one employment office to another within 14 days of the beginning of the registration period. This change will tend to reduce the number of transfers, which in many cases are made by persons who are merely traveling and not really looking for work.

The only other committee amendment which effects a change of substance is that to section 26 of the original bill, which relates to the authority of the Board to appoint persons, without regard to civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, for the purpose of taking registrations of unemployed employees and performing services incidental thereto. The committee amendment limits such authority to the appointment of persons for areas in which no employer facilities are available or in which no employer will make facilities available for the registration of employees.

The remaining committee amendments are merely corrections of typographical errors or of minor departures from uniformity in style.

GENERAL STATEMENT

Experience during the first 10 months of operations under the present Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act indicates the need of changes to provide for more nearly adequate benefits, to simplify the administration of certain provisions, and to make others more readily understandable. The bill is intended to effect such changes In addition to minor clarifying amendments, necessary changes in crossreferences, and other formal amendments, it deals with the following matters:

1. Benefit year and base year.
2. Benefit formula and rates.
3. Maximum benefits.
4. Remuneration and day of unemployment.
5. Disqualifying conditions.
6. Exclusion of local lodge and employee-representative service.
7. Reporting provisions.
8. Miscellaneous.

EXPLANATION OF THE BILL

1. Benefit year and base year: In place of the individual benefit year extending for 12 months from the beginning of the claimant's first compensable half month, section 7 of the bill substitutes a benefit year, uniform for all claimants, from July 1 through June 30 of the following year. A registration period beginning in June and ending in July is to be treated as if entirely within the benefit year ending in such month of June.

In addition to being more understandable and less likely to cause difficulties in administration, the uniform benefit year will shorten the average interval between the exhaustion of benefit rights and the resumption of them in a succeeding benefit year. At present the benefits of a person experiencing a prolonged spell of unemployment are often interrupted at a time when he is in greatest need of benefits; the amendment will greatly reduce the number of such cases.

The base year is redefined by section 8 of the bill as the calendar year immediately preceding the beginning of the benefit year.

2. Benefit formula and rates: In place of the present formula, under which benefits are paid for each day of unemployment in excess of 7 in a half month, section 9 of the bill provides that during the first registration period, in a benefit year, in which a claimant has 7 or more days of unemployment, benefits shall be payable for days of unemployment in excess of 7; in subsequent registration periods in the same benefit year, for days of unemployment in excess of 4.

The provision that benefits shall not be payable in any benefit year until there has been a registration period containing 7 or more days of unemployment, and, then, in such period, only for days of unemployment in excess of 7, serves substantially the same purpose as the present waiting-period requirement but avoids certain inequities which the latter has occasioned among claimants with various patterns of employment. It also avoids difficulties which have been experienced because of the fact that the present waiting-period requirement may be fulfilled at any time within 6 months before the beginning of a benefit year; claimants who have exhausted their benefit rights have, therefore, been registering, at considerable inconvenience and expense to themselves and the Board, in order to secure waiting-period credit for use if they should be unemployed after the end of the current benefit year. Many such persons do not, of course, begin benefit years within 6 months of the beginning of the periods for which they have so registered, and such registrations, which have usually involved inconvenience and expense to the claimant and the Board, are, therefore, fruitless. Claimants will also receive their first benefit checks sooner under the new provision than under present requirements, it being estimated that the number of days intervening between the first registration and the receipt of the first check will be cut from about 38 to approximately 22.

The change in the formula relative to registration periods subsequent to the first registration period of a benefit year will also effect a reduction in the number of registration periods which are begun but never result in the payment of benefits, and thus will remove another source of considerable inconvenience to claimants and to the Board.

The present benefit rates, though weighted in favor of the lower-paid employees, have not, in conjunction with the present benefit formula, provided for the average employee benefits equal to those under most State unemployment-compensation laws. Even with the proposed benefit formula, the present rates would not provide adequate benefits. Accordingly, section 9 of the bill provides benefit rates which, under the proposed benefit formula, will produce minimum benefits of $17.50, and maximum benefits of $40 for 14 days of unemployment in a registration period, instead of a present minimum of $12.25 and maximum of $21 for the same number of days of unemployment. The following comparison of benefits for 14 days of unemployment in a registration period shows the effect of this change:

Base year compensation	Proposed benefits	Present benefits
$150 to $199.99	$17.50	$12.25
$200 to $474.99	20.00	14.00
$475 to $749.99	22.50	15.75
$750 to $999.99	25.00	17.50
$1,000 to $1,299.99	30.00	17.50 / 19.25
$1,300 to $1,599.99	35.00	21.00
$1,600 and over	40.00	21.00

3. Maximum benefits: To retain approximately the present maximum duration of benefits, which, for claimants who are continuously unemployed, is about 21 weeks, section 10 of the bill establishes 100 as the basic maximum number of days in a benefit year for which benefits may be paid. To provide a longer possible duration for those employees who were qualified for benefits in the preceding benefit year but to whom benefits were payable for fewer than 100 days in such year, section 10 also provides that such employees may carry over into the current benefit year a number of days, not in excess of 50, equal to the difference between 100 and the number of days of unemployment in the preceding benefit year for which benefits were payable to them. The number of days of unemployment thus carried over is, of course, an addition to the basic maxima of such employees.

The proposed changes in the benefit formula, the benefit rates, and the maximum benefit provision will, it is believed, produce reasonably adequate amounts of benefits for employees covered by the railroad unemployment-insurance system, and it is believed that they are in accordance with sound principles of unemployment insurance.

The average annual benefit cost under the proposed amendments is estimated at between $50,000,000 and $53,000,000, or approximately double the present cost. In spite of this increase in cost, however, it is estimated that a modest but entirely adequate reserve will be accumulated from year to year on the basis of the present contribution rate.

4. Remuneration and day of unemployment: Experience under the present act has disclosed certain inequities resulting from the fact that some claimants, who derive income from work under such circumstances that it is not service for hire, are paid benefits, while benefits must be denied to others, who receive pay for similar work under circumstances which make it service for hire. In order to remove such inequities and to avoid difficult administrative determinations as to whether or not earnings are pay for services for hire, section 4 of the bill includes in the definition of "remuneration" earned income other than for services for hire if its accrual, in whole or in part, is ascertainable with respect to a particular day or days.

In view of the inclusion of earned income in the definition of remuneration, section 5 of the bill amends the definition of day of unemployment so that the accrual of remuneration will be considered in determining whether or not a day is a day of unemployment. Section 5 of the bill also contains an amendment to the definition of "day of unemployment" which is designed to encourage individuals to retain or to seek odd jobs or part-time work, by permitting to be counted as days of unemployment days for which subsidiary remuneration averaging not more than $1 a day is payable or accrues. This may be done, however, only in the cases of claimants who have $150 or more in base-year compensation, exclusive of the earnings from the position or occupation in which such subsidiary remuneration was earned. Subsidiary remuneration is that derived from work which requires substantially less than full time and can be performed while a person is holding a normal full-time job in another occupation. The amendment with respect to it will prevent service for nominal salaries to labor organizations, fraternal organizations, and the like from interfering with the receipt of unemployment-insurance benefits.

To clarify the treatment of a working day which includes a part of each of 2 consecutive calendar days, section 5 also contains an amendment which provides, in substance, that remuneration for such a working day shall be deemed to have been earned on the calendar day on which such working day ends and not on the calendar day on which it begins, and that an individual having such a working day shall not, by reason of taking work on such working day, be considered unavailable for work on the calendar day on which the working day begins.

5. Disqualifying conditions: Sections 17 and 18 of the bill make a substantial change in the disqualifying conditions contained in section 4 (a) (vi) of the act, relating to an employee paid on a mileage basis who has earned at least eight times his last schedule daily rate of pay during the half month. Experience has shown that "schedule daily rate" is a term which is not generally understood and that it does not afford a standard which can be readily checked. In addition, many train and engine service employees paid on a mileage basis but also engaged in yard service, which is not paid for on a mileage basis, have been confused as to how much of their earnings should be taken into consideration in connection with this disqualifying condition. Moreover, inequities have become apparent as between mileage employees having patterns of employment which permit them to avoid the disqualifying condition and other employees, in substantially the same circumstances but with different patterns of employment, who are subject to it. Inequities have also been apparent as between mileage employees and other employees on trains who are not paid on a mileage basis but who earn substantially full-time pay in a very short period of time.

Section 17 of the bill provides that there is not to be considered as a day of unemployment any day in a registration period in which an employee earns, in train and engine, yard, or other similar service, at least 20 times his daily benefit rate. Section 18 makes similar provision with respect to days in a registration period comprising the last half of a 28-day period in which an employee earns at least 40 times his daily benefit rate in such service. These changes are intended to prevent the payment of benefits to transportation employees who, in the specified classes of service, earn, in less than full time, what is substantially full-time pay for a period.

Section 14 of the bill extends the disqualifying condition for failure without good cause to accept an offer of available, suitable work, to cover any case of failure, without good cause, to comply with instructions from the Board requiring the individual to apply for suitable work or to report in person or by mail to an employment office. It is believed that there is no substantial difference between an employee who fails to accept such an offer and one who fails to apply or report when so directed.

Section 18 of the bill adds to the act a new subsection, 4 (a) (viii), under which a Sunday or any day which is generally observed as a holiday in the locality in which the claimant registers for that day is not a day of unemployment unless it is immediately preceded by a day of unemployment and immediately followed by a day of unemployment, or was the last day in a registration period and was immediately preceded by a day of unemployment. If 2 or more consecutive days are a Sunday and 1 or more holidays, such consecutive days are not days of unemployment unless they are immediately preceded and immediately followed by a day of unemployment or, if the last day of such consecutive days is the last day of a registration period, unless such consecutive days are immediately preceded by a day of unemployment.

The purposes of this amendment are to permit only those Sundays and recognized holidays which are included in periods of continuous unemployment to be considered as days of unemployment and to discourage the large number of registrations for Sundays and holidays which employees who are not genuinely unemployed now make in order to protect their rights in the event of subsequent unemployment.

To simplify administration, section 16 of the bill removes from the operation of section 4 (a) (v) of the act cases in which there is merely "a right to receive" payments of the types enumerated in that section. This change is believed to be necessary, since, for example, an employee claiming railroad unemployment insurance benefits may have a right to receive an annuity, although at the time he makes his claim neither he nor the Board knows whether such right actually exists.

Section 16 of the bill also provides for the recovery of amounts, or parts thereof, paid a claimant as railroad unemployment insurance benefits if subsequent to such payment he receives or is held entitled to receive any payment of the types enumerated in the section except benefits under an unemployment-compensation law other than the act. Section 16 of the bill provides further that, if any payment of the types enumerated in the section, except benefits under an unemployment-compensation law other than the act, is less than the amount of railroad unemployment-insurance benefits which would be payable and not recoverable, the disqualifying condition and the first proviso contained in the section shall not apply. In this event the benefits under the act shall be diminished or recoverable in the amount of such payment.

Under section 15 of the bill, to conform section 4 (a) (iv) to other parts of the act as amended, the period of disqualification therein provided for is made to begin with the first day of the registration period rather than of the half month.

6. Exclusion of local-lodge and employee-representative service: Section 2 of the bill provides that, for benefit and contribution purposes, employment after June 30, 1940, in the service of a local lodge or division of a railway-labor-organization employer or as an employee representative shall be disregarded. It is believed that any additional unemployment-insurance benefits which might be payable upon the basis of compensation from such service do not justify the administrative difficulties and expense connected with the collection of contributions based on such compensation.

7. Reporting provisions: As amended by section 21 of the bill, section 6 of the act no longer specifically requires that returns of compensation show the amounts of compensation earned in each month. Section 21 also eliminates the reference to preparation by the Board of the annual statements of compensation which are to be distributed to employees. It further amends section 6 of the act by specifically relating the provision as to conclusiveness to the determination of eligibility for, and the amount of, benefits, and by providing for the conclusiveness, not of the return of compensation itself, or of the failure to make a return, but of the Board's record of such return or the absence of a Board record of such return.

8. Miscellaneous: Section 11 of the bill substitutes for the reference to section 9 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 contained in section 2 (d) of the present act a more detailed description of the methods of recovery referred to. The protection previously accorded disbursing officers is extended to include protection against liability for amounts, the recovery of which has been begun but cannot be completed, and certifying officers are also expressly accorded the same protection as disbursing officers.

Section 12 of the bill makes certain clarifying amendments to section 2 (f) of the act, particularly to distinguish more precisely between the periods involved.

Section 3 of the act is amended by section 13 of the bill to define a "qualified employee" as one to whom the Board finds that compensation of not less than $150 was payable with respect to his base year. Section 20 of the bill provides for the review of an initial determination involving (1) the denial of a claim on the basis of the claimant's not being a "qualified employee," or (2) an award of benefits which the claimant contends was at less than the proper benefit rate. This section also provides that benefits shall be paid, subject to a right of recovery by the Board, in any case of an award of benefits in whole or in part upon the basis of pay earned in the service of a person or company found by the Board to be an employer under the act but which disputes coverage and does not comply with the provisions of the act. The decision as to whether such benefits shall be repaid is made upon proceedings prescribed in the section. In all cases covered by section 20, provision is made as to communication of the final decision of the Board, the effect of Board decisions, and the judicial review thereof.

By section 19 of the bill, the right to a hearing before a district board is limited to a "qualified employee" whose claim for benefits has been denied in whole or in part, upon an initial determination on a basis other than one which is reviewable under the provisions of section 20 of the bill. The amendment contained in section 19 would thus remove from the jurisdiction of the district board such troublesome questions as employer or employee coverage and the determination of base-year compensation. However, as indicated above, section 20 of the bill makes other adequate provision for the review of determinations upon such points.

A number of changes having to do with personnel are effected by amendments to section 12 of the act. The powers of the Board with regard to the detailing of employees are extended by section 26 of the bill, and that section will also permit the Board under certain circumstances to appoint persons to take registrations of claimants on a piece-rate basis. The Board is authorized by section 27 of the bill to grant compensatory leave for overtime to lower-paid employees at any station at which claims for benefits are received, adjudicated, and certified for payment, and section 25 extends to persons having railroad experience, who are in the employ of the Board on June 30, 1940, the possibility of acquiring, under certain conditions, a competitive classified civil-service status.

The list of expenses for which moneys are permanently appropriated to the Board is removed from section 11 (c) of the act by section 22 of the bill, but section 24 of the bill incorporates it, with some changes, in a new section 11 (e) of the act. The changes include in the list certain moving expenses of Board employees transferred permanently from one official station to another. The absence in the present act of such a provision has worked hardship on employees required to move in the interest of the Board. Another change adds to the list of expenses mileage allowances to Board employees for travel by privately owned automobiles on official business of the Board within the corporate limits of their official stations. The savings in time and personal-service costs which would be effected under this provision would exceed the additional traveling expenses incurred.

Since the activities of the Board's various organization units in the administration of the Railroad Retirement Acts and the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act are so closely interrelated that any attempt at segregation would make the cost of administration prohibitive, it is essential to efficiency and economy that the organization structure of the Board be integrated and that all means of financing available to the Board be commingled for the purpose of meeting the joint costs of the Board's integrated organization. Accordingly, section 24 of the bill establishes in the Treasury of the United States a permanent administrative revolving fund from which the Board may pay all the expenses of its various activities, except that a cut-off date is provided beyond which the revolving fund is not available for meeting the expenditures of the prior fiscal year. The Board must from time to time replenish the fund by requisitions, without itemization by objects of expenditure, from the railroad unemployment insurance administration fund and any other appropriation available to it for administrative expenses, in the proportion which the expenses of administering the respective activities for which the railroad unemployment insurance administration fund and the various other appropriations are available bears to the total administrative expenses of the Board.

The establishment of such a revolving fund (1) permits the Railroad Retirement Board to authorize one expenditure budget for each unit of organization as a basis for effective expenditure control, (2) eliminates the necessity of splitting vouchers, and (3) simplifies the accounting and reporting procedures of the Board, the General Accounting Office, and the Treasury.

Section 22 of the bill conforms the final sentence of section 11 (c) of the act with the provisions relating to the revolving fund.

Under section 23 of the bill the transfers from the railroad unemployment insurance administration fund to the railroad unemployment insurance account are authorized to be made at the end of each fiscal year rather than at the end of each fiscal year beginning with the end of the fiscal year 1946. The transfers may be made from the excess of the amount previously credited to the fund over the total amount expended for the purpose of administering the act, rather than from the excess of the amount credited to the fund during the preceding 7 fiscal years over the total amount expended during the same period. It is believed that no useful purpose would be served by holding administrative surpluses until 1946.

Section 1 of the bill specifies July 1, 1940, as the effective date of the amendments, except as to a claimant having a half month beginning in June 1940 and ending in July 1940. Such claimant would finish that half month on the basis of the present provisions of the act and would then start anew, beginning with the first day of unemployment following the end of such half month.

Section 30 of the bill amends the definition of "compensation" contained in section 1532 of the Internal Revenue Code by excluding, for certain purposes, earnings of less than $3 a month from a local lodge or division of a railway-labor-organization employer, if such amount is earned after March 31, 1940, or if it was earned between December 31, 1936, and April 1, 1940, but certain taxes were not paid on the basis of it prior to July 1, 1940. Such earnings are also to be disregarded, for certain purposes, under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 as that act is amended by section 28 of the bill. Section 29 of the bill amends the Railroad Retirement Act to clarify the previously more general provisions, as to the recovery, or the waiver of the recovery, of erroneous payments and as to the protection against liability for amounts the recovery of which has been waived.

PROVISIONS OF ALTERNATIVE BILL

The committee had for consideration, at the same time that it was considering S. 3920, another bill, S. 3925, dealing with a portion of the subject matter dealt with in S. 3920. This second bill differed from S. 3920 on three points, and raised one additional question. These four items are:

1. Experience rating.
2. The appropriation of funds for administrative expenses.
3. Waiting period.
4. Maximum benefits.

1. Experience rating: S. 3925 does not provide for increasing net benefit payments as substantially as the bill which the committee recommend be passed. Instead, it proposes to reduce the rate of contributions from a maximum of 3 percent to 2 percent and to 1 percent, varying with the balance in the railroad unemployment insurance account. In other words, it proposes to devote accumulated reserves principally to the reduction of contributions. The accumulation of reserves may occur for either or both of two reasons:

(a) The benefits may be less adequate than a 3-percent rate would permit; and

(b) The amount of unemployment, averaged over a number of years, may be less than anticipated.

(a) There is, of course, no absolute standard by which the adequacy of benefits can be determined. But it has been the congressional policy, and all parties in interest apparently agree, that the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act should provide benefits at least as favorable to the unemployed as the better State acts. Some attempt has been made to show that S. 3925 meets such a standard. But when statements apparently indicating such a conclusion are carefully examined it is to be noted that the comparison is always restricted to particular features such as maximum and minimum weekly benefit rates for total unemployment. At the hearings before the subcommittee it was demonstrated by application of the provisions of S. 3925 and of various State laws to representative samples of actual cases that S. 3925 would still leave the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act in an inferior position compared with the better State unemployment plans. While not as inferior as before with respect to weekly benefit rates, the act would be definitely inferior with respect to partial unemployment, and definitely inferior on the over-all picture. Comparison with five States whose benefit provisions, on the whole, are slightly below the average of all States, showed that in 29.7 percent of the cases individuals would be better off, and in 17 percent of the cases as well off, under the State laws as under the Railroad Act if S. 3925 were adopted.

(b) A reduction in the contribution rate because of a reduction in unemployment is based upon the theory which underlies the so-called experience rating in some State unemployment-compensation laws. Those who entertain this view believe that it is within the control of individual employers or groups of employers to reduce the number of workers who become unemployed and qualify for benefits, but that the employers will not exercise this power to any appreciable extent unless induced to do so by a consequent reduction in the rate of contributions. Experience rating in State legislation provides, therefore, for differential rates of contributions supposedly related to the success of the employer in reducing the number of his employees who become unemployed and qualify for benefits.

The prevention of unemployment necessarily implies that persons who succeed in securing work are employed as long as they desire and without interruptions for periods long enough to require the payment of unemployment-insurance benefits. Any employer or group of employers can attain this objective only if it offers a constant volume of employment. The proponents of experience rating point to certain types of managerial technique which employers may utilize to regularize and stabilize employment.

However, some of these techniques are obviously not applicable to the railroad industry. For example, the extent to which a railroad may accomplish the result analogous to output diversification in manufacturing is distinctly limited by local, State, and Federal regulations and a showing of public convenience and necessity. Other devices suggested for stabilizing employment are of limited applicability to the railroad industry. Temporary price concessions to increase business in slack periods may have some effect on passenger traffic, but they are not an important factor in the total amount of traffic and hence of employment. The training of workers to perform a variety of jobs to enable the transfer of persons in a select group to whom available employment is to be confined is limited by the seniority rules which have long been in effect on the railroads.

Moreover, some of the techniques suggested by advocates of experience rating do not and should not require the stimulus of reduction in contributions for their adoption. Progressive management will attempt to forecast the demand for its product or service and to operate its business accordingly, regardless of whether savings in unemployment insurance costs will result. A reduction in the seasonal factor on railroads, for example, would reduce the volume of equipment and facilities required, and such reduction would dwarf any conceivable saving in unemployment-insurance costs.[1] Generally speaking, construction and maintenance operations by a railroad involve transportation of substantial quantities of material. It can hardly be seriously urged that a railroad would need the incentive of reduced unemployment contributions to make an effort to plan transportation of such materials so as not to increase its peak traffic.

The devices referred to above relate to the stabilization of employment over a relatively short period of time. No employer or group of employers can control materially the volume of cyclical unemployment. Statistics indicate that over a period of years the volume of cyclical unemployment is at least three times the unemployment due to seasonal factors. Between 1926 and 1937 the ton-miles of freight traffic of the railroads declined by almost 19 percent, while the ton-miles of freight traffic for all forms of transportation declined only 5.3 percent. Employment on the railroads during the same period declined proportionately to a much greater extent. It will not be seriously urged that had an unemployment-insurance system been in effect on the railroads during that period they would have made a greater effort to maintain their volume of traffic against the general decline of production and the competition of other forms of transportation.

Assuming that an employer can achieve beneficial results by an effort to stabilize employment, it is obvious that the major part of unemployment on railroads is not due to failings of particular managements but rather is inherent in the economic organization of the country.

In addition to the advantages alleged to be derived from employment stabilization, representatives of the railroads contended at the hearings that the railroad industry is now being penalized because it pays taxes, for social-insurance purposes, of 6 percent as compared with 4 percent payable by most other industries. The difference lies in the fact that under title VIII of the Social Security Act (now subchapter A of ch. 9 of the Internal Revenue Code) the tax rate for old-age insurance is 1 percent as compared with 3 percent for the railroad industry.

This comparison is inapposite. The railroad-retirement system brought benefits to the railroad industry which the Social Security Act has not brought to other industries. Under the Railroad Retirement Act the railroads were relieved of the great bulk of the pension payments made under their private systems which had been in effect for many years. According to the Railroad Retirement Board (annual report for 1937, p. 35), the number of pensions under the private railroad plans on July 1, 1937, was 54,029. The monthly rate for these pensioners was $3,138,593.88. These rates represented an increase over the amounts payable by the railroads of 10.3 percent (Railroad Retirement Board Annual Report for 1937, p. 47). Making allowance for the increase under the Retirement Act, the annual pension roll of the railroads assumed by the Railroad Retirement Board was approximately $34,150,000. Under the Social Security Act there would have been no basis for making any adjustments in pensions prior to January 1, 1940. Moreover, since benefits would have been then paid only to persons who qualified by employment since January 1, 1937, the Social Security Act would have had, to date, substantially no effect on railroad pension payments and could have no appreciable effect for some time. During the 3 years ending with the end of the current fiscal year it is obvious that the railroad pension bill would have been not less than $102,000,000 had the railroads been subject to the Social Security Act.

The total taxes paid by the railroads and employers subject to the Carriers Taxing Act to June 30, 1940, will be approximately $190,000,000. Of this amount, $102,000,000 represents pension payments so that the net cost to the railroads would have been about $88,000,000. Special taxes under the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code would have been $65,000,000, leaving not more than $23,000,000, or the equivalent of about one-third of 1 percent of the pay roll, as an additional tax.

It is doubtful, however, whether even this represents an out-of-pocket cost to the railroads. Under the Railroad Retirement Act more than 100,000 persons have been retired from active railroad service. The average monthly compensation of these employees was not less than $150 a month (Railroad Retirement Board, Annual Report for 1939, p. 92) so that the annual pay roll on full-time basis would be at least $180,000,000. Some of these retired employees have already died, and others would in any event have retired. Many others, however, who have been retired undoubtedly have not been replaced but would have remained in service except for the enactment of the Railroad Retirement Act. It is a not unreasonable assumption that the savings from failure to make replacements more than offsets the apparent addition to out-of-pocket cost to the railroads arising out of taxes under the Carriers Taxing Act in excess of those which would have been levied under the Social Security Act or subchapter A of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code.

There appears to us no sound basis for the railroads' argument of tax discrimination. We do not believe that the Federal Government should take the lead in sacrificing adequate benefits for tax reductions; rather it should go in the opposite direction. Should such a lead be followed by the States the result on the whole Federal-State unemployment-insurance system might well be disastrous.

There is a further point which should not be overlooked in considering the costs which railroad employers should properly bear. S. 3925 apparently contemplates the provision of funds for administrative expenses from the general funds of the Treasury. During periods in which the contribution rate would be 1 percent the annual credit to the administration fund would be only about $2,000,000, which is far from sufficient to meet administrative expenses. The only apparent source from which the deficit could be made up is general funds of the Treasury.

2. Appropriation for administrative expenses: S. 3925 proposes to change the present provisions for the continuing appropriation of 10 percent of the contributions received for administrative expenses to an authorization to appropriate funds for administrative expenses from a fund into which 10 percent of the contributions are to be deposited. The present provisions were carefully considered by this committee in reporting upon the bill which became the original Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act. In reporting on that bill, this committee stated: [2]

"Unlike the amounts appropriated for administrative expenses of other activities of the Government, the experience of the Social Security Board and the State unemployment insurance agencies illustrates that the amounts that will be necessary for administering an unemployment-insurance system cannot be predicted with reasonable accuracy a substantial period in advance. It is essential to the proper functioning of an unemployment-insurance system that funds be available to administer its functions expeditiously; if a substantial period elapses between the time of unemployment and the time of the payment of benefits therefor, a large part of the purpose of an unemployment-insurance system will be defeated. Studies have indicated that approximately 10 percent of the funds of an unemployment-insurance system will ordinarily be expended for administrative expenses. By setting aside 10 percent of the contributions into this fund and making it continuously available for administrative expenses, the functioning of the unemployment-insurance system will not break down because of a shortage of administrative expenses in the face of an unpredicted increase in unemployment. Any excesses accumulated in this fund may be transferred to the benefit account (subsec. (d))."

Those considerations are still applicable. Moreover, administration of the act by the Railroad Retirement Board has demonstrated that such provisions will not be abused. Substantial funds have been accumulated in the railroad unemployment insurance administration fund, and the Railroad Retirement Board has suggested that the authority originally given to it to transfer surpluses after the fiscal year 1946 be accelerated so that it can promptly transfer to the account from which benefits are paid the major part of such surpluses.

The suggestion for the change of these provisions appears to have been based upon a misconception. This appears in a letter from J. H. Parmelee, director, bureau of railway economics, Association of American Railroads, reported on page 5523 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for May 6, 1940. In that letter it was stated that certain provisions of S. 3906, which are the same as the corresponding provisions of S. 3920, would enable the Railroad Retirement Board "to spend money for administrative purposes without any check or supervision by Congress or by any Government agency." It is sufficient to state that the expenditure of funds for administrative expenses under the applicable provisions will be subject to checks and supervision to the same extent as the expenditure of any other Government funds for similar purposes.

3. Waiting period: The change in the waiting-period requirement proposed in S. 3920 is discussed above. It is proposed by S. 3925 that the waiting period be changed from a 15-day half-month during which an employee had at least 8 days of unemployment to a 14-day registration period in which he had at least 7 days of unemployment. As pointed out above, a major consideration in changing the waiting-period requirement as proposed in S. 3920 is the reduction of the interval between the first registration for unemployment and the receipt of the first benefit check from approximately 38 days to approximately 22 days. The proposal in S. 3925 would reduce such interval at the most by only 2 days, no portion of which would result from the change from 8 to 7 days of unemployment in a registration period but would result from other provisions changing the basic period from a half month of 15 days to a registration period of 14 days. Moreover, responsible officials of the Federal Government have recommended to the States that benefit payments be liberalized, partially through a reduction in the waiting-period requirement and partially through a liberalization of the benefit structure. It would be inappropriate for the only unemployment-insurance system administered by the Federal Government not to pursue a similar policy.

[1] The aggregate cost of unemployment insurance to the railroad industry is approximately $65,000,000 per year. In the report to the President of his Committee of Six, which included three railway presidents, it was stated that "on the side of economy due to better methods of buying and utilization, more efficient use of the railway plant as a whole, and the steadily increasing efficiency of management and employees, the railways in 1937 handled 1,000 ton-miles of revenue freight at a cost of $6.41, compared with a cost of $10.78 in 1921. Had the cost of handling 1,000 revenue ton-miles been as high in 1937 as it was in 1921, railway operating expenses in 1937 would have been greater than they were by $1,576,000,000."

4. Maximum benefits: Both S. 3920 and S. 3925 propose an increase in the rate of benefits, but S. 3925 proposes a reduction in the duration of benefits from approximately 21½ weeks to 17½ weeks. This reduction would be effected by leaving the total number of compensable days unchanged, since both S. 3920 and S. 3925 provide for an increase in the number of compensable days in a registration period. It should not be forgotten that the increase in the number of compensable days in a registration period is designed to liberalize the benefit provisions. But when, as in S. 3925, such a change is not coupled with a corresponding change in the number of days compensable annually, the provision becomes, in cases of extended unemployment, merely a means of accelerating the exhaustion of benefit rights and not a liberalization at all. As indicated above, responsible officials of the Federal Government are on record as urging expansion of the benefits payable under State laws. Pursuant to these recommendations, a substantial number of States have extended the maximum duration of benefits. The proposal in S. 3920 would retain the present basic maximum and would extend it to some extent only for employees who previously had not received the major portion of benefits to which they would have been entitled had they been sufficiently unemployed.

By so defining the group to whom additional benefit rights are extended, assurance is given that the beneficiaries of the extension have established a very substantial insurance base through substantial employment in the previous year and have not, to the same degree as others, realized the benefits of their insurance. As mentioned above, S. 3925 would reduce the maximum duration for all employees. Moreover, insofar as the maintenance of the Federal system can be soundly financed with the normal contributions to which industry in general is subject, the Federal system should not be inferior to those of the more liberal States. It is obviously to the interest of the Federal Government that the State unemployment-compensation systems be as generous as is consistent with their present financial resources. It is demonstrable that this is not true at the present time. The advice offered by the Federal Government to the States concerning the liberalization of benefits cannot be taken seriously if the Federal Government itself shortens the maximum duration in the only unemployment-insurance system administered by it.

CONCLUSION

In essence, S. 3920, the bill which the committee recommend do pass, proposes that the existing scale of unemployment-insurance benefits be increased, particularly for the lower-bracket wage earners in the railroad industry. They propose no increase in the existing tax rate for railroad unemployment insurance. The alternative proposal espoused by the minority of the committee is in essence a bill designed to lower the existing tax rate upon carriers for unemployment insurance and to increase slightly the weekly benefits paid to unemployed under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, as amended.

The committee are of the opinion that it has been fully shown that the changes proposed in the existing law by the bill, S. 3920, are not only warranted but will tend to bring the operation of the Railroad Unemployment Act, as amended, more nearly in conformance with the provisions of existing State unemployment-insurance laws and provide a decent scale of unemployment benefits for unemployed railroad workers who are covered by provisions of the act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY]. (Putting the question.) The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Burke	Danaher	Hale
Ashurst	Byrd	Davis	Harrison
Austin	Byrnes	Donahey	Hayden
Bankhead	Capper	Ellender	Holman
Barbour	Caraway	Gerry	Holt
Barkley	Chandler	Gibson	Johnson, Calif.
Bilbo	Chavez	Gillette	Lee
Bone	Clark, Idaho	Green	Lucas
Bridges	Clark, Mo.	Gurney	Lundeen
McKellar	Nye	Smathers	Van Nuys
McNary	Overton	Taft	Wagner
Maloney	Pittman	Thomas, Idaho	Wheeler
Mead	Reed	Tobey	White
Miller	Reynolds	Townsend	Wiley
Neely	Schwartz	Tydings
Norris	Schwellenbach	Vandenberg

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY]. (Putting the question.) By the sound the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. GURNEY. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. REYNOLDS obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 285, Calendar No. 2058.

Mr. AUSTIN. Just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yielded momentarily to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. To enable me to make the motion which I have made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let us dispose of the motion.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. What is the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 285, making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point, for the convenience of Senators, the report on the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order is made.

The report (No. 1953) is as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 285) making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense, reports the same to the Senate without amendment and presents herewith information relative thereto.

On June 19, 1940, the President of the United States sent to the Senate the following message requesting an appropriation of $25,000,000 for the purpose of expanding the electric generating facilities of the Tennessee Valley Authority in order to meet the increasing demands for power from plants engaged in the manufacture of materials and supplies needed for national defense purposes:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 19, 1940.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 in the amount of $25,000,000.

The details of this estimate, the necessity therefor, and the reasons for its transmission at this time are set forth in the letter of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget transmitted herewith, with whose comments and observations thereon I concur.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1940.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith for your consideration supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Tennessee Valley

Authority for the fiscal year 1941 amounting to $25,000,000 as follows:

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Tennessee Valley Authority Fund: For an additional amount to carry out the provisions of the act entitled "The Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933," approved May 18, 1933, as amended by the act approved Aug. 31, 1935, and by the act approved July 26, 1939 (16 U. S. C., ch. 12a), including the funds necessary to begin construction of a dam on the Holston River near Jefferson City, Tenn.; to begin installation of 2 additional electric generating units at Wilson Dam, Ala., and 1 additional electric generating unit at Pickwick Landing Dam, Tenn.; and to begin construction of steam electric generating facilities with a rated capacity of approximately 120,000 kilowatts in the area served by the Authority; and the acquisition of necessary land, the clearing of such land, relocation of highways, and the construction or purchase of transmission lines and other facilities, and all other necessary works authorized by such acts, and for printing and binding, law books, books of reference, newspapers, periodicals, purchase, maintenance, and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles, rents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and all necessary salaries and expenses connected with the organization, operation, and investigations of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and for examination of estimates of appropriations and activities in the field, $25,000,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be in addition to and shall be covered into and accounted for as a part of the Tennessee Valley Authority Fund, 1941, as established by the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1941, approved Apr. 18, 1940 ---------- $25,000,000

This amount is required to enable the Tennessee Valley Authority to provide, for national-defense purposes, additional electric generating capacity in the area served by the Authority so as to meet the rapidly increasing demands for power from plants engaged in the manufacture of materials and supplies needed for national-defense purposes.

The expansion of facilities of the Tennessee Valley Authority as contemplated by this estimate has the approval of the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense.

The foregoing estimate of appropriation is required to meet contingencies which have arisen since the transmission of the Budget for the fiscal year 1941, and its approval is recommended.

Very respectfully,

HAROLD D. SMITH,
Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

On June 21, 1940, Mr. E. R. Stettinius, Jr., of the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense, addressed the following letter to Senator ADAMS, chairman of the subcommittee on deficiencies, urging the appropriation in the interest of national defense:

THE ADVISORY COMMISSION TO THE COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE,
Washington, D. C., June 21, 1940.

Hon. ALVA B. ADAMS,
Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR ADAMS: We have given careful study to the question of increasing the power capacity of the Tennessee Valley Authority. We have consulted that agency as well as the Federal Power Commission. In addition, I have had the advice of two consultants on my staff in the National Defense Advisory Commission, Mr. Gano Dunn, president of the J. G. White Engineering Corporation, and Mr. Charles W. Kellogg, president of the Edison Electric Institute.

We have concluded that, because of present demands on Tennessee Valley Authority already heavily loaded, and particularly in the face of the exceptional increase in power that will be necessary to produce aluminum for the airplane program of the United States, the proposed 180,000-kilowatt increased hydro capacity and the 120,000-kilowatt increased steam capacity is a project that should be immediately approved for purposes of national defense.

Sincerely yours,

E. R. STETTINIUS, Jr.

The committee held hearings on the estimate in connection with the second deficiency bill, at which the Tennessee Valley Authority officials testified. Further hearings were held in connection with this joint resolution, at which Mr. Stettinius, member of the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense; Mr. Gano Dunn, power consultant of the Commission, and Mr. David E. Lilienthal, vice chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, appeared and testified as to the urgent need for additional power development.

Of Mr. Gano Dunn, Mr. Stettinius had this to say:

"Now, in short, I wish to say that the gentleman on my left, Mr. Gano Dunn, is one of the outstanding electrical and mechanical engineers of this country. He is a past president of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers. He is now, and has for many years been, president of the J. G. White Engineering Corporation, who designed and built the present 60,000-kilowatt steam plant of the T. V. A. at Muscle Shoals.

"Mr. Dunn was the power-expert member of the Nitrate Commission of the War Department during the last war. At that time, he made a thorough engineering survey of the Tennessee River with reference to its suitability as a source of power for the manufacture of nitrates. So he for years has been familiar with this territory.

"You would be interested to know that, in connection with Wendell Willkie's difficulty with Mr. Lilienthal and his colleagues——

"Senator ADAMS. His former difficulty.

"Mr. STETTINIUS. Yes; his former difficulty—this distinguished gentleman on my left was engaged, or rather his firm was engaged, by the Commonwealth & Southern to represent Wendell Willkie against the Government.

"Mr. Dunn comes before you as my colleague and specialist on power matters on the Defense Commission, unbiased as a professional engineer, to speak in behalf of the T. V. A. expansion; and he has been a lifelong opponent to Government-owned power facilities."

The following are excerpts from the testimony of Mr. Stettinius stressing the need for additional power especially in connection with the expansion of the facilities of the Aluminum Corporation for the purpose of meeting the requirements of the aircraft industry for aluminum:

"I wish to say that in some ways this power situation of the T. V. A. is a very, very vital matter from the standpoint of national defense. The Aluminum Corporation now is expanding their production by 60,000,000 pounds per annum. If the water is short, the T. V. A. cannot supply power for this present production.

"They are waiting commencement now of another 60,000,000 pounds per annum capacity in Tennessee, which is clearly dependent upon this power expansion that you gentlemen are considering this afternoon.

"It looks as a general estimate, as a general background, gentlemen, it looks as if the defense program will involve something in the neighborhood of 200,000,000 pounds per annum of aluminum production in addition to the present requirements.

"Senator HAYDEN. What is the occasion for using so much aluminum?

"Mr. STETTINIUS. In the airplane schedule chiefly, sir. In the wing construction, the motors, and the fuselage. In the general aviation program, for instance, about 5 tons of aluminum go into one of these large-size bombers.

"Senator HAYDEN. I want to confess frankly to you that, coming from Arizona, which is the greatest copper-producing State, and realizing the great inroads that aluminum has made on copper, I am pretty highly prejudiced perhaps against that metal. But I do realize that it is lighter than any other metal, and that the need in aircraft construction is for lightness.

"Mr. STETTINIUS. Yes; in aircraft construction, aluminum, from the standpoint of its weight, its thickness, its strength, and its durability, takes the place of almost any other metal.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. STETTINIUS. Mr. Dunn in his testimony can bring out a great number of factors having to do with the entire industrial situation in the southeastern section of this country in connection with the defense program separate and apart from the aluminum case that I have spoken about."

For the information of the Senate there is included in this report excerpts from the memorandum filed by Mr. Dunn in justification of the expansion of power facilities at T. V. A.

"The increase in the hydro power of the Tennessee Valley Authority is advantageous because, by installing 90,000 kilowatts of generating equipment at the Holston Dam, the water impounded by that dam will not only energize the 90,000 kilowatts there installed but an additional 90,000 kilowatts to be installed at the Pickwick and Wilson Dams farther down the river. This is because the Holston Dam happens to be the highest one upstream from other dams in the Tennessee Valley over which other dams, the water which is stored in the Holston Reservoir is also discharged with accompanying power, which would not be the case if the Holston Dam stood alone by itself. By this particular development of the Tennessee Valley it may be said that we get 2 kilowatts of power for every 1 kilowatt that the Holston Dam itself develops.

"Our approval of 120,000 kilowatts of steam plant to be located near the Watts Bar Dam has the effect of transforming a large amount of what is termed 'secondary' or dump power resulting from the variations in the flow of the river into primary or continuous power which the Tennessee Valley Authority system greatly needs. The amount of power we approved was 180,000 kilowatts of hydro and 120,000 kilowatts of steam, but while this constitutes a total of 300,000 kilowatts of increased installed capacity it does not constitute 300,000 kilowatts of increased power, since the hydro power and the steam power overlap and they are not both in full operation at the same time. The net amount of increased power made available by the 300,000 kilowatts of installed capacity is in the neighborhood of 220,000 kilowatts.

"If the increased requirements for aluminum were the only increased requirements for the national defense for which power will be needed in the Tennessee Valley an increase in capacity of 100,000 kilowatts would have been adequate to take care of 80,000 kilowatts demand for aluminum and allow some spare capacity.

"But, in addition to the national-defense demands for aluminum involved in the airplane program, there are other power increases in prospect for the Tennessee Valley, for instance, 7,000 kilowatts to supply the new Du Pont powder plant at Memphis (Tennessee Powder Co.) for which a contract has just been let. There is also the requirement of 14,000 kilowatts for a proposed paper mill at Savannah, Tenn., and 8,000 kilowatts for metallurgical operations at Wilson Dam. There will also be by the time of 2 years hence an estimated increase of 50,000 kilowatts in the requirements of the various municipalities in the Tennessee Valley which now are supplied with power by the Tennessee Valley Authority. These increases besides the increase for aluminum and others which may yet arise in the development of the defense program fully justify the increased capacity which we have approved."

As to the relative cost of water power and steam power, Mr. Dunn had this to say:

"Now, in respect to the relative cost of water power and steam power, I have gone about the country preaching that steam power is cheaper than water power. That this is true is easily proved, at private rates for the cost of capital.

"Somebody asked this question at the House hearing, and if it is not out of the way now, I should be glad to discuss it at this time.

"Senator McKELLAR. Go right ahead.

"Senator ADAMS. You see, we are in this situation where we are putting up other people's money.

"Mr. DUNN. That is true. You are putting up my money, too.

"Originally, in 1892, for instance, it took 8 pounds of coal to make a kilowatt-hour by steam. At that time water power cost probably only half as much as steam power. But at that time water powers were not generally developed, because electric power transmission had not been developed. Nobody knew how to transmit the power from the water powers where it was developed to the cities where it was consumed.

"Later on, about 1907, the cost of steam power got down to 5.4 pounds of coal per kilowatt-hour. Also about that time the art of electric-power transmission began to be worked out by electrical engineers so that the unfortunate fact that water powers usually found themselves far away from cities was overcome.

"Then water power was still cheaper than steam power. I remember coming down here as the president of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers at the request of Senate and House committees and advising them in the drafting of the original water-power acts which gave the Government the right of recapture of all water powers at a fair value.

"The reason for this right of recapture was that at that time water powers were so much cheaper than steam powers that in the public interest it was not considered fair to see private interests obtain a water-power site and enjoy its profits in perpetuity because of the lower cost of water power.

"Now what has happened in the meantime? By 1920 the cost of steam power had dropped to such an extent that it took only about 3 pounds of coal to produce a kilowatt-hour.

"By 1930 the cost had dropped to 1.62 pounds of coal per kilowatt-hour. In 1936, when we had the World Power Conference here in Washington, the average cost of a kilowatt-hour by steam throughout the country for the year 1934, according to the survey reported by the Federal Power Commission, was 1.45 pounds of coal per kilowatt-hour. And today, in 1940, a new plant can develop a kilowatt-hour for 0.9 pound of coal.

"In that scaling down from 8 pounds of coal per kilowatt-hour to nine-tenths of a pound of coal per kilowatt-hour, steam power passed water power and now is much the cheaper power when costs are calculated on the same basis for each form of power.

"Now, you may ask me, and I am anticipating the question: If that is so, why is the power of T. V. A., which is principally water power, so cheap?

"The reason is this: The cost of steam power is made up very largely of the cost of coal and the cost of labor. You cannot buy coal or labor without paying for it. There is no way of getting around it. On the other hand, practically 80 percent of the cost of water power is in the cost of the capital that goes into building the plant, and in these days Government capital can be secured without full returns.

"Senator ADAMS. Let us get that right down on that basis. You had a great reduction in the amount of coal to make a kilowatt?

"Mr. DUNN. Yes.

"Senator ADAMS. If we amortize the cost of installation, how does the present cost of your electro-hydro power compare with the present cost of your coal-produced power, that is, making a proper amortization of the installation cost and allowing for depreciation?

"Mr. DUNN. May I finish with the previous question and make it complete?

"Senator ADAMS. Yes. You have to put up with us, because we sometimes interrupt people unintentionally.

"Mr. DUNN. Senator, I am never so happy as when I am interrupted, because I then can follow the minds of my questioners; and nothing is worse than talking against an unresponsive mind.

"Senator ADAMS. Yes; anyone who has practiced law understands that. We have talked to courts who would shut up like a clam and give us no intimation of what they were thinking.

"Mr. DUNN. Now, to go back to the point: Generally speaking, the first or capital cost of a water power is anywhere from three to four or five times as much as the first cost of a steam power. And if you calculate the elements that go into the cost of the output of a water power, namely, the cost of a kilowatt-hour, you will find that about 80 percent of those elements are in the category of returns to capital such as interest on investment, depreciation, etc. In the T. V. A. these returns to capital are abnormally low. If, for instance, they were what the Supreme Court calls a fair return for private capital, let us say, 6 percent, and if all the capital producing power were charged to power you could not afford to operate T. V. A. at its present exceptionally low rates.

"But what have you got in T. V. A.? In the first place, you have a very low Government rate of interest on the capital that is invested, a rate of interest that does not compare with the interest in private financing, where the rate represents the risk involved. The Government assumes the risk here, and therefore the rate of interest is low.

"But in addition to that, in the T. V. A. a large amount of the capital invested is not charged to power but to navigation and flood control. The power is regarded as a byproduct. Therefore, in calculating the cost of power the low rate of interest which is paid, is paid on only a part of the total investment.

"Senator ADAMS. You know, some of us rather marvel at the bookkeeping by which they reach those conclusions.

"Mr. DUNN. I marvel at it, too, sir.

"But here I am urging you to do more of it. And why? It is required by the defense of the United States.

"Now if I may finish this comparison of steam-power and water-power costs.

"If you do not make normal returns to capital, or what I may call comparable returns to capital, in a Government water power, then, because the returns to capital constitute the principal part of the cost of water power which is not the case with steam, the cost of the water power goes way down. That is why you can sell firm power from T. V. A. for 2.75 mills per kilowatt-hour, which private plants cannot do."

It was pointed out to the committee that it is planned to have the Cherokee (Holston) Dam ready to store the spring floodwaters of 1942, and that if there is any delay in commencement of construction the dam will not be completed in time to store such waters. The resulting delay in putting the project into operation might mean the defeat of the very purpose for which the project was initiated—expediting the national defense. On this point Mr. Dunn's testimony was as follows:

"Mr. DUNN. I would like to go back, if I may, to the thing that is most on my heart.

"We are in a dangerous situation in regard to the national defense. We need this power. The T. V. A. is the best place in the country to get it now.

"If we don't get this appropriation promptly approved, if there should be a week's delay, we may lose a whole year in getting 180,000 kilowatts of the power.

"The reason for that is that unless you get the Holston Dam closed in time to catch the spring floods of 1942 you will not fill your reservoir; and dams and water wheels but no water to run them are useless.

"Now, you might ask me, Why is it that you pick out this particular week and say that if there is a week's further delay it may cost us a year's delay in getting power? My answer is that I don't say just that.

"But I do say that we may already be too late. It is an act of God when those floods do come in the spring of 1942. If our dam is closed before they come, well and good. If it is not we have lost a whole year.

"The time of completion that was mentioned, of 24 months, is a very short time.

"Senator ADAMS. You would not guarantee that time?

"Mr. DUNN. No; we may have already delayed too long.

"I do say that if we in the Defense Commission who are charged with this responsibility don't do our duty now and start this thing as promptly as we could, and if you in Congress don't do your duty now and start this thing as soon as you can, and the odds should then go against us in the spring of 1942 before the dam is closed, and if as a result of this the aluminum for those airplanes is not ready, the public will hold us responsible, as it will also hold you.

"A week now may mean a loss of a whole year in getting that power available. We may already be too late. But if we are, and you approve this matter, we have both done our best."

It was further pointed out to the committee, in connection with the development of steam-electric-generating facilities, that unless orders for the necessary machinery were placed immediately there would be prolonged delay in obtaining delivery of such machinery due to accumulated orders.

The following excerpts from Mr. Dunn's testimony stressed the urgent necessity for placing orders for steam machinery and equipment at this time:

"Senator TOWNSEND. Suppose we turn this picture around. You say that we may be too late for the dam. I suppose that the Government is going to pay for all of this proposition. Why don't we appropriate sufficient money to build sufficient steam plants so that we know we are going to be able to figure on them instead of taking a chance on the dam?

"Mr. DUNN. My answer to that is that unless we order the steam right away we may be too late for the steam also. The steam manufacturers of turbines, generators, and boilers are already nearly full of orders, and unless we place the orders for the steam equipment promptly we are not going to be able to get deliveries in time. It is even possible that the steam plant would take longer to build than the dam.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. DUNN. There is a further thing that I would like to say on this question of the time of completion. When I made the statement that the T. V. A. engineers now estimated that the steam plant could be completed in 18 months, that only means if the orders are placed immediately.

"Senator ADAMS. That is the minimum?

"Mr. DUNN. No. That is what we can fairly expect. But if you delay in placing those orders, then you cannot get your turbines and boilers until 24 or 30 months, on account of the clogging of the factories.

"Senator ADAMS. The generators are practically the same kind of equipment, whether it is steam or hydro, are they not?

"Mr. DUNN. Oh, no.

"Senator ADAMS. They are different types of generators?

"Mr. DUNN. Yes. They are wholly different types. The companies who make the water wheels are mostly different companies from those who make the equipment for the steam.

"Senator ADAMS. Are the motors different?

"Mr. DUNN. No. The generators are the same. But they are usually made together; and the men who make them, like the Smith Co. and the Baldwin & Chalmers Co., with their hydro departments, are not busy, because everybody is building steam plants nowadays. That is another reason for going to them for this hydro equipment.

"There is going to be a general increase in demands for power all over the country on the part of the public utilities; and unless we get these orders in promptly, we cannot get delivery that will enable us to complete the steam equipment in 18 months, and perhaps not for 24 or 30 months.

"The rush has not yet begun, Senator. The great appropriations that Congress has made have not yet begun to take hold. But as soon as they do, we are going to have congestion in the factories and will get behind in our normal program. Therefore, I cannot urge it upon you too strongly.

"As to what was said about my testimony being against interest, I have no interest in this other than the national defense.

"Senator ADAMS. That is right. We know that you gentlemen come here to give your views of what is best for the country at this time. We accept that attitude without qualification. I think I can speak for the other members of the committee on that.

"Senator MCKELLAR. I am sure that you can."

As to the advantage to national defense in having the Aluminum Co.'s plant already located in Tennessee Valley, Mr. Stettinius' testimony was as follows:

"Senator NYE. How much additional opportunity is there for power development in the Tennessee Valley in the event of an emergency increase?

"Mr. LILIENTHAL. There is very great opportunity, Senator. In the upper waters of the Holston River, for instance, in wild country where there would be no extensive relocation of roads or railroads, there are some very fine dam sites. We could respond promptly to the Defense Commission's needs if it were necessary to undertake construction there. Of course, we are not suggesting the development of any of those sites at this time.

"Senator MCKELLAR. In that connection, I want to ask Mr. Dunn another question.

"With the aluminum plant within 20 miles of Knoxville and within something like 20 miles of the Norris Dam and about the same distance from other dams that are being built there, if these improvements on the river, if these dams on the river, had not been built, wouldn't you have had to find some other factories of the Aluminum Co. or some other aluminum company besides this Tennessee Valley one?

"Mr. STETTINIUS. Yes, sir.

"Senator MCKELLAR. You would be in bad shape?

"Mr. STETTINIUS. Yes, sir.

"Senator MCKELLAR. For the manufacture of aluminum?

"Mr. STETTINIUS. Yes.

"Senator MCKELLAR. If it were not for these dams?

"Mr. STETTINIUS. Yes, sir. We would."

The total cost of the projects proposed to be undertaken in connection with the national-defense program will amount to $65,800,000, of which the proposed $25,000,000 is the initial appropriation. Further appropriations, of $29,800,000 and $11,000,000 in the fiscal years 1942 and 1943, respectively, will be needed to complete the projects. The work to be undertaken is as follows:

"The following table summarizes the expenditure estimates for this national-defense power-supply program:

Project	Total estimated cost	Estimated expenditures
		Fiscal year 1941	Fiscal year 1942	Fiscal year 1943
Cherokee project	$36,000,000	$11,000,000	$19,000,000	$6,000,000
Wilson and Pickwick units	5,300,000	3,500,000	1,800,000
Steam electric-generating facilities	10,500,000	7,500,000	3,000,000
Transmission facilities	14,000,000	3,000,000	6,000,000	5,000,000
Total	65,800,000	25,000,000	29,800,000	11,000,000

"The following is a more complete description of these projects:

"1. Cherokee Dam: A storage dam and hydroelectric power plant to be built on the Holston River near Jefferson City, Tenn. This project will cost $36,000,000; will have a useful storage capacity of 1,400,000 acre-feet; and will have an installed capacity of 90,000 kilowatts. The supplemental appropriation will provide $11,000,000 for initial expenditure on this project. This amount, together with $19,000,000 in the fiscal year 1942 and $6,000,000 in the fiscal year 1943, will enable the Authority to have the storage from this project available in the spring of 1942 and the generating units at the site on the line in the fall of 1942. The storage and generating units at this project, together with additional generating units at Wilson and Pickwick Dams, as described below, will increase the continuous firm power capacity of the Tennessee Valley Authority power system by 120,000 kilowatts.

"2. Generating units No. 11 and No. 12 at Wilson and No. 4 at Pickwick: The supplemental appropriation will provide $3,500,000 to start installation of two additional 26,000-kilowatt generating units at Wilson Dam, and one additional 36,000-kilowatt unit at Pickwick Dam. This amount, together with $1,800,000 in the fiscal year 1942, will enable the Authority to have these three units with a total capacity of 88,000 kilowatts on the line by the spring of 1942 at which time the storage from the Holston project will be available to increase the low-water flow through all main river projects.

"3. Steam electric-generating facilities: The supplemental appropriation will provide $7,500,000 to start construction of additional steam electric-generating facilities in the area served by the Authority with an installed capacity of approximately 120,000 kilowatts. This amount, together with $3,000,000 in the fiscal year 1942, will be sufficient to have these facilities on the line by December 1941. The Authority will be assisted in the planning and design of these facilities by a nationally recognized engineering firm specializing in design of steam plants.

"4. Transmission facilities: The supplemental appropriation will provide $3,000,000 to start construction of the transmission facilities needed to tie the generating facilities described above into the Tennessee Valley Authority power system and to carry this power to the market. It is estimated that an additional $6,000,000 in fiscal year 1942 and $5,000,000 in fiscal year 1943 will be required for this purpose.

"The total estimated cost of the projects to be started with this supplemental appropriation is $65,800,000. With this expenditure over the next 2½ fiscal years, the generating capacity in the Tennessee Valley can be increased by 298,000 kilowatts. The emergency schedule to be followed will make this capacity and the attendant continuous firm power available for use on the following dates:

Date	Plant	Installed capacity kilowatts	Firm power continuous kilowatts
December 1941	Steam	120,000	100,000
February 1942	Pickwick No. 4	36,000
March 1942	Wilson No. 11	26,000
April 1942	Wilson No. 12	26,000
Do	Holston storage, used down river		80,000
August 1942	Holston No. 1	30,000	30,000
September 1942	Holston No. 2	30,000	10,000
October 1942	Holston No. 3	30,000
Total increase		298,000	220,000

PROHIBITION OF THE MAILING OF SUBVERSIVE MATTER

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill, which I send to the desk and request to have read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator will be permitted to introduce the bill, and it will be read.

The bill (S. 4223) to prohibit the transmission through the mails or in interstate commerce of certain subversive matter was read the first time by title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful to deposit or cause to be deposited in the United States mails for transmission or delivery any matter, or to transmit or cause to be transmitted by radio, telegraph, or telephone, or by any other means, from any place in any State, Territory, or possession of the United States to any place outside of such State, Territory, or possession any matter in furtherance of any activity or conspiracy tending or intended to subvert or change the form of the Government of the United States, or of any State, from the republican form guaranteed by the Constitution. Whoever violates any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned not more than 2 years or fined not more than $5,000, or both.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, the bill introduced by me would prohibit members of the Communist Party, or the leaders thereof, members of the German-American Bund, and of similar organizations which are bent either on the destruction of this Government or on changing our form of government from using the mails for that purpose. For the life of me, I can see no reason why the people of the United States or the Government should permit these un-American forces to utilize the United States mails, the telephone, the telegraph, or other means of communication in attempting to destroy the Government. I have therefore introduced the bill.

In connection with the measure, I have before me two petitions in support of the proposed legislation. One is a petition in the form of a resolution issued by the American Defense Society, of New York City, their petitioner being the president of that organization, Mr. Robert Appleton. I take this opportunity to read the petition, as follows:

Whereas article IV, section IV, of the Constitution of the United States, guarantees to the States a republican form of government; which guarantee inures to each citizen of a State, as well as to the State as a political entity (See Appeal of Allyn, 81 Conn., 534; Cooley Const. Lim., 77th ed., p. 62; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542), and

Whereas representatives, agents, and/or citizens of foreign governments, that are not republican in form, are engaged and conspiring in subversive activities in the United States, in the several States, and in the State of New York, tending and intended to change our existing and established republican form of government of the United States, of the several States, and of the State of New York, to some form not republican; and

Whereas such representatives, agents, and/or citizens of foreign governments and their associates and abettors, in furtherance of said subversive activities, are using the mails, the radio, the telephone and the telegraph, for the dissemination and distribution of propaganda and literature tending and intended to change our existing and established republican form of government of the United States, of the several States, and of the State of New York, to some form of government, not republican; and

Whereas such subversive activities and the dissemination and distribution of such propaganda and literature constitute a serious danger to the republican form of government, so guaranteed to the several States and to the State of New York and to its citizens, including this petitioner, by said article IV, section IV, of the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas the several States, and the State of New York, and their citizens, under the Constitution, have conferred upon the Congress of the United States the exclusive power to legislate concerning the use of the mails, the radio, the telephone, the telegraph, and other means of communication between the States; and

Whereas the power to carry into effect the guaranty of section IV, article IV, of the Constitution resides exclusively in Congress (see Texas v. White, 7 Wall., 730, 19 L. ed. 227; Marshall v. Dye, 231 U. S., 250, 34 S. Ct., 92, 58 L. ed. 206; Taylor v. Beckham, 178 U. S. 578, 20 S. Ct. 890, 1009, 44 L. ed. 1187; Pacific Tel. Co. v. Oregon, 223 U. S. 118); and

Whereas it has been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States that the repelling of invasions and the putting down of domestic violence are not the only exigencies that may arise to require the enforcement of the guaranty contained in article IV, section IV, of the Constitution (see Taylor v. Beckham, supra); and the dissemination and distribution of such propaganda and literature, in furtherance of such subversive activities and conspiracies, are infecting the blood stream of our Nation with noisome, totalitarian philosophies, termed Communist, Nazi, or Fascist, which, however known, are equally abhorrent to the traditional principles of our American form of government; and

Whereas the distinquishing feature of a republican form of government is the right of the people to elect their own officers for legislative, judicial, and executive functions, within the bounds of written constitutions limiting their own powers, as against the sudden impulses of mere majorities—a feature that is being jeopardized in America by said subversive activities; and

Whereas self-preservation, the first law of nature, applies to governments as well as to individuals and it is inconceivable that our people, under their Constitution, are too weak to provide protection from "fifth column" activities; and

Whereas it has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States that legislation by Congress making it an offense to mail an obscene paper, does not contravene the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States (see Harmon v. United States, 50 F. 921, affirming 45 F. 414; United States v. Journal Co., 197 F. 415; Knowles v. United States, 170 F. 409; Clark v. United States, 211 F. 916; and cases cited); and that legislation by Congress, making it an offense to mail papers containing advertisements of lotteries, does not contravene the first amendment and does not abridge "freedom of speech and of the press," and the Court said: "The circulation of newspapers is not prohibited but the Government declines itself to become an agent in the circulation of printed matter which it regards as injurious to the people" (see In re Rapier, 143 U. S. 132, 12 S. Ct. 374, 36 L. Ed. 93; Horner v. United States, 143 U. S. 213, 12 S. Ct. 407, 36 L. Ed. 126; and Horner v. United States, 143 U. S. 570, 12 S. Ct. 522, 36 L. Ed. 266); and

Whereas the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, while prohibiting legislation by Congress against free speech, as such, cannot have been and obviously was not intended to give immunity for every possible use of language to those who, with brazen hypocrisy, claim the protection of the first amendment while attempting to subvert and destroy the whole Constitution and the form of government established by it (see Frohwerk v. United States, 249 U. S. 204, 39 S. Ct. 249, 63 L. Ed. 561); and

Whereas Congress has such powers, under the Constitution, in addition to the enumerated powers, as are necessary or expedient or proper to carry out the granted powers (see Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 1, 5 L. Ed. 302, and, accordingly, Congress has the power to enforce the guaranty of a republican form of government, as provided in article 4, section IV, of the Constitution:

Now therefore your petitioner, a citizen of the United States and a resident and citizen of the State of New York, respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to enact appropriate legislation to prohibit the use of the mails, the radio, the telegraph, the telephone, and of any and all other means of communication and transportation over which the exclusive control has been conferred upon Congress under the Constitution of the United States in furtherance of any activity or conspiracy tending and intended to subvert or to change the form of government of the United States or of any State from the republican form as guaranteed by article IV, section 4, of the Constitution of the United States.

ROBERT APPLETON, Chairman.
THE AMERICAN DEFENSE SOCIETY, INC.,
225 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

JULY 8, 1940.

Mr. President, that petition is followed by a resolution in reference to the proposed legislation adopted by the Junior Order United American Mechanics, signed by Mr. James L. Wilmeth, of Philadelphia, Pa., secretary of the order. I read the second paragraph, as follows:

Whereas some of these subversive organizations have gained the freedom of the air, under the guise of upholding a candidate for public office, thus placing themselves within the regulations of the Federal Communications Commission, and have cited in other ways, such as high-sounding titles of their organizations, to influence citizens of the United States to join their forces, and have also circulated petitions and secured signers thereto for candidates for public office, without acquainting the people with the fact that they are signing subversive documents—

I ask that the whole resolution be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the national board of officers of the national council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, is well acquainted with the action of the Communist Party, and Nazi bund, Fascists, and other similar organizations in this country, which are fostered and sponsored for the most part by foreign countries, and whose object and purpose is to seek a change in the form of the United States Government, and that some of such organizations exist for the avowed purpose of overthrowing the United States Government and substituting therefor a totalitarian form of government; and

Whereas some of these subversive organizations have gained the freedom of the air, under the guise of upholding a candidate for public office, thus placing themselves within the regulations of the Federal Communications Commission, and have cited in other ways, such as high-sounding titles of their organizations, to influence citizens of the United States to join their forces, and have also circulated petitions and secured signers thereto for candidates for public office without acquainting the people with the fact that they are signing subversive documents: Therefore be it

Resolved by the national board of officers of the national council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, That we stoutly condemn all such organizations and practices, and that they should either be outlawed or their organizations placed under the direction and control of the proper authorities; and be it further

Resolved, That the freedom of the air, in the matter of broadcasting, should be denied to such organizations on the ground that the founding fathers of this Nation never intended by the freedom which they bestowed in their Constitution for such freedom to be the means of destroying that Constitution and system of laws which they established for the government of a free people.

JAMES L. WILMETH, Secretary.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in looking over the record of the past several years in regard to the matter about which I am now speaking, I found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 4, 1936, a very able speech made by Representative McClellan, of Arkansas, pertaining to the use of the mails, the radio, and other means of communication by members of the Communist Party. The speech impressed me so thoroughly that I am extremely desirous that the Members of this body, as well as the other readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, have an opportunity of pursuing Mr. McClellan's thoughts. Therefore I ask that the address of Mr. McClellan and the debate ensuing be reprinted in full at this juncture in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I requested this time so that I might direct the attention of Members to something I think of grave concern to every American citizen, something that should receive the attention of every Member of this House. We have already heard some discussion of communism this afternoon, and I regret that I am unable to follow the suggestion made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Maverick], who just preceded me, that we forget about communism. I say, God forbid that real Americans should ever forget about the menace of communism. [Applause.] This morning when I read in the Washington Herald an editorial entitled "Communism and the Columbia Broadcasting System," and when I reread it and began to understand the full significance of what is transpiring in America, and the subject that that editorial deals with, I was aroused, I believe, to a keener sense of my duties and responsibilities as a Representative in this legislative body than I have heretofore felt since I took the oath of office. At first thought it occurred to me, What is communism? This editorial announces that tomorrow the head of the Communist Party in America is to have the free use of one of the greatest broadcasting chain radio systems that we have for the purpose of disseminating information about Russian communism, not only information about it, but to preach to Americans the doctrine of the destruction of free Christian institutions. When I read that I thought it was time for Congress to take some action.

I inquired today and learned from the authorities of the Federal Communications Commission that there are letters and telegrams pouring in to it now from American people throughout the Nation protesting the free use of these facilities being made available to public enemies of this Government. I join with all true Americans in that protest. I do not know how far we can go or just what can be done, but I say to you that if we are helpless, if the Federal Communications Commission does not now have under the law authority to prohibit the broadcasting of this doctrine of destruction and overthrow of the very Government that patriots by the thousands and millions have died to establish, build, and maintain, then God pity us, I do not know how we are going to be saved. As an American citizen, and as a Member of this Congress, I resent the action of the Columbia Broadcasting System making available its facilities free to those who want to preach the doctrine of Soviet communism and of destruction of our system of government to American citizens. The boys who wore the khaki in the World War went across to foreign soil to fight a war to make the world safe for democracy. Whether we failed in making it safe for democracy may be debatable, but we do know that we preserved America, and on their behalf I denounce the action of this broadcasting system that is making available its facilities for the purpose of aiding an organized public enemy. [Applause.]

I go further. I say to you out of profound reverence and gratitude to those who have made that flag possible, to those who have secured to you and me and passed on to us the heritage that gives us the right today to assemble and worship Almighty God as we please, and to have free institutions of learning, I denounce the action of the Columbia Broadcasting System for aiding and abetting a public enemy that seeks to invade this Nation by the dissemination of its poisonous propaganda.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. Is the gentleman aware that the doctrine he is now preaching, if it had been in existence some years ago and been in force, there would have been no flag, there would have been no America, no independence? Goodness gracious, what do you know about Russia?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Does the gentleman want to make a speech in my time?

Mr. PIERCE. No; but I think the gentleman is giving vent to a lot of fuss and feathers about nothing.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Well, I am glad that the gentleman needs enlightenment. What the gentleman has in mind is the doctrine of free speech, I suppose.

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Does the gentleman say that we ought to sit here idle and let those who are seeking to gain control of this Government for the sole purpose of destroying free speech get control of it by the use of these facilities?

If that is all you know about Russia and communism then you really need to be enlightened. [Applause.]

Mr. PIERCE. How do you know what you are saying is true?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. How do you know it is not?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. MCCORMACK. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] has raised a question which has been advanced and which many people honestly misunderstand. When the framers of the Constitution revolted, they revolted; they did not claim they had a right to urge revolution under the guise of freedom of speech. They revolted and engaged in a revolution. If they had been apprehended they woud have been tried as traitors.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, at this time I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and insert in the RECORD this editorial about which I have spoken.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. SCOTT. I object to the editorial, but not to the revising of the gentleman's remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair hear objection?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I invite the gentleman from California to read it. It has some good Americanism in it. I regret I do not have time to read it, but I think it ought to go into the RECORD so that all American people may have an opportunity to read it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, so that my friend will not be denied the right of free speech, about which our friend from California talks much, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes, so that, in spite of the objection, he may let us know what said editorial embraces.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. We go out and build battleships, manufacture cannons and airplanes, and we spend billions on equipping and maintaining an Army and Navy to defend us against enemies who might attack us in time of war. Have we not the desire and courage and power and statesmanship to prevent, in times of peace, the formation and prosecution of a conspiracy for our ultimate destruction by force and revolution? I say to you that if they gain any hold at all they will advocate revolution. That is their aim and purpose.

Mr. Chairman, I desire, as a Member of this Congress, to go on record today by answering in the affirmative that I think we ought to have, as Members of Congress and the representatives of our people at home, the desire, the courage, the will, and the determination to take such affirmative action by legislation or otherwise, as may be expedient and necessary, to prevent them from ever gaining a foothold in this Nation.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman tell us what is in that editorial to the printing of which the gentleman from California [Mr. SCOTT] objected?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I do not have time to read it.

Mr. BLANTON. You can tell us what is in the editorial.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I will answer the gentleman by saying that it points out that this man Browder, who is the head of the American Communist Party, is to speak tomorrow, and has the free use of the facilities of this chain broadcasting company. He has announced—or his paper, the Daily Worker, the official organ of that organization, has announced—that for the first time in the history of the American (Communist) Party the millions of the American people will have an opportunity to hear the program—and note what the program really is—of that party direct from the foremost American authority on communism.

"Local stations which are part of the Columbia system should be urged to pick up this broadcast. Organizations should arrange mass meetings where workers and farmers can be brought together to hear this important speech."

Oh, we may well expect that his remarks will be mild at first, but we do not have to speculate as to the motive that prompts this address or the results this enemy of our Government hopes to achieve.

And I may say further to my colleague from Texas [Mr. Blanton] and to the other Members of this House that the author of this editorial points out previous public declarations of this man, Earl Browder, and also of articles contained in the Daily Worker, the official organ of the Communist Party in America, as recently as December 9, 1935, in which they advocate "the dictatorship of the proletariat and the power of the soviets" in America and in which they advocate the establishment of "one party—and for building the transition to the revolutionary struggle for a soviet America."

I heartily commend this paper for its great patriotic service in the publishing of this editorial and in calling this matter to the attention of the American people, and I endorse every statement made and every assertion contained therein. Communism is the very antithesis of democracy. It is the oil of regimentation that will not mix with the pure waters of religious and economic freedom. I make my choice and cast my lot with democracy. And I invite you, my colleagues, to read this editorial and join with me in protesting the un-American conduct and act of the Columbia Broadcasting Co. in surrendering to this organization the availability and use of its powerful facilities for the dissemination of this un-American propaganda.

This action on the part of the Columbia Broadcasting System and its president, William S. Paley, constitutes a flagrant insult and defiance to every believer in Almighty God and every lover of our Christian institutions. The leaders of the Communist Party and powers in Russia are atheists. In that country the worship of Almighty God is forbidden. Religious liberty has been completely trampled and destroyed. If it is their purpose to overthrow our American Government and institute instead these principles, policies, and doctrines that now obtain in Soviet Russia, as their official organ, the Daily Worker, has proclaimed, as quoted in this editorial, then I say to you that any action of this organization and its leaders and the emissaries of the Soviet Government toward the accomplishment of this design constitutes treason in the extreme. It is an offense that I cannot tolerate and which I most emphatically, unreservedly, and irrevocably condemn. [Applause.]

This man Browder, during the time the American soldiers were wearing khaki and fighting in France, was serving in a Federal penitentiary for being a slacker. That is the stripe of Americanism they now tell us ought to be granted free speech to overthrow the very Government the World War soldiers fought to preserve. I say to you I will not go along with that sort of "ism" and neither will I condone it by silence. I believe in preserving these institutions, and I shall raise my voice on every occasion and against any man who attacks and seeks to destroy all that we have built for the freedom and happiness of our people during our 160 years of national existence.

Mr. MCSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. MCSWAIN. Is it not a fact that advocating the overthrow of our Government by force and violence is substantially and virtually treason?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. It is treason, and the act of the Columbia Broadcasting Co. in making use of its facilities free for that purpose is little if anything less than treason itself.

Mr. MCSWAIN. Is not treason a greater crime than murder? Would anybody under the sun sustain and support anybody who would broadcast or publish a paper advertising murder?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Certainly not. Talk about freedom of speech! Freedom of speech ends when and wherever the conversation of the person talking advocates the overthrow of this Government by force and violence begins. Whenever the conversation runs in that direction there is no license or right that I recognize as being superior to my duty and yours of preventing the accomplishment of such a design. It is the same proposition of a man walking down the street and saying to you, "Governor PIERCE, I have a right to wave my arms. That is my individual liberty, and I propose to do as I please and exercise it." But you will immediately warn and admonish him, "Yes; but your individual liberty ends where the point of my nose begins." [Laughter.]

So I say their liberty ends where the safety and preservation of our national existence and democratic form of government begins.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. As a matter of fact, illustrating what those who oppose the McCormack and Kramer bills mean by free speech, when the gentleman, being a representative of the people, wanted to read an editorial, one of the advocates of this free speech, who objects to the Kramer and McCormack bills, the gentleman from California [Mr. SCOTT], objected to his extending the editorial?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. That is true. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

INSURANCE BOOTLEGGING BY ALIEN COMPANIES

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly in regard to bootlegging insurance, insurance being bootlegged by alien insurance companies. I think it a very important matter, and I think it one which should arouse the interest of every Member of Congress. In view of the fact that we are spending the dollars of American citizens in building up our national defense, I think those dollars, insofar as possible, should be distributed to American businessmen, and that where those dollars are paid out in the form of insurance premiums, the premium money should be paid by American contractors doing national-defense work to American insurance companies and their agents.

Mr. President, while all this hue and cry is going on to see that nobody makes any unjust profit out of the defense program, and Congress is voting billion after billion of dollars to increase our facilities and armaments in that program, it seems strange indeed that, with all the care and attention which people give to imposing and superimposing upon our American corporations profit taxes and excess-profit taxes on this class of business, yet our War and Navy Departments blithely allow these moneys appropriated by Congress to be spent by contractors who in turn use the American taxpayers' funds to purchase insurance from a class of companies which pay no taxes of any kind, directly or indirectly, to any State in the United States or to the Federal Government. I refer to Lloyd's of London, who right now are benefiting more by the defense program than any of the American insurance companies or those foreign companies who are complying with American laws.

You can well understand a corporation carrying out a contract for many millions of dollars for the Navy or Army or for other Federal works must protect itself with various forms of insurance—surety bonds, employer's liability insurance to take care of accidents, fire, and other forms of insurance.

There are many companies in America, old and well established and owned by taxpaying corporations, and there are still other British companies which have been here for many years and have been operating with a long and honorable record, who comply in every way with the rules and regulations laid down by the various State and Federal Governments. But the cream of the business goes to London Lloyd's, which operates in a mystic, subrosa manner, who bootleg this insurance, so to speak, and by evading Federal laws and Federal taxation and State taxation, are able to sell the insurance to the American contractor about 22½ percent cheaper than the companies who walk up to the counter and pay the tax collector.

Of course, they can undersell these other companies, in precisely the same way that a distillery in Mexico, running liquor over the border and delivering it through back doors of saloons, can sell whisky cheaper than the American distillers.

The only difference is that it is possible occasionally to catch the liquor bootlegger, because he has to deliver his goods in a truck, but it is not possible to catch the insurance bootlegger, because he does business by mail, cable, or trans-Atlantic telephone.

Does it seem fair for us to impose taxation upon our properly licensed insurance companies, which burden will probably be increased during this session of Congress, and automatically deprive them of the right to share in this very defense munition business which they are paying taxes to support? And they are deprived because Lloyd's, by evading all taxation, are able to do business 22½ percent cheaper?

I know of a contract just let in Panama by the War Department which carries a clause which specifically states that the contractor must protect his employees by carrying employer's liability insurance, and the insurance must be placed in a company or companies acceptable to the War Department. In connection with previous and similar contracts in Panama and elsewhere, Lloyd's policies have been accepted by the War Department as satisfactory, but I ask, Should the War Department or Navy Department construe this kind of insurance as satisfactory when they know, or at least should know, that the companies carrying the insurance are doing so illegally and evading the laws of this country—the very country that is footing the bill in the long run?

I bring this matter to the attention of my colleagues now because I am reliably informed that recently there was placed by the War Department a $30,000,000 contract for construction work in the Panama Canal Zone with a very large construction firm and that firm placed its insurance with Lloyd's, of London, an alien company. My recollection is that the amount of premium paid was about $340,000, which sum should have gone to legitimate domestic companies, or at least English companies which are domiciled in this country in such a manner that they might be served with process.

UNDERWRITERS AT LLOYD'S

Underwriters at Lloyd's, or as they are commonly known, Lloyd's of London, or London Lloyd's, constitute an institution peculiar to and existing only in England, and is simply a group of unincorporated individuals who, by agreement, organized themselves into groups of underwriters for the purpose of assuming risks of an insurable nature.

Organizations or groups of individuals, such as Lloyd's of London, exist in no other country in the world, and as such are not permitted or licensed to do business in any State in the United States, except in Illinois and Kentucky where in both instances special laws have been enacted by the legislatures requiring Lloyd's to make deposits, submit to examination, pay State taxes, and do business through regularly licensed insurance brokers or agents.

All insurance companies organized under the laws of any State of the United States and alien insurance companies authorized to do business in any State of the United States and maintaining United States branch offices, are required by Federal statutes and statutes of the several States to bear their share of the tax burden. Whereas, Lloyd's can and undoubtedly do escape Federal taxation and State taxation (except in Illinois and Kentucky) because of the fact that they are not duly licensed and, therefore, do not render either financial statements or tax returns to the State taxing authorities or to the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

American and alien insurance corporations licensed in any State of the United States are taxed under the Federal Revenue Act of 1940, but Lloyd's of London, not being a corporation, escape Federal taxation because no provision is made for the taxation of nonresident alien individuals deriving a part of their income from activities in the United States.

A very large number of American business concerns buy insurance from Lloyd's because Lloyd's, not being subjected to the same taxation as domestic companies and alien companies legally transacting business in the United States, are able to sell insurance coverages at a cheaper rate.

The laws of the several States and regulations of the Treasury Department make certain requirements of insurance companies as conditions precedent to being licensed to do business or to write obligations for the benefit of the United States of America. Briefly, these requirements are:

First. A minimum capital and surplus must be subscribed and paid in. Lloyd's have no capital and, with the exception of Illinois and Kentucky, no surplus in the United States.

Second. Such capital and surplus must be in cash or specified classes of securities—the investment of Lloyd's surplus, if any, is not controlled in the United States.

Third. Adequate reserves must be carried for losses, unearned premiums, and other special purposes. With the exception of Illinois and Kentucky, no States make any provision for the maintaining of surplus or premium reserves by Lloyd's for they obviously have no jurisdiction over them.

Mr. President, I am sure the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], who is now presiding over this body, is thoroughly conversant with the fact that his State is one of but two in the Nation that make provision for the maintaining of a surplus or premium reserves by Lloyd's. I am sure he saw to it that the people of his Commonwealth were protected when it came to fortifying themselves against attacks of alien origin. I therefore congratulate the State of Kentucky. I mention the junior Senator from Kentucky in reference to Kentucky's protection, recalling that the Senator served as Governor of the State of Kentucky and was no doubt familiar with the requirements made with respect to insurance companies engaged in business of that sort in his Commonwealth.

Fourth. Each company, as a condition precedent to doing business in a State or with the United States Government, must be licensed or admitted to do business.

Fifth. Many States, as a condition precedent to the issuance of a license, require a substantial deposit consisting of securities, or the giving of qualifying bonds in large penalties, or both. Only in the State of Illinois do Lloyd's maintain a cash deposit.

Sixth. Some States require that admitted companies must reinsure only in other admitted companies. No State has jurisdiction over the reinsuring of risks primarily assumed by Lloyd's.

Seventh. Companies admitted to do business in the several States must appoint attorneys within the State upon whom legal process may be served.

Eighth. Annual financial statements must be filed on forms prescribed by the various States and by the Treasury Department of the United States, and are subject to audit by the supervising authority. Lloyd's do not file such financial statements except in Illinois and Kentucky, and in those States only in a limited form.

Ninth. Each company licensed in the several States is subject to visitation and examination at its own expense by the insurance department of the State where organized and of each State in which licensed.

Tenth. An admitted company must appoint agents who are required to be licensed, and in many of the States a company cannot execute a policy unless executed through a resident licensed agent who shall receive full commissions.

Eleventh. Each company must pay, in accordance with the laws of each State where it does business, taxes on premiums, taxes on capital assets, franchise taxes, State and municipal license fees, and taxes on agent's fees, and all other forms of taxes.

Twelfth. According to the laws of a number of States, and the regulations of the United States Treasury Department, a licensed or admitted company may not expose itself on any single risk in excess of 10 percent of its capital and surplus. Lloyd's do not have to comply with this restriction because the various States, except Illinois and Kentucky, and the Federal Government, have no control over the operations of the underwriting groups.

The situation as to Lloyd's is as follows:

First. London Lloyd's do not have any capital or surplus.

Second. London Lloyd's do not have any statutory deposit in the United States, except in Illinois where the deposit there is for the sole protection of Illinois policyholders, and is not subject to any of the laws and regulations of other States or the Federal Government.

Third. London Lloyd's do not, except in Illinois and Kentucky, pay any State taxes of any nature.

Fourth. The 3-percent stamp tax, which is imposed by the revenue law of 1924, applies only to alien companies and associations which do not issue their policies through a licensed agent or officer resident in any State or district of the United States in which it is authorized to do business. Therefore if Lloyd's issues a policy covering a risk in Illinois or Kentucky the 3-percent stamp tax is not required to be paid. If Lloyd's underwriters issue in Illinois or Kentucky a policy covering a risk in another State, the 3-percent tax is not required to be paid.

Thirty-seven capital-stock insurance companies doing a casualty and surety business in 1939 have more than $300,000,000 invested in Government, State, and municipal bonds and in bonds of industrial corporations of the United States.

Thirty-five companies had in their employ during 1939 over 35,000 employees and paid in salaries over $50,000,000.

Just one of these companies, in 1939, paid in taxes and license fees in the various States 64 percent of its total capitalization, amounting to $1,960,000.

Lloyd's, for all practical purposes, is not licensed to do business in the United States nor, generally speaking, in any State in the United States, except under a sort of quasi arrangement which has been made in Illinois and Kentucky. Notwithstanding this, however, Lloyd's do a tremendous amount of business in the United States, usually through brokers in New York. It is estimated that the premiums they take out of the United States and send to London are between $750,000,000 and $1,000,000,000 annually.

On this they pay no taxes of any kind whatever, although from time to time various devices have been attempted by both Federal and State Governments to try to make them pay their share of the taxes. By reason of this method of doing business they escape a tax burden equivalent to about 22½ percent of the premium dollar which is imposed upon American and properly licensed foreign companies complying with various American State and Federal laws.

Lloyd's should not be confused with capital-stock British companies regularly entered into the United States and fully complying with all laws of the United States. These companies are as bitter against Lloyd's competition here as are the American companies.

One wonders why Lloyd's continues to get away with it. The answer is very simple, though, and that is they have tremendous financial resources and have always paid their losses. It is exactly the same thing, for instance, as if in Great Britain a tax were placed on the New York brokers upon any trading on the New York Stock Exchange. Yet the English people might continue to trade by wire, cable, telephone, and so forth, and the stock-exchange members in New York would simply laugh and say, "Come and collect your tax."

The injustice to the insurance companies, both British and American, complying with State and Federal taxes and the numerous agents in every State in the Union, is, of course, apparent and has been recognized for a long time. This wrong should, therefore, be righted, especially insofar as people participating in Government contracts for war or Navy or Federal works and where contractors have to furnish insurance against fire, employer's liability, or surety bonds, or in any way are operating on funds derived directly or indirectly from Government appropriations which, in turn, are taken from the taxpayers, which include insurance companies. The insurance companies at least should have a chance to get a crack at the business without having a penalty of 22½ percent imposed against them.

Right now some of the biggest Army contracts recently let—one for approximately $30,000,000 in Panama in the last 60 days, which I mentioned—are cases in point. A contractor has placed his employer's liability insurance with London Lloyd's when there are countless properly licensed American and foreign insurance companies anxious and willing to get it, but operating at 22½ percent disadvantage by reason of honestly and truly paying their taxes to the United States Government and the respective States.

This matter should be investigated. This business should go to American insurance agents and brokers who represent American insurance companies and duly licensed foreign companies authorized to do business in this country. Our Government in these instances should favor American insurance companies—its war contractors should be prohibited from favoring foreign companies such as Lloyd's. The American dollars should go to American business.

In a word, Mr. President, I am greatly interested in aiding Americans before I aid foreigners. We are spending $18,000,000,000 for a general American defense program. The more of that $18,000,000,000 we can keep in this country the better for the American people who have to foot the bill and the better for the Government itself. I protest against big contractors in this country, who are receiving millions upon millions of dollars in business, giving their insurance business to alien insurance companies. I say they should endeavor to deal with American citizens, since they are being paid with American dollars and being favored by the American Government. That being the case, those contractors who have been favored by the American Government in the national-defense program should certainly give their insurance business to American insurance companies, in order that those companies and their duly qualified representatives may receive the American dollars which are furnished by the American Government.

So much for that subject, Mr. President.

Mr. President, at the present time we are all vitally interested in what is taking place to the south of the Rio Grande; and I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate our very able Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, for the fine work he has done at Habana during the past 10 days. I was happy, together with all my colleagues, to learn that the republics to the south of us are in thorough accord that this hemisphere should be protected against armed invasion by the totalitarian powers abroad, and that we should work together to combat any "fifth column" or Trojan horse movements which may be started against us with a view to making penetration of any part of the Western Hemisphere.

In that connection, I bring to the attention of the Senate the first part of an editorial appearing today in the columns of the Washington Daily News, entitled "Well Done, Mr. Hull."

I join with the editors of the Washington Daily News in congratulating Mr. Hull upon the very excellent work he has done at Habana. The latter part of the editorial relates to the future of the South American republics.

Another editorial which I ask to have printed in that connection is from a newspaper the name of which I do not recall. The editorial is entitled "More Bootstrap Stuff."

I ask that it be followed by a very able article from the pen of Mr. John T. Flynn, under the heading "Plain economics," dated New York, July 25; also, an article by Mr. Raymond Clapper, under the heading "Continental Bloc." The articles to which I refer deal with the subject of financing the purchase of the surplus products of the Latin American countries, a subject which I think this body will no doubt approach at this session of Congress. I ask that the articles to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD for the reason that the subject will have the attention of Members of this body at some future date.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News]

WELL DONE, MR. HULL

In these times when good news is as scarce as butter in Germany, the week-end dispatches from Habana are a tonic.

The program of Secretary Hull, for Pan American cooperation to forestall a Nazi foot-in-the-door in this hemisphere by taking over certain territories if necessary, on a temporary basis, appears to have prevailed.

Fears that Argentina would cleave to her classic role as an obstructor of policies conceived in Washington were dissipated when the chief Argentinean delegate, Dr. Leopoldo Melo, announced that "American solidarity has triumphed."

While the formal Habana agreement remains to be completed, apparently it will deal not only with the problem of jointly administering the New World colonies of German-conquered nations, but also, and properly, with restraining the abuse of diplomatic privileges by Nazi propagandists and Trojan horsemen.

There is also to be an economic agreement, only vaguely outlined so far, but which appears to imply the use of large sums of this country's money to stabilize South American commodity prices, in the hope of preventing the sort of price panic that might drive Latin America into economic bondage to Hitler.

Until the exact nature of the latter project is disclosed, comment would be premature. But in the matter of enlisting cooperation against any Nazi move to occupy Dutch or French outposts in the Caribbean—possessions of enormous strategic value—Secretary Hull has been brilliantly successful.

Common sense has dictated such an arrangement, but the personal respect and friendship which Mr. Hull has achieved among the statesmen to the south undoubtedly made its accomplishment easier.

MORE BOOT STRAP STUFF

We don't like the source but can't challenge the sense of the argument from Reichsbank Minister Funk on the central phase of that cartel scheme.

Funk points to a fatal weakness in our trade position when he says that no country can by artificial device long continue to be both the world's greatest creditor and the world's greatest export nation. Which is just another way of restating an economic truism—that trade is a two-way street.

It was on that same truth that Secretary Hull based his efforts for reciprocal commerce. The war disrupted everything—temporarily, as war will—but war cannot destroy forever a law that is in its essence immutable.

It was through the failure to recognize that truth that we got into trouble for which we have paid and paid and paid. Before 1914 the United States was a debtor nation. The first World War turned her into a creditor nation. With the Fordney-McCumber tariff, and later with the Smoot-Hawley tariff, she sought to eat her cake and have it. Later, Hull's program turned back to the realities.

Now the cartel scheme is trotted out. It is merely another misconceived effort, as were the two tariffs mentioned, to accomplish the impossible; a dream for making us simultaneously the world's greatest creditor and the world's greatest export nation.

It is the brain child of a group of amateur diplomats and Boy Scout economists who think they can, through the use of our impounded gold, amend both the force of trade gravitation and the law of supply and demand.

It must be tried, say these tyros, as is their custom, at "whatever cost" and "regardless of commercial customs." The motto is, "We have no power but money." They are of the spending school.

They would buy up the surpluses of South America, pile them on the surpluses which already weigh us down, and create the greatest monopoly in history—over which their friend Thurman Arnold, by the way, would have no control.

Then they would make the buyer be good while he paid through the nose.

This is aimed at the totalitarian system.

Granting the desirability of slapping Hitler down in his postwar ambition to dominate Western Hemisphere trade, this isn't the way to do it.

Instead of strengthening ourselves we would bankrupt ourselves. And then we couldn't even say, "We have no power but money."

PLAIN ECONOMICS

(By John T. Flynn)

NEW YORK, July 25.—Before it will be possible for Congress to act intelligently on the President's plan for a half-billion-dollar credit for South America, Congress will have to know the reason back of the plan.

Originally the President played with the idea for a cartel or international arrangement between this country and South America to make a great pool of that country's unsalable products.

The cost of such a pool no man knows. Estimates run from half a billion to two billion dollars. Perhaps somewhere around a billion and a half might be a safe estimate. It is an immense sum of money, and we would have to supply it. We might well lose it all, and on top of the other huge sums for national defense Congress can hardly be blamed for asking a moment for thought.

Now, the President begins his program in this direction by asking Congress to provide half a billion dollars for the Export-Import Bank to finance South American surpluses. How the bank would proceed, the President does not say. Whether it would make individual loans to separate countries, or form a cartel made up of all countries, is not disclosed.

But before Congress can talk of methods it has to know the purpose of the plan. Ostensibly the purpose is to help South American countries which cannot sell their products because of the war. But is that the real purpose? There is grave cause to believe that it is not.

It happens that South American countries produce commodities and crops which we also produce. We are not a good market for their wares. It also happens that England and France have access to the kind of goods produced in South America within their own empires. It happens—and no one arranged this—that the countries which have greatest need of South America's products are Germany, Italy, and Japan.

They do not produce enough wheat, beef, copper, silver, oil, and other commodities for themselves. They have to buy them somewhere. South America is such a market; also, South America has to sell to countries that want their goods and has to buy from such countries as a matter of necessity. There is every reason why trade between South America and Germany, Italy, and Japan should and must continue. Otherwise South America is sunk.

Now, England is deeply interested in preventing Germany and Italy from getting supplies from anywhere, including South America, and our Government has been doing everything in its power to aid England in this. The best way to help England is to put an end to South American trade with Italy and Germany. The quickest way to ruin South America is to do that very thing.

Now, what are we up to? Is it to help England and ruin South America, or is it to help South America? Incidentally we can do a nice job in the direction of ruining ourselves if we undertake to pay the bills involved in the ruin of South America.

CONTINENTAL BLOC

(By Raymond Clapper)

Out of the widely ramified activity concerning Western Hemisphere defense—military, economic, and political—may be evolving a new kind of international organization. The goal apparently is a regional association which would be less binding than a federation but which would have more force and cohesion behind it than the League of Nations.

Germany, Russia, and Japan are establishing regional organizations by conquest or pressure. The United States is undertaking to organize the Western Hemisphere on a quid pro quo basis. We are offering military and economic support to Latin American nations in return for their political cooperation.

As to military support, we are offering the most elaborate defense program in our peacetime history. We are offering our first peacetime conscription proposal. It is no secret to Latin American republics that we are rushing preparations in order to have troops available at the earliest possible moment for expeditionary service wherever it might be needed in the Western Hemisphere. The Navy is refitting some destroyers for fast emergency transport service. It has just purchased two steamships from South American runs. Some of our warships are now in South American ports for the purpose of steadying regimes which might otherwise be in danger of overthrow of internal elements sympathetic to Fascist countries.

As to economic support, President Roosevelt has asked Congress to set aside $500,000,000 in order to give the Export-Import Bank a free hand in making loans to South American countries. Secretary Hull at the Habana Conference has indicated the willingness of the United States to assist in creating facilities for the handling of surpluses which are breaking the backs of several South American countries. In this the United States would carry the burden of financing.

In return for these economic and political services, the United States seeks the political cooperation of Latin American countries in stabilizing and protecting the whole Western Hemisphere from encroachment. The United States asks the other American countries to join in creating a collective trusteeship to maintain the integrity of the Monroe Doctrine. The chief purpose of this proposal is to provide a joint inter-American organization which could take over, at least temporarily, Western Hemisphere possessions of European powers in cases where the owners had lost control.

This refers principally to possessions of Great Britain, France, and the Netherlands. Transfer of such possessions to control of another non-American power is deemed dangerous to the integrity of the Western Hemisphere. Western countries would create a governing authority to administer such possessions in the interest of all of the Americas.

The plain purpose of all this is principally to keep Hitler out of the Western Hemisphere and to prevent his exercise of remote control on this side of the Atlantic.

As the United States is the strongest and richest of the Western Hemisphere nations, we have the largest interest in preserving the Monroe Doctrine. The chief burden of economic and military assistance will fall upon this country. Some of the Latin American countries have been indifferent, and in some instances hostile, to the Monroe Doctrine. They have direct economic interests in European markets and at the same time have encountered difficulty in marketing their products in the United States.

Their cooperation in political protection for the Western Hemisphere is not gained easily. Only the strong inducements of adequate military and economic assistance are likely to bring it about. That is the crux of our Western Hemisphere problem. Without the political cooperation of the South American Continent or of a substantial portion of it our military and economic aid becomes largely futile.

If this cooperation is received then there are the beginnings of a regional association of western nations which may provide the mechanism by which free and independent countries can pool themselves into the kind of continental bloc which seems esssential to survival in these times. This is indeed a lonely world for the nation which tries to stand alone.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of James W. Blair, to be postmaster at Clayton, Okla., in place of J. W. Blair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nomination on the calendar.

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dr. Clarence Poe to be a member of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 30, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate July 29, 1940

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Dr. Clarence Poe to be a member of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 29, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who in the long ago went before Thy people in a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night to lead them in safety, grant that we also in our pilgrimage may be confident that Thou wilt guide and provide.

May the blessing of God's guiding wisdom rest in an abundant measure upon our President, our Speaker, and all the Members of Congress. Make us one with Thee in the thoughts of our minds, the desires of our hearts, and the endeavors of our lives. May we acquit ourselves like men, rigidly honest, transparently pure, and joyously steadfast in the midst of life's struggles because of an unswerving faith in the Lord God omnipotent.

God of all grace, in these days when men and nations are in the deep darkness of a world Gethsemane and our hearts are saddened by their pleading cries for help, wilt Thou show us how we may be of the largest possible service in meeting the needs of suffering humanity.

Hear us in the name of the Christ who was moved with compassion and who went about doing good. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, July 25, 1940, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therewith a resolution adopted by the Democratic Central Committee of the District of Columbia in connection with suffrage.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on two subjects: To include an article by Miss Dorothy Thompson and in a second extension an article by Mr. Willis Overholser.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on two separate subjects: To include a resolution passed by the Queensboro Civic Club of Shreveport, La., on the subject of national defense, and to include in another extension a short editorial from the Shreveport Journal of July 20 last.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial from the Connellsville Digest, Connellsville, Pa., on the Youghiogheny watershed project.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein an article written by my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make two unanimous-consent requests—to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address, Compulsory Military Training—For What? delivered by me over the red network of the National Broadcasting Co., July 11, 1940, and to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have been receiving many hundreds of letters from all parts of the United States in response to this radio address. The sentiment expressed in them shows that 95 percent of the writers are definitely opposed to compulsory military training.

Many of the writers express the fear that this would be the beginning of the militarism that has kept the Old World in an almost perpetual state of war and despotism.

Many indicate their belief that this proposal for compulsory military training is merely a prelude to our entrance into the war.

Not a few of the writers remind us of the promises of the politicians in 1916 that they would keep us out of war.

I have just returned from my congressional district, where I made a pretty thorough canvass with respect to this bill. I am certain the people there are overwhelmingly opposed to it.

I am firmly convinced the needed number of men can be had by voluntary enlistment. If the young men of the Nation today were assured that this proposed military scheme is really and only for defense, there would be a great many more volunteers. But they are not sure of this. They remember 1916 and 1917. That experience is deeply embedded in their minds.

Furthermore, many young men are today volunteering for service and are rejected because of red tape and arbitrary discrimination. In my opinion what is needed most today to strengthen our defense is pilots to man our war planes. A ruling of the War Department provides that only men with 2 years of college education may be accepted for this service. This I believe is wrong. There are many young men in this country who have not had 2 years of college training but would make the best of pilots. It seems to me this is too obvious to require argument. These men should be given every encouragement and opportunity to demonstrate their fitness and to serve their country.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the coauthor of the Burke-Wadsworth bill, attempts to make much of section 15 in the bill. It reads in part as follows:

> All the provisions of this act shall become inoperative on and after May 15, 1945, unless continued in effect by Congress.

He seeks support for this measure on the ground that it contains this provision—that it is not a permanent law. From this argument we certainly cannot help but infer that he wishes to convey the idea that the Burke-Wadsworth bill is merely an emergency measure and does not attempt to establish the principle of compulsory military training as a permanent American institution. But it so happens that the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] introduced a bill for compulsory military training back in the Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, when assuredly no plea for any such program could have been made on the basis of any possible emergency. The United States had then joined the movement which was in the opposite direction—disarmament. That was in the period when the sentiment against militarism was so strong we were actually engaged in sinking our own battleships. Certainly the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] must have been for permanent compulsory military service in peacetime as a permanent institution when he introduced his original bill.

How anyone can, at this time, with the experience of the last 10 years of so-called emergency legislation, seriously propose this military program and attempt to make the people believe it is only to meet an emergency that will be abandoned as soon as the emergency is over, is not easy to answer. Most of the important measures passed in the last 10 years were supposed to be for emergency purposes only. It was expected they would be repealed as soon as the emergency was over.

One of the stock arguments for these emergency measures always was that Congress could abolish them at any time, but we know how these emergency laws have become permanent laws; that it has become a fixed policy to retain them as permanent laws. Many of these laws were written so as to expire after a certain number of years unless reenacted by Congress. Everyone here in Congress knows how difficult and even impossible it is now to repeal these measures. Once enacted, they produce certain conditions which supply the politicians with plenty of reasons for continuing them.

So it would be with this program of compulsory military training.

Should it be set up it would bring about such enormous and far-reaching changes in our whole social, economic, and political life as to make it next to impossible to abandon it. The political powers would then be so completely entrenched that they could perpetuate it even though the vast majority of the people might wish it discontinued.

The text of the address of Hon. FREDERICK C. SMITH, Republican, of Ohio, Eighth District, over the red network of the National Broadcasting Co., Thursday, July 11, 1940, follows:

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING—FOR WHAT?

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, first I want to thank the National Broadcasting Co. for granting me this time.

I wish to consider with you, my fellow Americans, the proposal of universal, compulsory military service and a large standing army in time of peace, which is being advanced by the present administration and other interested groups. If this is adopted the American people will be forced to give up one of their most cherished traditions and yield to an alien system of military regimentation. The idea is entirely foreign to the American way of life and opposed to those fundamental concepts of liberty and the abhorrence of militarism which the American people have maintained through several hundred years.

Unfortunately, the national state of mind is at present so stirred up, excited, and confused that it is difficult to consider this question calmly and without prejudice. We have been bombarded so much with scare headlines, war propaganda, and frenzied appeals to our emotions, that we are today so alarmed and agitated as to be near hysteria. Our highest Government officials are primarily responsible for this agitation.

It is a grave error, in a time like the present, for those in high authority to add panic and confusion to the apprehension already existing. If our defenses have been neglected, we shall need clear and calm judgment to decide what must be done.

The question of universal compulsory military training is so important, so far reaching in its effect on the lives of all our people, and the future of our Nation that we must make the greatest effort to consider it fairly and honestly and to understand its various aspects in relation to our American institutions.

First we should ask, "Universal compulsory military service—for what?" Wherefore are all our men, and possibly all our women, to be forced into uniforms and training camps and our Nation placed permanently under the European system of military domination?

Ostensibly for defense, of course. But let us first inquire whether such a course is necessary to obtain that objective, if, in fact, it will achieve that objective, and whether or not there may be other reasons than defense for urging the acceptance of this proposal—at this time.

It is hardly necessary to remind you of the powerful forces in our country which are striving to force us into the European war. Would not the adoption of this program at this time serve the warmongers to maneuver us closer to that holocaust? It is not a coincidence that those who advocate our entrance into the war are largely the same group who advocate universal compulsory military service.

The rash statements and actions of Mr. Roosevelt and other officials should convince us that we would have been catapulted into the war long ago if we had had the military program they are now trying to force upon the Nation. With a large standing army the necessary incident, or excuse, to declare war would likely have been found.

Another important motive back of this scheme is the unemployment situation. For 7 years the present administration has been promising to put the unemployed back to work. Today, with an election in the offing, the failure to make this promise good is entirely too conspicuous. Hitler and Mussolini promised to put their unemployed back to work. They did—in army and labor camps—and now the sequel—war!

Is America now to import the system of Hitler and Mussolini? Is this to be the fate of the C. C. C. boys, the N. Y. A. boys and girls, W. P. A. workers, and the millions of idle young folks who today walk the streets looking into a bleak and hopeless future? Are these now to be herded into compulsory labor armies and military camps? Americans, I ask you, is this our solution?

There is still another condition that is causing many persons to consider compulsory military service as a remedy. It is at last beginning to dawn upon our Nation that communism is becoming a real threat to our economy and Government. We are finally beginning to understand that our greatest danger is not from the Communist Party and its affiliates, or from Russia or other foreign places, but from the development of Communistic schemes and plans within our own Government and institutions.

Our Government is now literally saturated with people who strive for complete political regimentation of labor, agriculture, and industry, for the complete overthrow of private property rights and its replacement by political control and ownership of all the means of production; in short, for everything Stalin practices in the name of communism.

Strange to say, there are those who urge this plan on the ground that it would help to protect us against the communism that has already developed within our Government. This I believe is a most fallacious and dangerous idea.

There is no reason to believe that by further regimenting our people we could hope to overcome the bureaucratic regimentation and control that has been built up in our Government. In fact, it will strengthen it, as this military regimentation if adopted now, will be in the control of these selfsame forces.

There is but one way to combat the communism within our Government. That is for the free people of this Nation to demand the destruction of the giant bureaucracy that has fastened itself upon us; free labor, agriculture, and industry from the political shackles that are destroying them.

I challenge anyone to cite a single instance where communism was ever checked in the slightest by universal compulsory military service and a large standing army in peacetime.

Did it protect France against the spread and growth of communism? It certainly did not save her democracy. At the same time that she was building the finest army in the world she drifted strongly into communism.

Look at Latin America. It teems with communism. Nearly all of these countries have compulsory military service. Certainly there is no evidence anywhere in that land that this "ism" has been checked by it. Mexico is a good example. She has the military scheme; nevertheless she goes more and more communistic. Stalin uses compulsory military service to destroy democracy.

Indeed, the world has long recognized the close relationship between militarism and communism.

There are also some among us who believe this plan might act as a means to lessen strikes and labor troubles. All I can say on this point is, Heaven forbid that we shall ever resort to any measure of this kind for such a purpose.

Naturally, whatever means we shall finally decide may be necessary for our national defense, must be predicated largely upon our foreign policy. Is this Nation now to be committed to the old system of militarism and imperialism in order to force our South American neighbors to accept our protection?

It is well known that many of the countries in Latin America do not have a very friendly feeling toward the United States; that they fear our power and imperialism more than they fear Europe. The peoples in these Latin countries have little in common with our people; their language, their culture is European.

Europe has been the big purchaser of South American agricultural products, which we naturally are unable to buy since we already have a surplus. Their governments, while called republican, are actually more dictator than otherwise, and fascism and communism are strongly entrenched in most of them. Germany has been able, with her barter system and other devices, to obtain a large share of South American trade.

Can anyone foretell what dangers or complications may result if the United States attempts to force her will on these people?

Sooner or later America must realize that no system of defense will be adequate, if she continues the suicidal policy of meddling in other people's affairs throughout the world. Such a policy, if continued, will doubtless call for universal compulsory military training and all that goes with imperialism.

We should be reminded that a big standing army and military force has always been a temptation to rulers and the heads of governments to use it to increase their own power and to make themselves appear great. Seldom have they failed to use it for this purpose.

Last but not least, what about our first line of defense, which now is so very sick? I refer to the state of our national finances. A military arm can never be any stronger than the finances of a nation.

The sinews of war, the kind and quantity of all supplies to the army in the field depend on the state of health of the national finances. Only a solvent treasury can possibly keep an army supplied with the right kind of things and enough of them.

What good can it do us if we have the biggest fleet and army in the world but cannot manage the means to support them?

The cost in dollars and the loss in productive energy, if universal compulsory military service and large standing army in peacetime were established, would be appalling. Instead of strengthening our defenses it would only weaken them.

It is the nature of this military program to create a caste system, where the more cunning and the richer are on top giving orders, while the less artful and poorer are kept at the bottom doing the fighting.

The Burke-Wadsworth bill that proposes this plan starts out by doing this. It provides for exempting "men whose employment in industry, agriculture, or other occupations of employment or whose work in engineering, chemistry, physics, medicine, or dentistry are found to be necessary to the maintenance of the national health, safety, or interest."

Would this not exempt the richer groups, those who have been more fortunate in having enough money to educate and train themselves in the skilled trades and higher vocations? Oh, what an opportunity this would provide for political "pull" and favoritism.

Among other officials of the Government, Congressmen, too, are exempted. Ditch diggers are not. This proves to me there is something wrong with this proposal. I have always thought ditch diggers do a pretty good job draining our fields. I am not so sure we Congressmen do as well in discharging our duties.

We dare not let this pass. I wish to emphasize that it would be especially dangerous under the present ominous conditions.

First. It would be a most effectual means to push us all the way into the war.

Second. It would be adopting Hitler's plan for ending unemployment.

Third. It would put the young manhood and womanhood of our country under the military control of the communistic forces that now dominate our Government.

Fourth. It would further weaken our first line of defense by wrecking still more our finances.

Fifth. It would create a caste system, where political corruption and favoritism would be rampant, where the more cunning and well to do would give orders and the poor would do the fighting

Sixth. It would, in my opinion, be the final factor now needed to complete the dictatorship.

There is no more need now for this program than there ever was. What is needed in America today is more honest-to-God statesmanship and less politics. When we have this we shall have no trouble providing adequate national defense, without resorting to the European system of universal compulsory military service and huge standing armies in peacetime.

I thank you.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial from the Coshocton Tribune of July 17.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SITKA, ALASKA—INCREASE IN DEBT LIMIT

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9571) to authorize the incorporated town of Sitka, Alaska, to purchase and enlarge certain public utilities and for such purpose to issue bonds in the sum of $200,000 in excess of present statutory debt limit.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the Delegate from Alaska kindly explain the bill?

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, as indicated in the title of the bill, this is a bill to authorize the incorporated town of Sitka, Alaska, to issue bonds in the sum of $200,000 above the present authority in order to purchase and expand an electric-current plant and a water system for the benefit of the people of the town and for the benefit of the adjoining naval air base. May I say here that I have in my hand a copy of a letter from Louis Compton, Acting Secretary of the Navy, asking for the prompt consideration of the bill, which is one of the reasons I am bringing it up at this time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It has the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. DIMOND. Yes; it has the unanimous approving report of the committee. The facts are that the present owner of the existing plant is quite an elderly gentleman and he wishes to sell out his plant because he wants to liquidate some of his property. It is necessary that the plant be expanded in order to take care of the wants of the growing city of Sitka and to take care of the requirements of the naval air base nearby. The common council of the town has unanimously requested the passage of this legislation and if the price offered is reasonable and satisfactory the town wishes to take over the property, expand and enlarge it so as to take care of the wants of the town and the requirements of the naval base. Judging by our experience with similar municipal enterprises in Alaska, there is every reason to assume that this plan will work out successfully, as was the case with Ketchikan and Petersburg and Wrangell, Alaska.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The people are in favor of this?

Mr. DIMOND. Yes. Before this can be made effective the plan as worked out in detail must be approved by a 55-percent favorable vote of the taxpayers of the town.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman give me the provisions of the bill with reference to the air field?

Mr. DIMOND. There is nothing in the bill with respect to the Air Corps or the air base.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman just mentioned something about an air base.

Mr. DIMOND. I would like to read the letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CHURCH. Give me the provisions of the bill in reference to the air field or the air base.

Mr. DIMOND. There is nothing in the bill in reference to the air field or the air base. All the bill provides for is the purchase, expansion, and enlargement of the electric-light system and the water system by the town. There is an understanding between the town and the commandant or the officials of the air base that current and water will be furnished the air base if and when desired, but there is nothing in this bill about that.

Mr. CHURCH. This past week we had a hearing in the House Naval Affairs Committee in which hearing there was omitted any reference to the Sitka air base; therefore, has the gentleman anything in this bill about the policy of establishing an air base at Sitka?

Mr. DIMOND. No; there is nothing in this bill that refers to the air base at Sitka at all.

The present population of the town of Sitka is approximately 2,000, and it is still growing. The population of the town has almost doubled in the last 10 years. Water for domestic use, as well as electric current, is furnished the town at the present time by the Sitka Wharf & Power Co., Inc., a corporation. But the plants are now too small to supply the wants of the town and the nearby Navy air base, which is under construction. The present owner of the electric light and power and water plants, as I said a moment ago, desires to sell. And the people of the town wish to purchase and to enlarge and expand the plants so as to take care of present and reasonable future requirements. No price for the property has yet been agreed upon, and none can be agreed upon until this legislation is enacted. The town officials believe that if an appraisal of the plants is made it will be relatively easy to agree upon the purchase price of the property. When that has been done the whole proposition will be submitted to the taxpayers of the town and if they approve it by a 55-percent vote then the bonds may be issued, the property purchased, and the plants enlarged and expanded, all as authorized in the bill.

It is necessary to take prompt action, because the present owner is determined to sell the property anyhow, and if the city does not purchase it the plants will be sold to somebody else and thus the opportunity of the town of Sitka to own and operate its own electric-current and water systems will probably be forever lost. Moreover, the work to be done in the enlargement and expansion of the plants should be commenced at the earliest possible date, so as to be completed before winter. While the climate of Sitka is mild and such work can be prosecuted during the winter season, it is undoubtedly more economical to do the work during the summer and fall rather than during the winter. This proposition is a completely self-liquidating one and there seems no doubt that enough income will be derived from the operation of the plants to be the principal and the interest on the bonds when due.

The following is a letter dated July 12, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the Territories by Hon. Lewis Compton, Acting Secretary of the Navy, recommending the enactment of the bill:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 12, 1940.

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON THE TERRITORIES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Navy Department notes that the bill H. R. 9571, "To authorize the incorporated town of Sitka, Alaska, to purchase and enlarge certain public utilities, and for such purpose to issue bonds in the sum of $200,000 in excess of present statutory debt limit," has been referred to the committee of which you are chairman.

The purpose of the bill is as stated in its title.

The prompt passage of the bill (H. R. 9571) authorizing a bond election to permit the city of Sitka, Alaska, to acquire utilities, is of importance to the Navy Department. The proposed improvements to the water system are of vital concern to the naval air station, Sitka, Alaska, as this system is the only available source of supply for this station.

This station is being rapidly enlarged under the present contract for Alaskan naval air stations and the proposed improvements are highly desirable during, as well as after, the construction period. The bill involves no additional expenditures chargeable to naval appropriations.

The Navy Department recommends the enactment of the bill H. R. 9571.

The Navy Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there would be no objection to the submission of this report.

Sincerely yours,

LEWIS COMPTON, Acting.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Sitka, in the Territory of Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to purchase and acquire from Sitka Wharf & Power Co., Inc., a corporation organized and existing under laws of the Territory of Alaska, all or any part of the public utilities owned by said corporation and including electric current, light, power, and water utilities, plants and systems, and all or any part of the property, both real and personal, rights, claims, interests, and equities connected therewith, and to reconstruct, extend, and improve the same; and for such purposes to issue bonds in any amount not exceeding $200,000, the same to be in excess of the present statutory debt limit of said town as provided by the act entitled "An act to authorize municipal corporations in the Territory of Alaska to incur bonded indebtedness, and for other purposes," approved May 28, 1936 (49 Stat. 1388); and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent or preclude the said town from incurring other indebtedness up to but not beyond the limits prescribed by the said act of May 28, 1936, without regard to the bonded indebtedness herein authorized.

SEC. 2. Before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said town of Sitka, Alaska, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued in the amount above specified for the purpose hereinbefore set forth shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Sitka, Alaska, whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said town for purposes of municipal taxation. The form of the ballot shall be such that the electors may vote for or against the issuance of bonds for the purposes herein specified up to the amount herein authorized. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given to the public by posting notices of same in three conspicuous places within the corporate limits of the town of Sitka, Alaska, one of which shall be at the front door of the United States post office at Sitka, Alaska. The election notice shall specifically state the amount of bonds proposed to be issued for the purposes herein specified. The registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality; and such bonds shall be issued for the purposes herein authorized only upon condition that not less than 55 percent of the votes cast at such election in said municipality shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds for such purpose.

SEC. 3. The bonds herein authorized shall be coupon in form and shall mature in not to exceed 30 years from the date thereof. Such bonds may bear such date or dates, may be in such denomination or denominations, may mature in such amounts and at such time or times, not exceeding 30 years from the date thereof, may be payable in such medium of payment and at such place or places, may be sold at either public or private sale, may be nonredeemable or redeemable (either with or without premium), and may carry such registration privileges as to either principal and interest, or principal only, as shall be prescribed by the common council of said town of Sitka. The bonds shall bear the signatures of the mayor and of the clerk of the town of Sitka, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said municipality. The coupons to be annexed to such bonds shall bear the facsimile signatures of the mayor and of the clerk of said municipality. In case any of the officers whose signatures or countersignatures appear on the bonds shall cease to be such officers before delivery of such bonds, said signatures or countersignatures, whether manual or facsimile, shall nevertheless be valid and sufficient for all purposes, the same as if said officers had remained in office until such delivery. Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the town of Sitka, not to exceed, however, 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and said bonds shall be sold at not less than the principal amount plus accrued interest.

SEC. 4. The bonds herein authorized to be issued shall be general obligations of the said town of Sitka, payable as to both interest and principal from ad valorem taxes which shall be levied upon all of the taxable property within the corporate limits of such municipality in an amount sufficient to pay the interest on and the principal of such bonds as and when the same become due and payable.

SEC. 5. No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose or purposes other than those specified in this act. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the common council of the town of Sitka shall direct; and the proceeds thereof shall be distributed only for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and direction of said common council from time to time as such proceeds may be required for said purposes.

SEC. 6. The said town of Sitka is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and acts amendatory thereof, and acts supplemental thereto, and revisions thereof, and the regulations made in pursuance thereof, and under any further acts of the Congress of the United States to encourage public works, for the relief of unemployment, or for any other public purpose for the sale of bonds issued in accordance with the provisions of this act, or for the acceptance of a grant of money to aid said municipality in financing any public works; or to enter into contracts with any persons or corporations, public or private, for the sale of such bonds; and such contracts may contain such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by and between the common council of said town of Sitka and the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof, or any such purchaser.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 16, strike out all of section 2 down to and including the word "specified", on line 8, page 3, and insert the following: "Before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said town of Sitka, Alaska, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued in any amount not exceeding $200,000 for the purposes hereinbefore set forth shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Sitka, Alaska, whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said town for purposes of municipal taxation. The form of the ballot shall be such that the electors may vote for or against the issuance of bonds in any amount not exceeding $200,000 for the purposes herein specified. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given to the public by posting notices of same in three conspicuous places within the corporate limits of the town of Sitka, Alaska, one of which shall be at the front door of the United States post office at Sitka, Alaska. The election notice shall state that bonds in any amount not exceeding $200,000 are proposed to be issued for the purposes herein specified."

Page 4, line 14, strike out the words "in such medium of payment and."

Page 5, line 7, strike out the figure "6" and insert the figure "5."

Page 5, line 23, after the word "purposes" insert "or any of them."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSPORTATION OF MAIL IN TERRITORY OF ALASKA

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9851) authorizing special arrangements for the transportation of mail within the Territory of Alaska.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the difference this will make in present conditions?

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, this bill is requested by the Post Office Department. It has been approved by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, or Civil Aeronautics Board, whatever its proper title may be at the present time, and it also has the approval of the Bureau of the Budget.

In order to point out just what the bill will do, it is necessary to explain the present conditions with respect to the transportation of mail in some parts of Alaska. In the interior of Alaska, which is largely devoid of anything in the way of roads, during the winter season all classes of mail are carried by air. All classes of mail are there carried by air, because that is the cheapest method of transportation.

When the Civil Aeronautics Act with respect to air mail was passed recently, one provision of that act said that the existing contracts for the carriage of all classes of mail in Alaska would be continued in effect until the Civil Aeronautics Authority should apply the act to Alaska by issuing certificates of public convenience and necessity and prescribing rates of compensation. Up to the present moment no such certificate has been issued for any of the routes carrying all classes of mail by air.

The Civil Aeronautics Authority now desires to put the act into effect in Alaska, and if that is done all existing mail contracts for carriage of mail by air will be canceled. Under the Civil Aeronautics Act it is possible to carry air mail only, as is said by the Post Office Department; therefore the Post Office Department would in that event be required to carry other classes of mail by dog teams or horses, at a much greater cost to the Government.

The purpose of this bill is to permit the continuance of the carriage of all classes of mail in Alaska by air under the Civil Aeronautics Act just the same as is the case at the present time, and it will put the full control in the hands of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. As I say, there is no objection to the bill that I know of. It is requested by the Post Office Department and approved by the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Bureau of the Budget, and it has received a favorable unanimous report from the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is not really necessary to have this legislation. This compels them to transport mail by air, whereas it would be optional otherwise?

Mr. DIMOND. No; it would not be optional. In the opinion of the Solicitor of the Post Office Department, as I understand, if the Civil Aeronautics Authority puts the Civil Aeronautics Act completely in effect in Alaska, it would no longer be possible to carry all classes of mail by air and it would be necessary to go back to the old and more costly method of carrying all except air mail on the ground by dog teams or on horseback or in some other kindred fashion.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This makes it necessary to carry all the mail by air?

Mr. DIMOND. It permits the carriage of all classes of mail by air, as at present.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is not mandatory?

Mr. DIMOND. It is not mandatory; no.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, referring to the bill just passed, not the present bill, is the power for the plant at Sitka steam or water power?

Mr. DIMOND. It is water power.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever required by the Postmaster General, any air carrier authorized by the Civil Aeronautics Authority under title IV of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 to engage in the transportation of mail in the Territory of Alaska shall, within the limits of such authorization, transport, in addition to mail on which postage shall have been paid at the rate provided by the Act of June 12, 1934 (48 Stat. 933), as amended, any other classes of mail bearing the appropriate postage for its respective class, and the Postmaster General is authorized to require such transportation. The rate of compensation to be paid such carrier for the transportation of all mail shall be fixed by the Civil Aeronautics Authority in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, approved June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 973). When in the opinion of the Postmaster General the needs of the Postal Service require the transportation of mail by aircraft in the Territory of Alaska, where no transportation of mail by aircraft has been authorized by the Civil Aeronautics Authority under title IV of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, the Postmaster General, notwithstanding any other provision of law, is authorized to contract for the carriage of all classes of mail bearing the appropriate postage for its respective class by aircraft after advertisement in accordance with law. The transportation of mail under contracts entered into under this act shall not be deemed to be "air transportation" as that term is defined in the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, and the rates of compensation for such transportation of mail shall not be fixed under that act. The Postmaster General shall transmit a copy of each contract made pursuant to this act to the Civil Aeronautics Authority at the time it is let. Any such contract shall be canceled upon the issuance by the Civil Aeronautics Authority of an authorization under said title IV of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 to any air carrier to engage in the transportation of mail by aircraft between any of the points named in such contract.

SEC. 2. Payment for services pursuant to contracts entered into by the Postmaster General under authority of this act shall be made from the appropriation for star route service in Alaska.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 17, after "not", insert "except for sections 401 (1) and 416 (b) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I have made on the two bills just passed, and to incorporate in my remarks on the bill, H. R. 9571, a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the Territories by Hon. Lewis Compton, Acting Secretary of the Navy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the completion of the consideration of the so-called T. V. A. bill, it may be in order to call up the bill H. R. 9931, an amendment to the Commodities Credit Corporation Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand a rule has been granted on this bill, but I do not believe there would be any objection to the rule. I believe it is agreeable to this side to take the bill up by unanimous consent, providing there may be an agreement as to time. I believe there are some, at least, on this side who will want to be heard on the bill. May I suggest to the gentleman that there will be no objection to taking the bill up by unanimous consent if we can agree to take it up in the Committee of the Whole House with probably 2 hours of general debate. I may say to the gentleman that if we find we are not going to use that much time, we will yield it back; but I believe 2 hours will be ample—an hour on each side.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is agreeable to me, Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is a very short bill and will not take very long to read.

Mr. RAYBURN. My attention has just been called to the fact that a similar Senate bill is here. If the Senate bill is identical with the House bill, is it agreeable to the gentleman from Michigan that we consider the Senate bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is agreeable. My memory is that the Senate bill is the same as the House bill, but I am not positive.

Mr. RAYBURN. Then I modify my request, Mr. Speaker, and ask that it be in order to consider the House bill; but that if the Senate bill is identical with the House bill, we may take up the Senate bill. I have no objection to agreeing to 2 hours of general debate, as far as I am concerned. The rule provides for 2 hours, anyway.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modified request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CHURCH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, in order to make an inquiry, I understand that the Navy authorization bill, H. R. 10200, will not come up for consideration today, although arrangements were made for it to come up today. However, as the gentleman knows, we will not want to lose any rights there because that bill should precede the appropriation bill, which I understand is slated for Wednesday.

Mr. RAYBURN. I was thinking that in all probability we might bring that bill up by unanimous consent on Wednesday. The gentleman from Georgia, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. VINSON], is not here today.

Mr. CHURCH. I understand that, but we would not want to lose the rights that he obtained for today.

Mr. RAYBURN. All rights are lost, and a new unanimous-consent request will have to be agreed to in the House.

Mr. CHURCH. The authorization bill ought to precede the appropriation bill on Wednesday.

Mr. RAYBURN. I believe that is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DAWSON SPRINGS CONSTRUCTION CO.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4037) to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Theodore R. Troendle, for the Dawson Springs Construction Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the character of the bill?

Mr. LEMKE. The purpose of the bill is to establish a claim by Mr. Troendle with respect to material furnished for the construction of three buildings for the Public Health Service during wartime. The Treasury Department allowed the bill in the sum of $7,166, but Mr. McCarl said the Treasury Department had no such authority. All that Mr. Troendle now asks, as I understand it, is to be allowed to go into court and prove his claim.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why has the matter been delayed so many years?

Mr. LEMKE. For the reason he had been trying to get it settled through different channels, and the old man did not know just how to proceed. As a matter of fact, I may say that, indirectly, he lost his home depending on this settlement.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much money is involved?

Mr. LEMKE. I would say the amount allowed by the Treasury Department is $7,166, which, in my opinion, is about all he will recover.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Has this bill been on the regular Private Calendar?

Mr. LEMKE. On the Consent Calendar.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What happened to it there?

Mr. LEMKE. It was objected to, and I may say that some of the objectors told me the reason they objected was because they had not had time to study the bill and learn what it is about.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Has the gentleman consulted the official objectors on this side?

Mr. LEMKE. I have consulted with some of them on both sides.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman give us his opinion that Mr. McCarl, when he was at the head of the Accounting Office, approved it from the standpoint of its own merit?

Mr. LEMKE. He simply objected to it on the ground that the Treasury Department had no authority to make any such settlement.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Has any Government official approved it on its merits?

Mr. LEMKE. I understand the Treasury Department, to the extent of $7,166.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the bill so drawn that it will only include a recovery amounting to the sum which the Treasury Department has approved or is the bill wide open, so that additional amounts can be claimed?

Mr. LEMKE. The bill is wide open to adjust the claim because lumber was furnished by the Government that was unfit for use, and he had to get it resawed and he also had to get a different kind of lumber. However, I am satisfied that he can prove that he is entitled to $7,166, if not more.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman have a limitation in the bill with respect to attorneys' fees?

Mr. LEMKE. There is no attorneys' fee limitation.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman offer an amendment to cover the usual attorneys' fee limitation.

Mr. LEMKE. Yes; I will be pleased to do that.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, from what committee does this bill come?

Mr. LEMKE. The Committee on Claims.

Mr. MICHENER. And the bill simply gives the court jurisdiction in the matter?

Mr. LEMKE. That is all. It gives the court jurisdiction regardless of the statute of limitations.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman is to place a limitation in the bill before it is passed with respect to attorneys' fees?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes; I will be pleased to offer an amendment providing for the usual 10-percent limitation on attorneys' fees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the statute of limitations, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Theodore R. Troendle, for the Dawson Springs Construction Co., of Dawson Springs, Ky., for losses or damages arising out of a contract dated February 2, 1920, for the construction of eight buildings for the United States Public Health Service Sanatorium at Dawson Springs, Ky.: Provided, however, That from any decision or judgment rendered in any suit presented under the authority of this act a writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States may be applied for by either party thereto, as is provided by law in other cases.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEMKE: At the end of line 7, on page 2, insert "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the defense program and reclamation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I next request unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an extension of remarks with one of the planks in the Democratic Party platform.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Next, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement made by me before the Senate Appropriations Committee on forest roads and trails and a copy of a provision in the bill which shows the action of the Senate in raising the amount.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two articles from Father Coughlin's Social Justice, July 29, 1940, issue.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota and Mr. FULMER asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a copy of certain resolutions adopted at a meeting at Kansas City on last Saturday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a short editorial from the Portland Journal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a set of resolutions adopted by the North Central Association of Commissioners, Secretaries, and Directors of Agriculture, held on July 19.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include two reports on the financial condition of the country, and certain statements in respect to outstanding corporations and companies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman be good enough to repeat his request? I understood him to mention certain reports.

Mr. SABATH. Financial reports as published by the various newspapers as to conditions of business and profits, excess profits that had been made in the first 6 months of this year by outstanding companies and corporations of this country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Do I understand that these statements indicate that our New Deal brethren have been permitting excess profits?

Mr. SABATH. These reports show the tremendous profits that business and manufacturers have been making during the last 6 months.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And that the New Deal has taken care of the big financial interests of the country?

Mr. SABATH. Not only the big ones, but the small ones as well. They are all making money.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, temporary leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WHITE of Idaho to attend to urgent business.

To Mr. MERRITT, indefinitely, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 30, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1853. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1941 in the amount of $1,050; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1854. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1941 amounting to $38,167,000; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JULY 30, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, July 29, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Who hast in all ages showed forth Thy power and mercy in the preservation of Thy people, and in the protection of all who put their sure trust in Thee: Grant that the people of this land, which Thou hast so blessed, may show forth their thanks and praise for all Thy mercies, by loving obedience to Thy laws. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Monday, July 29, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4037) to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Theodore R. Troendle, for the Dawson Springs Construction Co., with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 9571. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Sitka, Alaska, to purchase and enlarge certain public utilities and for such purpose to issue bonds in the sum of $200,000 in excess of present statutory debt limit; and

H. R. 9851. An act authorizing special arrangements in the transportation of mail within the Territory of Alaska.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 3200) to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army in the military departments of Panama and Hawaii, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

MEMORIALS

Mr. REED presented a memorial of 73 citizens of Marion County, Kans., remonstrating against the adoption of a military-conscription policy in peacetime, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of 55 citizens of Edgerton, Johnson County, Kans., remonstrating against the adoption of a compulsory military-training system and expressing the belief that the proposed program for national defense violates the policy of neutrality and is a step toward war, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RESOLUTIONS OF VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS, DEPARTMENT OF CONNECTICUT

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be published at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks and appropriately referred resolutions adopted by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Department of Connecticut, at the twentieth annual encampment held in New Britain, Conn., on June 28, 29, and 30, 1940.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred, as follows:

To the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolution adopted by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Department of Connecticut, at the twentieth annual encampment held in New Britain, Conn., June 28, 29, and 30, 1940

Whereas the founders of this Nation here erected a free government based upon the individual rights and personal dignity of man and were obliged to flee from and thereafter defend themselves against the autocracies of the Old World in order to establish such a haven of liberty; and

Whereas the doctrine of personal liberty guaranteed by the Constitution which they enacted and which the people of this Nation adopted has been gravely abused by enemies of free government within our Nation, and it now appears that such treasonable activities are being undertaken that the continued existence of our form of government is threatened by a minority within serving autocracies of the European Continent which are engaged in brutal assaults upon free people: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we respectfully urge the Congress of the United States to enact appropriate legislation by which participation in any activities designed to change the Constitution of the United States by any means other than those set forth in the Constitution itself, or participation in plotting against the peace and security of the United States shall be deemed a felony and punished by forfeiture of citizenship and such other and further punishment as the Congress may direct; and that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the national headquarters of this order and to the Senators and Congressmen from the State of Connecticut.

To the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolution adopted by the Department of Connecticut, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, at the twentieth annual encampment, held in New Britain, Conn., on June 28, 29, and 30, 1940

Whereas this Nation has guaranteed the freedom of nations on the American Continents from foreign domination or political interference through the Monroe Doctrine and it now appears that the totalitarian powers of the European Continent recognize no doctrine other than the doctrine of force; and

Whereas it is well established that agencies are at work in the interests of political interference with nations on the American Continents for said European powers, and such activities include subversive activities well organized in the United States, the further development of which may lead to war; and

Whereas this Nation has long neglected the call of this and other patriotic organizations for an adequate national defense, and is now in a state of dire unpreparedness to defend its doctrines and its people: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States is respectfully urged to enact necessary legislation at once to provide for compulsory military service for the training of all eligible men of the Nation for service in the national defense; and that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the national headquarters of this order and to the Congressmen and Senators from the area of this department.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 4224. A bill to authorize the discontinuance of professional examinations for promotion in the Regular Army of officers of the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps during time of war or emergency declared by Congress; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McCARRAN:

S. 4225. A bill to enact the Aviation Salvage at Sea Convention into statute law in the United States; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. VAN NUYS:

S. 4226. A bill for the relief of Julius Yuhasz and Arvid Olson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. AUSTIN:

S. 4227. A bill for the relief of Herbert Zucker, Emma Zucker, Hanni Zucker, Dorrit Claire Zucker, and Martha Hirsch; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. BYRD:

S. 4228. A bill reviving and renewing patent No. 1,467,930, serial No. 557,262; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. J. Res. 286. Joint resolution to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS PLACED ON CALENDAR OR REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and ordered to be placed on the calendar, or referred, as indicated below:

H. R. 9571. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Sitka, Alaska, to purchase and enlarge certain public utilities and for such purpose to issue bonds in the sum of $200,000 in excess of present statutory debt limit; to the calendar.

H. R. 9851. An act authorizing special arrangements in the transportation of mail within the Territory of Alaska; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REGULATION OF INVESTMENT COMPANIES AND ANSWERS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. WAGNER submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4108) to provide for the registration and regulation of investment companies and investment advisers, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING—AMENDMENT

Mr. LEE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4164) to protect the integrity and institutions of the United States through a system of selective compulsory military training and service, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CLAIM OF THEODORE R. TROENDLE, FOR THE DAWSON SPRINGS CONSTRUCTION CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4037) to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Theodore R. Troendle, for the Dawson Springs Construction Co., which was, on page 2, line 7, after the word "cases", to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 285) making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think all Senators are familiar with this measure. On June 19, 1940, the President sent in a recommendation and a Budget estimate for the purposes contemplated by the joint resolution. Later on Mr. Stettinius, Mr. Knudsen, Mr. Gano Dunn, and several others appeared before the House committee and the Senate committee and testified that the building of a dam for hydro power and a steam plant on the Holston River in Tennessee near Knoxville was absolutely necessary in the interest of the national defense. It grew out of this situation: As we all know, the Aluminum Co. of America has the largest of its various plants in a little town called Alcoa, in Tennessee, about 20 miles from Knoxville, and about the same distance or slightly farther from the site of this proposed dam and power plant.

The President recommended that $25,000,000 be appropriated for this plant for the work to be done in the present year.

Mr. Stettinius said that he had had a survey made as to the power which would be necessary for national-defense purposes. I shall read short excerpts from his statement if the Senate will permit me. They are published in the RECORD of this morning, but, at the same time, I think certain references to his statement should be made.

The principal witness before the committee was Mr. Gano Dunn, who is an outstanding electrical and chemical engineer. Mr. Dunn was for a long time, and perhaps still is, connected with the J. G. White Engineering Co. He testified at length before the committee. He said he had examined the power possibilities all over the country. He had especially examined into the power capacity in connection with the production of aluminum which is to be used, as we all know, for the building of airplanes for war purposes.

The largest aluminum plant in the country being at Alcoa, it was very important, as he thought, to examine the power capabilities of the streams near the point where aluminum is manufactured. He described in his testimony the Holston Dam as a "natural"; that is, he says that by the use of combined hydro and steam plants the amount of power necessary for the production of aluminum could be obtained as in no other place in this country.

In the first place, he recommended a steam plant of a capacity of 120,000 kilowatts. The hydro plant at the point where the dam was built would generate 90,000 more kilowatts, and in the succeeding dams down the river, by the flow of water from the Holston Dam, additional kilowatts could be generated, all within the sphere of and within transmission distance of the aluminum plant. So 300,000 kilowatts of power could be furnished the aluminum plant within 18 months with a steam plant, and within 24 months with a water plant.

The question was raised that the war might be over in 24 months, or even in 18 months. His reply to that was that the Army was building large guns that would take longer than that to complete, and the Navy was building great ships that would take longer than that to complete, and therefore the same principle applied to the vital use of power for the manufacture of aluminum that applied to the manufacture of large guns and tanks and other implements of war and the building of ships for the Navy. So it was shown very clearly, both to the House and Senate committees, that this project is very vital for defense purposes.

Another question that was asked was why there was not sufficient power there without this expansion. It was shown that the Aluminum Co. of America is now buying between a million and a half and $2,000,000 worth of power from the Tennessee Valley Authority, and it was necessary for them to have more power.

I do not think any Senator can read the testimony of Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Dunn and not come to the conclusion that they are entirely right and that it is absolutely necessary to have this plant built.

Mr. Stettinius highly praised Mr. Dunn as an engineer, and no one who heard Mr. Dunn testify could come to any other conclusion than that he knows his business as few men do.

Now I quote from the testimony of Mr. Stettinius:

I wish to say that in some ways this power situation of the T. V. A. is a very, very vital matter from the standpoint of national defense. The Aluminum Corporation now is expanding their production by 60,000,000 pounds per annum. If the water is short, the T. V. A. cannot supply power for this present production.

They are waiting commencement now of another 60,000,000 pounds per annum capacity in Tennessee, which is clearly dependent upon this power expansion that you gentlemen are considering this afternoon.

It looks as a general estimate, as a general background, gentlemen, it looks as if the defense program will involve something in the neighborhood of 200,000,000 pounds per annum of aluminum production in addition to the present requirements.

Senator HAYDEN. What is the occasion for using so much aluminum?

Mr. STETTINIUS. In the airplane schedule chiefly, sir. In the wing construction, the motors, and the fuselage. In the general aviation program, for instance, about 5 tons of aluminum go into one of these large-size bombers.

Senator HAYDEN. I want to confess frankly to you that, coming from Arizona, which is the greatest copper-producing State, and realizing the great inroads that aluminum has made on copper, I am pretty highly prejudiced perhaps against that metal. But I do realize that it is lighter than any other metal and that the need in aircraft construction is for lightness.

Mr. STETTINIUS. Yes; in aircraft construction aluminum, from the standpoint of its weight, its thickness, its strength, and its durability, takes the place of almost any other metal.

And again:

Mr. STETTINIUS. Mr. Dunn in his testimony can bring out a great number of factors having to do with the entire industrial situation in the southeastern section of this country in connection with the defense program separate and apart from the aluminum case that I have spoken about.

Then Mr. Dunn testified, and I will read a portion of what he so well said:

The increase in the hydro power of the Tennessee Valley Authority is advantageous because, by installing 90,000 kilowatts of generating equipment at the Holston Dam—

That is the place where it is to be installed—

the water impounded by that dam will not only energize the 90,000 kilowatts there installed but an additional 90,000 kilowatts to be installed at the Pickwick and Wilson Dams farther down the river. This is because the Holston Dam happens to be the highest one upstream from the other dams in the Tennessee Valley over which other dams the water which is stored in the Holston Reservoir is also discharged with accompanying power, which would not be the case if the Holston Dam stood alone by itself. By this particular development of the Tennessee Valley it may be said that we get 2 kilowatts of power for every 1 kilowatt that the Holston Dam itself develops.

Our approval of 120,000 kilowatts of steam plant to be located near the Watts Bar Dam has the effect of transforming a large amount of what is termed secondary or dump power resulting from the variations in the flow of the river into primary or continuous power which the Tennessee Valley Authority system greatly needs. The amount of power we approved was 180,000 kilowatts of hydro and 120,000 kilowatts of steam, but while this constitutes a total of 300,000 kilowatts of increased installed capacity it does not constitute 300,000 kilowatts of increased power, since the hydro power and the steam power overlap and they are not both in full operation at the same time. The net amount of increased power made available by the 300,000 kilowatts of installed capacity is in the neighborhood of 220,000 kilowatts.

Mr. President, I desire now to call attention to another matter. It came up in the committee on the question of which was cheaper—steam power or hydro power. Mr. Dunn stated that steam power by itself, because of the reduction of the price of coal for one thing, and for other reasons, in his opinion was cheaper than hydro power, but not in a case such as this where the dam is the top dam on a river where there are many other dams and where the amount of hydro power manufactured at the particular dam is 90,000 kilowatts and 90,000 other kilowatts will be manufactured as the water moves down into the other dams.

In addition to that, Mr. Dunn, this morning, wrote to the chairman of the subcommittee a letter which I shall take the liberty of reading concerning one phase of the matter. This letter is addressed to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]:

Certain members of the committee of which you are chairman have raised the question: Why should not the increased capacity of T. V. A. required for national-defense purposes be wholly in steam power instead of partly in steam power and partly in hydro power, as has been recommended by the engineers and approved by the Advisory Committee to the Council of National Defense?

The most reliable and economical operation of a mixed system like that of the T. V. A. comes about when the amount of steam bears to the amount of hydro a ratio determined by engineering considerations. If in the T. V. A. system the steam is expanded at the expense of the water, the cost of operation is considerably increased, and some of the benefits of hydroelectric development are lost. If not enough steam is provided, the operation in respect to prime power becomes uncertain and a large part of the power becomes secondary power of much lower value.

As we all know, primary power is the power which comes from the stream all the year around, and secondary power is the increased amount which comes about with rains or floods.

The amount of steam power included in the plan is the right amount to give the best compromise between these conflicting requirements, and any important change in it would be contrary to good engineering.

There is another consideration of a most serious kind. Since this matter came up a month or so ago the power demands for national defense have begun to rise all over the industrial part of the country, and many large orders have been placed with the manufacturing companies for steam machinery and equipment. To such an extent has this occurred that whereas deliveries of 15 to 18 months were then possible, I am informed that in the last 3 weeks the General Electric Co., the largest manufacturer of steam turbogenerators, has been obliged to lengthen its delivery dates so that it is now quoting deliveries no earlier than 25 months from the date of order.

If under these circumstances the amount of steam equipment for the T. V. A. expansion should be materially increased, it could only be at the expense of the expansion of steam plants elsewhere also needed for national defense, and it is probable that the priority authorities would not recognize the claim for early delivery of a large part of the T. V. A. order.

For all these reasons, and in the interest of the prompt determination of the T. V. A. expansion, which is urgently needed for the national defense, I urge that the proportions of steam to hydro, which have been carefully determined from engineering considerations, be not disturbed.

So, Mr. President, I am presenting this matter to the Senate, and hope the joint resolution may pass at the very earliest possible moment, so that work may go forward upon this project of national defense.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to suggest to the Senator that for the RECORD—Senators probably know it—the Senator ought to read the name of the engineer signing the letter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly. The letter is from Gano Dunn, one of the most celebrated engineers in the United States, and at present engaged by the Council of National Defense which has been set up by the President of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. Does the pending joint resolution contemplate the building of an entirely new dam?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; an entirely new dam near Jefferson City.

Mr. MILLER. At a cost of how much—about $65,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. The steam plant will cost a very considerable sum, and that is to be deducted from the $65,000,000 which the hydro plant will cost.

Mr. MILLER. Then under the joint resolution, as I understand, one new dam will be built.

Mr. McKELLAR. One new dam will be built.

Mr. MILLER. And an auxiliary steam plant will be built for the purpose of supplying additional power. Is that correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; the purpose of the steam plant is to supply power when the water is low, so as to provide a constant flow of primary power. Primary power is necessary in the view of the Commission and this engineer, Mr. Dunn, in order that the best results may be obtained in the manufacture of aluminum.

Mr. MILLER. The purpose of all stand-by steam plants is to afford a constant supply of primary power.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the purpose.

Mr. MILLER. But the thought occurred to me that we are continuing to pour into the T. V. A. millions and millions of dollars. This project is for the manufacture of aluminum from bauxite.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Ninety-six percent of the bauxite that will be manufactured there comes from Arkansas.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator does not object to that, does he?

Mr. MILLER. Not at all. I am for the joint resolution and shall support it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MILLER. But I think we are short-sighted in our policies in putting all our eggs in one basket. If the Tennessee River were the only river in the United States capable of producing hydroelectric power, the question would be different; but this very engineer, Mr. Dunn, to whom I have talked, the Federal Power Commission, and the Army engineers say that we have 2,000,000 kilowatt-hours annually going to waste in Arkansas on dams the construction of which has been authorized by Congress, and yet the National Defense Commission cannot be induced to go there and build dams; but they are insisting upon extracting from the States of the interior their products and sending them to industrial areas. That is what we are doing.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I may say, in reply to what he has stated, that I voted for every one of the bills to aid the development of water power in his State to which he refers.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator did.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the Aluminum Co. many years ago built this very large dam in east Tennessee and began to build other dams. Incidentally they are building two more small dams there now; they are in the course of construction.

The advantage of having this particular dam built on the Holston River at Jefferson City is that it is only about 20 miles from the great plant of the Aluminum Co. It is not to be erected for a general increase in power development on the Tennessee River. It works that way, because the Holston is a tributary of the Tennessee River, but the peculiar reason why the Defense Council is acting—and I do not think it should be blamed—is that this power can be generated right at the Aluminum Co. plant, and the Aluminum Co. has its plant there now, the largest such plant in the world. It needs the power with which to manufacture the aluminum there. If there were an aluminum plant in Arkansas, I imagine the Council would recommend that a dam be built in Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. The power is needed, it is true. Is the Aluminum Co. going to build a new plant or use its present facilities?

Mr. McKELLAR. Developments have been proceeding so rapidly that it is hard to keep up with them; but I think within the last 2 or 3 years the Aluminum Co. has doubled its capacity at this point. Before doing that it made a contract with the T. V. A. for quite a large amount of power, which is being sold at an excellent rate, a rate at which the T. V. A. can sell it, and the company is taking power from the T. V. A. now, but they have not enough power. They must have more power, and that is why these two plants, one a steam plant and one a hydro power plant, are to be built.

Mr. MILLER. I understand the completeness of the case that is made by the testimony and in the hearings; I realize the necessity for the appropriation proposed and for the enlargement of this plant; I appreciate what Mr. Dunn and others have said as to the reasons which impel them to recommend this appropriation, and I am wholeheartedly for it; but I wish to say to the Senator and to the Senate, in all seriousness, that if we are to locate new industries—and I am willing to admit this is not a new industry, that it is an expansion of the present one, 30,000 tons a year being what they are going to undertake to mill there by this increased power—the Senate cannot afford to proceed to build one industrial empire at the expense of the entire nation, under the pretense of national defense, when the same objectives can be obtained by scattering the industries over the Nation. I am as wholeheartedly for the joint resolution as I can be, and I expect to do everything I can for the program, but I felt that I did not want this proposed legislation to go through without some facts being called to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand from the brief explanation, there is not sufficient power now available to operate this plant.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is not.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would it not be possible to run transmission lines to this mill more economically from some other dam under the Tennessee Valley Authority than to build a new dam?

Mr. McKELLAR. There are transmission lines to all the plants along the Tennessee River, but it will be remembered that the T. V. A. has taken over great power companies in that area and is supplying them, and therefore there is not enough power there now.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, unless the action proposed in the joint resolution shall be taken, there will be no other place where they can get adequate power to operate this plant as it is desired that it be operated?

Mr. McKELLAR. For the best interest of national defense.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is that correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is a correct statement.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is no other way by which they can get the power except by building these two dams in order to furnish it?

Mr. McKELLAR. One dam and one steam plant. That is what the engineers testified.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I should not like to let the question of the Senator from Maryland as to the availability of power go unanswered. On the Columbia River there are plants already authorized which could furnish power and which are looking for customers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely correct, and if the Senator will examine the testimony of Mr. Dunn, who has stated the matter so clearly, he will find that they are counting on 60,000 kilowatts of power from one of the great dams in the Senator's State. It will be found that in making the estimate of all the power in the country which could be used for war purposes one of the items was 60,000 kilowatts, as I remember the figures, from a dam in the Senator's State.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not my purpose to oppose the measure presented by the Senator from Tennessee. I have just spent a week on the Tennessee River, and have been at the site of the proposed dam, and followed the development down to the mouth of the river, but, in my judgment, the time is coming when the Government of the United States must scatter its industries, and must take into consideration the vast expenditures which have been authorized on the Columbia River.

I doubt if many Members of the Senate realize the enormous power and flow proportions of the Columbia River. The Columbia, its tributaries, and adjacent streams have far greater power potentialities than any other river system on the North American Continent. There are 43,000,000 potential 90 percent water horsepower on all the streams in the United States. Nineteen million two hundred thousand horsepower, or 44.5 percent of all the country's water power, is found on the Columbia system.

The average flow of the Columbia River is 1⁹⁄₁₀ times as large as the average flow of the Mississippi at St. Louis, below which place the Mississippi has no potential power; 1¹⁄₁₀ times as large as the Ohio's flow at its mouth; 7⁹⁄₁₀ times as large as that of the Tennessee at Chattanooga; 4³⁄₁₀ times as large as that of the Tennessee at its mouth; 1³⁄₁₀ times as large as the flow of the St. Lawrence at the international section; 15¹⁄₁₀ as large as that of the Colorado at Boulder Dam; and 1⁷⁄₁₀ times as large as that of the Yukon at its mouth.

The Columbia is a steady stream, and in this respect is excelled only by the St. Lawrence because of the regulating effect of the large storage reservoirs of the Great Lakes. The low-water flow of the Columbia is 1⁶⁄₁₀ times that of the Mississippi at St. Louis, 3 times that of the Ohio at Paducah, 13⁵⁄₁₀ times that of the Tennessee at Chattanooga, and 6³⁄₁₀ times that of the Tennessee at its mouth.

Oregon and Washington together have 13,200,000 potential horsepower, compared with 1,300,000 in Tennessee, 900,000 in Alabama, and about 1,600,000 in the T. V. A.

Funds have been appropriated and construction is in progress which will result in the availability of about 615,000 kilowatts at Bonneville and Grand Coulee in a little over a year. This is more than double the defense-power requirements submitted by the Defense Commission.

I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate at this time to the developments already authorized on the Columbia River, and to the fact that future demands for war purposes, or other purposes, should look to the Columbia River for hydroelectric service, and that we should not continue concentrating the developments in one small area of the Nation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 285) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to present for the RECORD a very illuminating article from this morning's New York Times dealing with Canada's experience with her own national defense and with conscription.

There is an obvious parallel between Canadian necessities and our own. There has been considerable misunderstanding as to the nature of the development of the Canadian defense. I think the article which I am presenting from the Times is undoubtedly authentic. It discloses that a Canadian active service force of 133,000 men has been raised by the volunteer system. Since our population is roughly 10 times the size of that of Canada, the Canadian figures should probably be multiplied by 10 in seeking to draw a parallel with our own situation. On the basis of that parallel, we would have a volunteer force of 1,300,000 men before we undertook conscription.

Canada undertakes conscription 1 year after its entry into the war. But what is the conscription which Canada will inaugurate on October 1? I quote:

> Under the compulsory system, which is just getting under way, the first class will be called for training October 1. There will be 30,000 men in this class.
> The equivalent figure in the United States would be 300,000.
>
> They will receive a month's—
> Not 1 year's—
> They will receive a month's intensive training and then be demobilized. Each month a new class will be called up, but for the first year only single men will be drafted.
> Men will be paid $1.20 a day while in uniform, but this pay will continue if they keep up their drill in nonpermanent militia units at night.

In other words, the program calls for 30-day conscription, and subsequent voluntary service in part-time training in their own home areas.

I quote further:

> To those who suggest that 30 days is too brief a period for training, Defense Minister Ralston replied:
> "The weight of opinion is," he said, "that we must lay as broad and deep a foundation as possible for the Canadian Army.
> "To withdraw 300,000 men from their work for more than 30 days over a year might jeopardize production of essential war commodities. It is necessary to give the largest number of men elementary military training in the shortest possible time."

Mr. President, what I am emphasizing, for whatever it may be worth, in respect to our study of our own problem, is that conscription across the border, in the great empire to the north, which has been at war for a year, is confined to 30 days' service, and to home service only.

I ask that the entire article from the New York Times be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CANADA WILL TRAIN 300,000 YOUNG MEN—NEW ARMY WILL BE SEPARATE FROM ACTIVE-SERVICE FORCE NOW TOTALING 133,572—ARMS OUTPUT INCREASES—RALSTON TELLS COMMONS THAT NO MORE MEN WILL BE SENT TO AID BRITISH DEFENSE

OTTAWA, July 29.—As a vanguard of a new Canadian army to defend this country 300,000 single men will be trained in successive monthly waves of 30,000 each, Defense Minister J. L. Ralston announced to Parliament tonight.

This new army will be separate from the Canadian active-service force which now numbers 133,572 men. It will not be sent outside Canada. In addition to these recruits there will be available to man coastal defenses and in reserve 100,000 men enlisted for the duration of the war.

Colonel Ralston indicated that for the present no more men would be sent overseas.

"There is at the moment no shortage of manpower in England," he declared. "The real demand is for equipment."

TRAINING TO BE CONTINUED

The new recruits will not be kept in uniform after their month in camp is over, but their training will be continued in the nonpermanent militia.

At the head of the priority list of Canada's military preparations, Colonel Ralston placed the strengthening of Canada's Atlantic coast fortifications.

Command headquarters are to be organized at once in the Maritime Provinces and fortifications already erected are to be strengthened. The general in charge of the new command will be in control of the troops in Newfoundland as well.

As an additional measure of home defense, steps to coordinate police and military protection for internal security of the country were announced. Angus McDonald, new minister for naval service, will also take charge of internal defense matters.

Colonel Ralston also announced that a new rifle factory would shortly be in production in Canada. All surplus rifles were given to the British Government 2 months ago.

Production of small-arms ammunition will be increased 50 percent in the next month and doubled before the end of the year. Machine-gun production is now ahead of schedule, the Minister stated.

UNIFORMS NOW DELIVERED

The House was assured that Canadian overseas forces were now completely equipped with mechanized transport and Canadian factories had turned their whole production over to making good the losses suffered by the British Army in Flanders. All the transport had been so modified from British design as to be capable of mass production under North American conditions.

Difficulties in providing uniforms for Canadian forces were now removed, the House was told. To date, 210,927 complete sets of uniforms had been delivered.

Colonel Ralston's speech was the most reassuring that Parliament has heard this session. He was followed by Air Minister Charles G. Power, who detailed steps in speeding up the commonwealth air-training plan. Eighty-eight airfields with their training schools will be in operation by the end of the summer.

Two months ago there were 488 pupils in the schools. Now there are 2,643. With staff and pupils there are now a total of 19,453 in the Canadian air force.

Meanwhile Canada is operating a two-way system of raising military forces to meet the emergency. There is compulsory service, but this is for home defense only. Canadians are enlisting at the rate of 1,200 a day for overseas service.

Under the compulsory system which is just getting under way, the first class will be called for training October 1. There will be 30,000 men in this class. They will receive a month's intensive training and then be demobilized. Each month a new class will be called up but for the first year only single men will be drafted.

TO RECEIVE $1.20 A DAY

Men will be paid $1.20 a day while in uniform, but this pay will continue if they keep up their drill in nonpermanent militia units at night. Two nights' drill means 1 day's pay.

When drafted, the men will be attached to these units and will continue to belong to the same regiment.

A national registration will be held August 19, 20, and 21. Cards of all the men of military age—19 to 45—will be sent to a judge in each province. As each class is called the men will be given a medical examination, and if they are physically fit they must report for training. There are no exemptions allowed.

There are 91 militia regiments in Canada, and more may have to be established. Many of these regiments have already furnished battalions for overseas service. New battalions are now being organized for home defense.

To those who suggest that 30 days is too brief a period for training, Defense Minister Ralston replied:

"The weight of opinion is," he said, "that we must lay as broad and deep a foundation as possible for the Canadian Army.

"To withdraw 300,000 men from their work for more than 30 days over a year might jeopardize production of essential war commodities. It is necessary to give the largest number of men elementary military training in the shortest possible time."

One of the difficulties Canada faces is the shortage of competent instructors to train these men. Several thousand instructors are now in training in special schools established for the purpose. The instructors are being drawn largely from men who served in the last war.

The 30 days will give only the initial military training that is common to all arms. Specialization comes later. It has been thought best, Colonel Ralston said, "to give this initial training to all the men concerned." After they have absorbed something of the spirit of the army, they will have instinctive preferences with respect to the branch of the service in which they desire to serve.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. MINTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Robert Porter Patterson, of New York, to be Assistant Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nomination on the calendar.

POSTMASTER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James W. Blair to be postmaster at Clayton, Okla.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Committee on Military Affairs a little earlier today favorably reported the nomination of Robert Porter Patterson, of New York, to be Assistant Secretary of War. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of that nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert Porter Patterson, of New York, to be Assistant Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

That completes the calendar.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a measure identical with the Senate joint resolution which has just been passed is now under consideration in the House. It is very important that the legislation be enacted as soon as possible; either that the Senate joint resolution be enacted by the House, or that the House measure, if the House passes it, shall be enacted by the Senate. There is an agreement in effect in the House that 2 hours shall be devoted to debate on the measure, after which, as I understand, it will be voted upon. In order that there may be no delay in the consideration of the measure in either House, whichever one desires to pass the measure of the other House, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until 3 o'clock p. m.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry. When the Senate reconvenes at 3 o'clock, is it to take up other matters?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it is not contemplated that we will take up other matters.

Mr. McNARY. Then it is the intention thereafter to recess until Thursday?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; it is the intention thereafter to recess until Thursday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request presented by the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senate will stand in recess until 3 o'clock p. m.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 3 o'clock p. m., when it reassembled, and the President pro tempore took the chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the House has not yet acted on the joint resolution to which reference has been previously made. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Thereupon (at 3 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the Senate took a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

At 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m. the Senate reassembled, and was called to order by the President pro tempore.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY—MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 583) making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution coming over from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 583) making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $25,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as an additional amount to carry out the provisions of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, approved May 18, 1933, as amended by the acts approved August 31, 1935, and July 26, 1939, including the funds necessary to begin construction of a dam on the Holston River near Jefferson City, Tenn.; to begin installation of two additional electric generating units at Wilson Dam, Ala., and one additional electric generating unit at Pickwick Landing Dam, Tenn.; and to begin construction of steam electric generating facilities with a rated capacity of approximately 120,000 kilowatts in the area served by the Authority; and the acquisition of necessary land, the clearing of such land, relocation of highways, and the construction or purchase of transmission lines and other facilities, and all other necessary works authorized by such acts, and for printing and binding, lawbooks, books of reference, newspapers, periodicals, purchase, maintenance, and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles, rents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and all necessary salaries and expenses connected with the organization, operation, and investigations of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and for examination of estimates of appropriations and activities in the field: Provided, That the foregoing appropriation shall be in addition to and shall be covered into and accounted for as a part of the "Tennessee Valley Authority Fund, 1941," as established by the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1941: Provided further, That purchases may be made by the Authority during the fiscal year 1941 without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes and section 9 (b) of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, as amended, when in the judgment of the Board of Directors of the Authority such a procedure will expedite the completion of projects determined to be essential for national defense purposes by the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense: Provided further, That the extent and location of the transmission lines provided for herein shall receive the approval of such Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House joint resolution. In making the request for unanimous consent, I wish to say that the House joint resolution is exactly the same as the Senate joint resolution passed by the Senate earlier today, with the exception that on page 3, line 4, after the word "defense" the following proviso was inserted by the House:

Provided further, That the extent and location of the transmission lines provided for herein shall receive the approval of such Commission.

Meaning the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Inviting the Senator's attention to the House joint resolution, does he not mean page 3, line 5? The word "defense" appears in line 3 and again in line 5.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true in the Senate joint resolution. I had the House joint resolution before me. It is line 4, page 3, of the House joint resolution. In other words, after the last word in the joint resolution that proviso was inserted.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I renew my request for unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 583) making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, Senate joint resolution 285 is now on the Vice President's desk. I ask that the vote by which the Senate joint resolution was passed be reconsidered, and that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which Senate Joint Resolution 285 was agreed to is reconsidered, and the joint resolution is indefinitely postponed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the President pro tempore be authorized to sign the enrolled House Joint Resolution 583 during the recess or adjournment of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 286) to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1987) thereon.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, August 1, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JULY 30, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and gracious God, with gladness and gratitude we are coming unto Thee, for in the revelations of Thy presence and power we find our strength and hope. We pray that we may daily validate these revelations by the convincing and glorious certitude of an ever-enriching personal experience.

Grant that the challenging Spirit of the Son of God may permeate and dominate the minds and hearts of the Members of this legislative body as they address themselves to the duties and responsibilities of this day.

We pray that men everywhere may be eager to participate in a new spirit of fellowship and understanding. May the will of men be good will and Thy ways their ways. Help our humanity to see that the greatest securities for all are not in weapons of warfare, but in the implements of welfare, when swords are beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks, and when men give their allegiance to the Prince of Peace who shall rule not with the rod of iron but with the scepter of justice and righteousness.

In Christ's name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3920. An act to amend the Railroad Unemployment Act, approved June 25, 1938, as amended June 20, 1939, and for other purposes.

ACTIVE SERVICE FOR THE NATIONAL GUARD, OFFICERS' RESERVE CORPS, ETC. (S. DOC. NO. 265)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The increasing seriousness of the international situation demands that every element of our defense structure be brought as rapidly as possible to the highest state of efficiency, in training as well as in equipment and material.

The National Guard of the United States, an integral and vital part of the Army, comprises a body of men who have voluntarily assumed an obligation to serve the Nation in any crisis. To the extent possible under normal conditions, the officers and men of the National Guard have prepared themselves for this service, and I am assured that today the guard has reached the highest state of efficiency in its peacetime history.

The developments of modern warfare are such, however, that only seasoned and highly trained troops can hope for success in combat. Our citizen soldiery, no matter how willing and earnest, cannot possibly attain the necessary degree of efficiency through their normal training activities. Even our professional soldiers required months of intensive training to bring them to their present satisfactory state. We know too well the tragedy that ensues when inadequately trained men are assailed by a more skillful adversary.

Some weeks ago I asked the Congress for authority to order the National Guard into active service should an emergency require this action when your body was not in session. That proposal is no longer sufficient, as I am now convinced that the security of the Nation demands that this component of our Army be brought to the highest possible state of training efficiency more rapidly than its present program permits. Moreover, this group of men, who of necessity must be among the first to fight in the Nation's defense, have a right to the best preparation that time and circumstance permit.

Realizing as I do the personal sacrifice that a period of extended active duty demands of the National Guard, I have deferred until now any request for immediate action in this respect. I cannot, with clear conscience, longer postpone this vitally essential step in our progress toward adequate preparedness, and I am therefore transmitting herewith legislation that, if enacted, will enable me to order the National Guard of the United States to active service for such period of intensive training as may be necessary to raise its efficiency to a point comparable with that of our small Regular Establishment.

If this authority is granted, I propose to order the guard to duty in successive increments to permit the effective use of training facilities and equipment immediately available. Each increment will, of course, be released when it attains the desired state of efficiency.

Of equal importance is the Officers' Reserve Corps. This splendid body of officers has had little opportunity for service with troops, and to the maximum extent possible their training should now be perfected by an adequate period of active service. If ordered to active duty, they can acquire the desired efficiency and at the same time supply the increased need for officers in our expanded Regular Army. The authority I am requesting is therefore drawn so as to include the Officers' Reserve Corps.

I ask your earnest consideration of this program and your prompt and favorable action thereon.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a report from the enforcement agencies of the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to deliver an address before this House next Thursday after everything else is done and most everybody has gone home.

The SPEAKER. For how long does the gentleman wish to address the House?

Mr. KELLER. For 1 hour, if necessary. I want to talk on the question of preparedness. I think my training, experience, observation, and writing on that subject may enable me to offer to the House some vital advice or suggestions.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman spoke about speaking to the House when most of the Members had gone home. The gentleman ought to deliver that address when they are here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program, I may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks very briefly in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from Lt. Col. Albert H. Stackpole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced the following resolution:

Notwithstanding the provisions of existing law, any member of the National Guard called into the service for training, for State service, or when called into the service of the United States by Presidential proclamation shall be eligible for and entitled to apply for United States Government life insurance under the provisions of sections 300 and 311, World War Veterans' Act, as amended, from and within 120 days after the date of reporting for training, for State service, or for Federal service.

Mr. Speaker, clearly it seems to me that those who enter training in the National Guard, called into State service, or called into Federal service are entitled to take out war-risk insurance if they wish to. We expect men today to go into training for their country and to offer their services for their country in that way, and surely they are entitled to the benefits and protection of Government insurance.

I earnestly hope that my resolution will be adopted. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include two items, one from the Los Angeles Examiner, Perkins Accused of Harboring 700 Alien Lawbreakers; and the other a resolution by the County Supervisors Association of California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEPORTATION OF HARRY BRIDGES

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to read to the House Resolution No. 9 passed by the County Supervisors Association of California:

Whereas our democracy is now being threatened by enemy agents engaging in subversive and un-American activities to our detriment; and

Whereas the House of Representatives of the United States has already approved legislation directing that Harry Bridges, C. I. O. organizer, now operating on the west coast, be immediately deported from the United States; and

Whereas such legislation is now pending before the United States Senate for action by that body: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the County Supervisors Association of California, meeting in annual convention, at Oakland, Calif., on June 21, 1940, hereby declares that it strongly urges and supports concurrence by the United States Senate, in the action already taken by the House of Representatives in directing the deportation of Harry Bridges, C. I. O. organizer, now operating in California, and that we further strongly approve and support any legislation to deport any known alien enemy engaged in subversive or un-American activities against the United States.

[Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BENDER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a brief editorial by Meador Wright.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan??

There was no objection.

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Grand Rapids Herald.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short resolution on the subject of Congress remaining in session, and also dealing with "fifth column" activities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in connection with remarks I expect to make in the Committee of the Whole later in the day I may be permitted to revise and extend them and to include certain tables I have prepared.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House Committee on Military Affairs may sit during the sessions of the House the remainder of the week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 170]

Allen, Pa.	Bates, Ky.	Boykin	Buck
Anderson, Mo.	Bell	Bradley, Mich.	Buckley, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-four Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION, FISCAL YEAR 1941, TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 554 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 554

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of House Joint Resolution 583, a joint resolution making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, of the 1 hour to which I am entitled on the rule, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], and at this time I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, as the pending resolution which has just been read indicates, this is a rule for consideration of House Joint Resolution 583, making an additional appropriation of $25,000,000 for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941, to provide additional facilities for the production of electric power, to expedite the national-defense program. This is an open rule providing for 3 hours' general debate, after which the joint resolution—House Joint Resolution 583—will be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The purpose of the joint resolution which this rule makes in order will be fully explained by members of the Appropriations Committee. In brief, the resolution provides for an initial appropriation of $25,000,000 for a program of expansion the total cost of which will be $65,800,000. The expansion program is as follows: First, the construction of a storage dam and hydroelectric power plant on the Holston River, near Jefferson City, Tenn.; second, the installation of two additional 26,000-kilowatt generating units at Wilson Dam and one additional 36,000-kilowatt unit at Pickwick Dam; third, the construction of additional steam electric generating facilities in the area served by the Authority, with an installed capacity of approximately 120,000 kilowatts; and, fourth, the construction of the transmission facilities needed to tie the generating facilities just mentioned into the Tennessee Valley Authority power system and to carry the power to market.

This additional power is needed for the production of aluminum for the manufacture of airplanes and for other purposes in the national-defense program.

Mr. William S. Knudsen in the course of his testimony before the Appropriations Committee—page 5 of the printed hearings on the joint resolution—stated:

My interest in this project is purely to see that we get aluminum enough or duralumin enough to build the planes with. I suppose you know the average plane takes about 5 tons [of aluminum]. * * * Yes; that is the average, and my interest here in this project is to get aluminum enough for the planes, and the average quantity per plane is about 5 tons, meaning both in the frame itself and in the parts of the motor that are made of aluminum, such as the crankcase, pistons, and cylinder head.

Mr. Speaker, the report of the Committee on Appropriations so fully, clearly, and succinctly sets forth the purposes for which this $25,000,000, and the additional amounts later to be asked for, will be used, that I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the committee's report at this point in connection with my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The report referred to follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 583) entitled "Joint resolution making an addititonal appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense," reports the measure without amendment and with a recommendation for its early consideration and passage.

The joint resolution carries an appropriation of $25,000,000 in accordance with the Executive recommendation in Senate Document No. 241 of the present session to enable the Tennessee Valley Authority to provide additional electrical generating capacity to meet the present and projected requirements for power from plants engaged and to be engaged in the manufacture of materials and supplies for national-defense purposes. The $25,000,000 carried in the joint resolution is the initial appropriation of a program to cost $65,800,000.

The expansion of Tennessee Valley Authority power facilities to be undertaken under the appropriation is urgently pressed by the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense. There appeared before the committee in support of the program Mr. William S. Knudsen and Mr. Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., members of the Advisory Commission; Mr. Gano Dunn, power consultant of the Commission's staff; and Mr. David E. Lilienthal, vice chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The committee invites attention to the testimony of these gentlemen incorporated in the printed hearings in justification of the vital importance of the proposed facilities to the national-defense program.

There should not be any confusion in the public mind with respect to this proposal for the Tennessee Valley Authority. Irrespective of the present or past views of anyone with respect to the governmental policy involved in the Tennessee Valley Authority Act or the operations thereunder, this appropriation should be viewed and adjudged solely by its present bearing upon the national-defense program.

The expansion of existing plants and facilities and the location of new plants and facilities so necessary for production of equipment, material, and supplies for national defense depend upon many factors, such as existing locations, power supply, transportation facilities, raw materials, strategical geographical location, housing, labor supply, etc. One of the principal materials used in airplane production is aluminum, and larger-scale production of this material is dependent upon available power supply. In addition to the future needs for aluminum, other plant expansion or creation for defense needs are projected for the Tennessee Valley Authority area, and the power program to be undertaken by the joint resolution is very definitely tied into the projects and purposes that have been provided for under defense appropriations and authorizations heretofore enacted at this session as well as those that are to be considered in connection with the new program outlined by the President in his message of yesterday.

A survey of power sources by the Advisory Commission indicates the Tennessee Valley Authority area offers a quick solution with respect to securing additional power for aluminum production and the provision of facilities for the manufacture of other defense equipment and materials. Fortunately the Tennessee Valley Authority development has reached such a stage that additional generating facilities can be installed at existing dams and the organization and plans are ready for starting immediate work on additional facilities. All existing power installations, both those of the Tennessee Valley Authority and private companies in adjoining territory, are now being taxed to the limit to meet normal demands, and presently scheduled installations will only care for normal growth in demands, without regard to the new demands of national defense.

The total defense program for the Tennessee Valley Authority as initiated under the joint resolution involves a total of $65,800,000 on the following appropriation schedule: $25,000,000 for the fiscal year 1941, $29,800,000 for the fiscal year 1942, and $11,000,000 for the fiscal year 1943. It consists of (1) a storage project with power installation at the site, (2) installation of additional capacity in empty stalls at existing down-river projects to utilize the added flow contributed by the storage project, (3) the construction of additional steam electrical-generating facilities, and (4) the construction of the new transmission facilities required on account of this added generating capacity. The following is a more detailed description of these projects:

"1. Cherokee Dam: A storage dam and hydroelectric power plant to be built on the Holston River near Jefferson City, Tenn. This project will cost $36,000,000, will have a useful storage capacity of 1,400,000 acre-feet, and will have an installed capacity of 90,000 kilowatts. The appropriation will provide $11,000,000 for initial expenditure on this project. This amount, together with $19,000,000 in the fiscal year 1942 and $6,000,000 in the fiscal year 1943, will enable the Authority to have the storage from this project available in the spring of 1942 and the generating units at the site on the line in the fall of 1942. The storage and generating units at this project, together with additional generating units at Wilson and Pickwick Dams, as described below, will increase the continuous firm-power capacity of the Tennessee Valley Authority power system by 120,000 kilowatts.

"2. Generating units No. 11 and No. 12 at Wilson and No. 4 at Pickwick: The appropriation will provide $3,500,000 to start installation of two additional 26,000-kilowatt generating units at Wilson Dam and one additional 36,000-kilowatt unit at Pickwick Dam. This amount, together with $1,800,000 in the fiscal year 1942, will enable the Authority to have these three units with a total capacity of 88,000 kilowatts on the line by the spring of 1942, at which time the storage from the Holston project will be available to increase the low-water flow through all main river projects.

"3. Steam-electric generating facilities: The appropriation will provide $7,500,000 to start construction of additional steam-electric generating facilities in the area served by the Authority with an installed capacity of approximately 120,000 kilowatts. This amount, together with $3,000,000 in the fiscal year 1942, will be sufficient to have these facilities on the line by December 1941. The Authority will be assisted in the planning and design of these facilities by a nationally recognized engineering firm specializing in design of steam plants.

"4. Transmission facilities: The appropriation will provide $3,000,000 to start construction of the transmission facilities needed to tie the generating facilities described above into the Tennessee Valley Authority power system and to carry this power to the market. It is estimated that an additional $6,000,000 in fiscal year 1942 and $5,000,000 in fiscal year 1943 will be required for this purpose."

The completion of the above projects will increase the generating capacity of the T. V. A. by 298,000 kilowatts. The emergency schedule to be followed will make this capacity and the attendant continuous firm power available for use on the following dates:

Date	Plant	Installed capacity, kilowatts	Firm power, continuous, kilowatts
December 1941	Steam	120,000	100,000
February 1942	Pickwick No. 4	36,000
March 1942	Wilson No. 11	26,000
April 1942	Wilson No. 12	26,000
Do	Holston storage, used down river [1]		80,000
August 1942	Holston No. 1 [1]	30,000	30,000
September 1942	Holston No. 2 [1]	30,000	10,000
October 1942	Holston No. 3 [1]	30,000
Total increase		298,000	220,000

[1] At Cherokee Dam.

The urgency of providing an appropriation now lies primarily in the time factor of water storage. Delay in starting work on the proposed storage dam and making contracts for generating equipment may have the ultimate effect of a year's loss of time in the initial utilization of additional water power. It is planned to have the Cherokee Dam ready to store the spring floodwaters of 1942. Delay of weeks or even of days, considering the unforeseen contingencies which may occur during construction causing further delay, may mean a defeat of these important features of national defense. Prompt initiation of work on the steam electric plant is also highly necessary in order that it may be completed on schedule and supplement water power generation during the low-water season.

The joint resolution follows the customary terms of Tennessee Valley Authority normal appropriations with one exception. A clause has been added suspending, during the fiscal year 1941, the provisions of existing law requiring competitive bidding, in order to expedite completion of such projects as are determined to be essential to the national defense by the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense. This authority follows that granted to the military and naval services in the emergency, and is an important factor in eliminating the very considerable delay that ensues normally from advertisement, consideration of bids, and making of awards under the competitive procedure. It should be remembered in this connection that a large proportion of the Tennessee Valley Authority funds are expendable on construction labor under force account instead of by the contract method so that the waiving of competition will apply to procurement of materials, supplies, and equipment, in connection with those projects determined to be essential to national defense by the Advisory Commission.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on July 9, 1940, hearing was had by the Subcommittee on the Deficiencies, of the Appropriations Committee, on House Joint Resolution 583, which this rule makes in order.

At this hearing there appeared Mr. David E. Lilienthal, vice chairman of the Board of Directors, and Col. T. B.

Parker, chief engineer, of the Tennessee Valley Authority, each of whom emphasized the urgent need for the additional facilities for which House Joint Resolution 583 provides the initial appropriation.

There also appeared and strongly urged the vital necessity, in the interest of national defense, that this appropriation should be made, Mr. Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., and Mr. William S. Knudsen, members of the National Defense Advisory Commission. They were accompanied by Mr. John D. Biggers, deputy commissioner under Mr. Knudsen.

Mr. Stettinius, it will be recalled, was formerly vice president of General Motors Corporation, and until he accepted as a patriotic duty the President's appointment to the National Defense Advisory Commission was chairman of the board of directors and member of the finance committee of the United States Steel Corporation. Mr. Knudsen, I believe you all know, was president of General Motors Corporation until he answered the President's call to duty. Mr. Biggers was president of the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. All of these gentlemen urged the importance of expediting the appropriating of funds necessary to provide the additional facilities of T. V. A. for generation of power necessary for the production of aluminum needed in the manufacture of airplanes.

With these gentlemen appeared Mr. Gano Dunn, one of the foremost electrical and mechanical engineers and consultants of the United States. For many years Mr. Dunn has been and is now president of the J. G. White Engineering Corporation of New York, one of the oldest consulting and constructing engineering companies in the United States, which designed and built the present 60,000-kilowatt steam station of the Tennessee Valley Authority at Muscle Shoals. Mr. Dunn also stressed the vital importance of immediate construction of the facilities for which House Joint Resolution 583 provides an initial appropriation.

At the hearing before the Committee on Rules on application for this rule, Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Dunn also appeared and reiterated and strongly reemphasized their statements as to the importance, in the interest of national defense, that the additional facilities contemplated by the joint resolution should be provided at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Speaker, none of these gentleman to whom I have just referred have in the past been very ardent advocates of the T. V. A. They have had many criticisms to offer, but each and every one of them emphasized their conviction that if we wish to carry out our national-defense program it is vitally essential that we make this appropriation without delay. I understand also that another eminent gentleman, Mr. Wendell Willkie, the candidate for President on the Republican ticket, made a statement strongly endorsing this appropriation. It is my understanding that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] will call the attention of the House to certain statements made by Mr. Willkie. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] does not do so, or if I have been misinformed as to his intention to quote Mr. Willkie, I shall take pleasure in quoting Mr. Willkie later in this debate.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] to use some of his time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, there is no opposition that I know of on this side to the rule. The rule is fair and provides for the consideration of this bill and for a fair and free discussion of it on its merits.

The proponents of the bill make the argument that the bill is purely for national defense. It is quite clear that some parts of the bill and possibly more than half the appropriation are directly for needed national defense. The issue, therefore, is whether we should take the entire appropriation or just single out those parts that are essential to the continuation of the national-defense program.

Some of the witnesses before the committee who have always opposed Government operation and ownership have favored these appropriations or parts of the appropriations. I would prefer to have the members of the Committee on Appropriations themselves, particularly on the minority side, go into the details of the arguments, because all I know is what I read in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations. Mr. Gano Dunn and Mr. Stettinius are claimed to have gone on record before the committee for these appropriations. Whether they did so merely in principle or whether they went into the details is a matter for the committee members to make clear to the House. The Members of the House, Republicans and Democrats alike, are entitled to this information before they vote on this very large appropriation for national defense. Every Member of the House, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, desires to vote every single dollar that is necessary for adequate national defense and for preparedness at the present time.

Mr. Wendell Willkie is quoted in the hearings, and it is up to the members of the committee to make clear whether his remarks apply to the entire bill or only to a part of the bill, or only to the bill in principle. For the benefit of the Members of the House and for their information I shall read from the hearings. Mr. Gano Dunn, who is a very well known engineer, is the speaker. This appears on page 16 of the hearings:

> I would like to read a statement by Mr. Willkie into the record. Here is what Mr. Willkie said on that subject on June 15, when this proposal was presented in a memorandum to the President. On June 12 it was presented, and it became public, without our knowledge. The reporters went ahead and saw Wendell Willkie, expecting to get a grand slam from him against doing this thing. I will quote from this newspaper interview of June 14, in a Scripps-Howard paper. This is what Mr. Willkie said:
> "Nothing is more important than defense, and there is nothing which might and will mask more political logrolling than the flag-waving variety of national defense. But if some impartial group, the United States Army or its engineers, for instance, do say that the completion of these dams is a link in our national defense, the dams should be completed and as rapidly as those charged with our defense think necessary."
> That is a quotation from Mr. Willkie.

It is claimed that this entire project, amounting to $65,800,000, will provide for 220,000 kilowatts, and that only half, or less than half, of that amount is needed—somewhere between 65,000 and 85,000 kilowatts—in order to produce sufficient aluminum for our airplane production in the future and for certain powder plants, I believe two in number, and for other preparedness purposes; so that we do not actually require the 220,000 kilowatts, and probably not half that much. Therefore, as this issue is presented here, it is a question in my mind whether we should vote for the whole bill or only that part we actually need for national defense at the present time or in the immediate future.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this is a national-defense measure, and further in view of the fact that just before this Congress recessed several weeks ago, I put into the RECORD a letter from The Adjutant General of the United States showing figures indicating that our volunteer system had not failed, that they had filled all the quotas they demanded in order to secure enlistments in the Regular Army, may I say that was quite a surprise to me as a Member of Congress, and it must be a surprise to other Members of Congress. I was lead to believe, from reading the New York Times and the New York Herald Tribune, and other papers that are so enthusiastic about universal military conscription, that our volunteer system had broken down and that we were unable to secure adequate enlistments in order to fulfill the quotas provided for by Congress. The highest authority in the Army—The Adjutant General—put in writing a list of all the quotas that had been filled, showing that each quota had been filled on time and that in every instance where we asked for recruits those recruits were forthcoming, something like 20,000 in the month of June alone. I believe the Members of Congress, if they thought that the volunteer system had failed, or if they knew that the volunteer system had failed, might then properly favor for the purposes of national defense the universal military conscription bill. I want to go definitely on record in these few minutes that I am opposed——

Mr. COX. I should like to inquire of the gentleman if he does not think he is getting somewhat far afield in the line of discussion he is now carrying on, when the question before us is the adoption of a rule making in order the consideration of a bill which extends the T. V. A.? We ought not to cheapen the procedure of presenting rules by Members claiming time and then taking advantage of the opportunity to discuss questions that are entirely foreign to the issue involved.

Mr. FISH. I have never seen the gentleman fail to take any opportunity to say anything he wanted at any time in this House of Representatives—never—and I am not opposing that either.

Mr. COX. Yes; but I always stand on my own feet and speak my own mind, and I am never caught traveling in two different directions at the same time.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman may stand on his own feet, but the gentleman is very often wrong. I do not yield any more to the gentleman from Georgia. Let the gentleman criticize anybody else, but I will take care of myself any time the gentleman wants to start an argument.

Mr. COX. I did not want to make a point of order against the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is becoming a common scold in this House. He is getting into the habit of criticizing everybody. He is always right and everybody else is wrong. I know the gentleman is for universal military service, and so does everybody else in the House, and that is the gentleman's right, but do not try to cut off anybody who wants to speak against it in time of peace or until every effort has been made to exhaust the volunteer system.

Mr. COX. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman insists, I make the point of order——

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. That the gentleman is not in order in discussing the universal draft.

Mr. FISH. I am speaking for national defense, and the gentleman knows that the main purpose of this bill is national defense and I shall proceed.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I invoke the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order on the resolution pending.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from New York has been proceeding in order. This rule provides for the consideration of a bill which has been dressed up as a national-defense measure, and the gentleman's discussion has been well within the rules of the House. I sincerely hope that he will not yield further to the gentleman from Georgia, a champion of compulsory military training, to interrupt his national-defense argument.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 more minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this question of national defense is the biggest issue before the Congress and will continue to be the biggest single issue until we adjourn, and the facts should be put before the Members of the House.

I have already stated that the volunteer system has not failed, and if it does fail, then it is time to consider some other kind of legislation. The proposed universal military service or conscription bill, Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, is the worst type of regimentation. For years past we on this side of the House have been opposing the regimentation of the New Deal, and there are even some on the Democratic side who have joined with us, and I am thinking also of the gentleman from Georgia, who has often opposed regimentation of the American people. It is now seriously proposed, before we find out that the volunteer system has failed, to go even further and regiment American youth and conscript them in time of peace. We should go slow and make haste slowly before we import these foreign forms of militarism and autocracy into America or bring Hitlerism over here. Our answer to the dictator nations is to make democracy work here and not to subvert by a military dictatorship.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Why is it that the New Deal compulsory military service bill, which was originally sponsored by the multimillionaire publisher of the New York Times, from the gentleman's State, Col. Julius Ochs Adler, exempts Members of Congress from its draft provisions? Why should not Members of Congress be included, so that all gentlemen who vote for the bill may have an opportunity to be drafted and serve Uncle Sam for $21 a month, whether they come from the State of Georgia or from any other part of the country?

Mr. FISH. I cannot speak for the New York Times. I am talking against the principle of universal military conscription in time of peace and regimentation of that kind. If we need it in time of war we will be for it, but why bring it up now when we can do away with the 3-year Army enlistments and reduce the period of enlistment to 1 year and probably get 1,000,000 American soldiers in a few months' time, and we do not need any more than 1,000,000 soldiers in the present emergency.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. Is it not a fact that 22 years ago before voluntary enlistments were abandoned, there were 1,300,000 men who volunteered for service in the World War?

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman is correct. Members of Congress should have some faith in the patriotism of our American youth, and if we need 1,000,000 American boys to serve in our volunteer forces in the Regular Army and the National Guard I am convinced that if we reduce the term to 1 year enlistment we will get at least a million men. We ought to give them a chance to serve instead of dragging in this conscription bill here. Whether it originates from the New York Times or not I do not know, but I know this: It does not originate from the American Farm Bureau, from the National Grange, from the American Federation of Labor or any labor organization. It may originate from the New York Times or it may not, but it certainly does not represent the viewpoint of the wage earners and the farmers of this country, and here we have it thrust upon us and we are told we cannot even discuss it under the pending measure for national defense.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. STEFAN. Is it the sincere opinion and belief of the gentleman that the voluntary program of enlistment has been exhausted? People in my district who are opposed to conscription in peacetime are entitled to know now how much effort has been put forward to secure enlistments on the popular voluntary basis. I want them to know the facts now. Now will you tell us: Has the voluntary-enlistment program failed?

Mr. FISH. I am glad the gentleman has asked me that question. It is not my opinion, it is my knowledge, based on a letter of The Adjutant General, the highest authority in the Army, who states it has not failed, that the Army has filled every quota asked for, and I put this letter into the RECORD of July 11 and it is a part of the record today. It is not my opinion, because I do not know the number of enlistments, but that is the record compiled by the War Department.

I am definitely in favor of reducing the term of enlistment from 3 years to 1 year. I believe if you do that it will solve the whole problem, and that you will get all of the volunteers you want in the next few months, and that the Regular Army and the National Guard will fill its quota, and you will have a million men in the Regular Army and National Guard combined. But until you have tried that out do not bring in this conscription bill in time of peace and regiment the American youth into a huge military machine as was done by Hitler and other foreign dictators. This is not the American way but the road to militarism and dictatorship.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. While the gentleman is discussing conscription, or the so-called compulsory military training bill, I want the RECORD to show at this point that as one Member of Congress, I have been impressed with the opposition voiced by my constituents to the measure as now prepared for introduction and consideration in this body. The decision we will make on this matter is of supreme importance. We must proceed most carefully.

Mr. FISH. And I go further to say that if that bill ever comes out in its present form, it will never pass the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute more.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I commend the position the gentleman is taking, and notice that the bill, according to the newspaper accounts of it, includes for registration, men 64 years old. I wonder if they are going to provide a cane with every man of that age for that training.

Mr. FISH. In the name of common sense, if we are to have universal military conscription, the whole bill, in its present form, ought to be scrapped. If we are to have partial military conscription, we ought to bring in a bill limiting the ages from 19 to 24 or 19 to 25, because what we need are youth, not old men to serve and fight. The bill as proposed is a monstrosity of regimentation that would devour our free institutions and liberties and create a military dictatorship in the United States.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If the danger is so great that we have to pass this Col. Adolph Ochs Adler compulsory military-service bill why should there not be included in that bill a provision to draft and conscript wealth, including multimillionaire Adolph Ochs Adler's millions to pay for the defense program, in view of the almost bankrupt condition of the Treasury of the United States?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes more.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield. I am very glad that the gentleman from Wisconsin has raised that question. It is a matter purely of facts. The American Legion, in 1920 or 1921, went on record in favor of a universal military-service bill. I attended that Legion convention, as did many others here, and it was thought at that time that it meant military conscription in time of war. That was my interpretation of it, and that it would include the drafting of wealth, labor, manpower, industry, and the veterans all together. Carrying out that viewpoint, former Representative Royal Johnson, back in about 1921, introduced a bill to conscript wealth and soldiers in time of war.

Others of the House did the same. I did it several times. I am still for that principle, but that is not written into this Wadsworth-Burke bill. That has nothing to do with industry or wealth. That has to do with soldiers alone, and I am not in favor of that principle except in time of war, and only in time of peace if our volunteer system fails.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If it is necessary to draft men in time of peace, then the draft bill should include drafting wealth to pay for the defense program, and taking the wealth of these "multimillionaire draft men proponents" to pay the cost of preparing for and fighting wars which they foment with their propaganda.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman asked another question, and that is, Against whom is this bill aimed? Whom do we in America fear? That is a fair question. Do we fear Hitler, who seems to be afraid of undertaking the adventure of going 20 miles overseas to attack England, when he would have 3,000 miles to come over here? My own idea is that that is preposterous, when we have the greatest Navy in the world, seven times greater than the German Navy; or that we should even fear Hitler and Mussolini together, to make it necessary that we should rush in and draft two or three million American youth. We have the biggest Navy in the world and have an air force expanding at the potential rate of 800 airplanes a month. Yet we seem to be in a hysteria of fear that America is about to be attacked, and that we cannot take care of an enemy like Hitler, who is apparently afraid to send his Army 20 miles across the sea to attack England.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute more. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is talking about a very important matter. In my largest town in the last issue of the paper there is an editorial stating that we have an armory and that we have a National Guard, and there is no one there now. They have all sorts of exhortations for volunteers and airplanes dropping leaflets, they have done everything they can, and there is not a single enlistment and the newspaper said they would not get any. And yet you will spend $15,000,000,000 for armaments, without any men to use it. I represent as patriotic a section as any. How are you going to answer that?

Mr. FISH. I do not know about the National Guard. I do know about the Regular Army. However, I believe in the National Guard which is highly efficient and I do not want to see it undermined. If you will reduce the period of enlistment to 1 year you will get all the men you want for the Army and National Guard. But my opposition to this whole un-American proposition in time of peace is this, that if you regiment American youth and bring over the European war system of conscription to the United States that is your first step to creating a dictatorship in America, and I am against it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not concur with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] that there is no opposition or that there should be no opposition to this resolution. I am opposed to the rule, and I think that anybody who understands the background and the purposes of this bill ought to vote against bringing it before the House at this time.

My reasons are, first, that it is not what it purports to be. It is not what it purports to be because it is not a national-defense measure. It is a measure dressed up in the cloak of national defense, the purpose of which is to enable the Tennessee Valley Authority to get more money out of the Treasury of the United States.

In the second place, I have great respect for Mr. Knudsen, Mr. Stettinius, and Mr. Gano Dunn, and I am convinced that those gentlemen are being deceived by those who are behind this measure—the people who are behind this measure outside of the House, namely, the Tennessee Valley Authority. We all know that the Tennessee Valley Authority is dominated by an individual by the name of David E. Lilienthal, one of the vice directors of the Board.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes; I yield briefly.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman disclose who this master mind happens to be that is fooling these gullible people, Mr. Knudsen, Mr. Stettinius, and so on?

Mr. McLEAN. I have just stated, Mr. David E. Lilienthal, Vice Director of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. DINGELL. Where did the gentleman get that information?

Mr. McLEAN. I base that on experience. The Tennessee Valley Authority was incorporated, and they were instructed to build a dam at Norristown in Tennessee, and they were given $40,000,000 with which to build it. They were told to operate Wilson Dam and they were told to make an investigation of the Tennessee Valley and to recommend to Congress what further operations there ought to be down there, so that the Congress could guide and direct their activities and their further operations. It was not very long before we learned that Mr. Lilienthal had been capable enough to get the President to give him out of relief funds $75,000,000, with instructions to proceed to build Wheeler Dam, of which the Congress knew nothing at all. Mr. Lilienthal is one of the most scientific money-getters for the proposition he is connected with that has ever come under my observation.

It was not very long before I learned that Mr. Lilienthal, Dr. Harcourt Morgan, and Dr. Arthur E. Morgan had incorporated a company under the laws of the State of Delaware, without any authority of Congress, and they knew they needed the authority of Congress, because it is in their records that they said they ought to go to Congress to get it, but they did not. They organized as a corporation, Electric Home and Farm Authority, under the laws of the State of Delaware, and they got a million dollars of Government funds to finance that corporation. Now somebody is trying to unravel it. They only accounted for $750,000 when the bill was before us, and another corporation was organized to take it out of their hands.

This Electric Home and Farm Authority had a contract with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This illegal Delaware corporation that was organized to sell ice boxes, irons, hair curlers, vacuum cleaners, and other things on the installment plan—the Government of the United States going into the retail installment business—had a contract as a private corporation, with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to borrow $10,000,000 as additional capital to go into the retail business of selling electrical paraphernalia, under the auspices of the great Government of the United States.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield right at that point?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. What has that got to do with what is under discussion now? This is a matter involving national defense.

Mr. McLEAN. I am going to show you that David E. Lilienthal saw an opportunity in the tempo of the times, in the hysteria of the times—this clever individual who knows how to dip money out of the Treasury of the United States, knew how to come forward and catch the public mind, catch busy public officials off guard, perhaps, and add $65,800,000 to the billion dollars already spent in the Tennessee Valley.

Then they organized, in order that they might have another agency of the Government of the United States for borrowing purposes, what was known as the Tennessee Valley Cooperatives. That was organized under the laws of the State of Tennessee. Every time they organize a corporation they create officers, and they put men on the pay roll, not at nominal salaries, not a few men, but hundreds of them at substantial salaries, about which this Congress of the United States has nothing to do.

This Tennessee Valley Cooperatives that they organized, what its purpose was I do not know. Somebody said it was to teach people how to grow highland potatoes in the lowlands, and vice versa; teach people how to live a more abundant life. As an agency of the Government of the United States, they turned over to Mr. Lilienthal and the Tennessee Valley Authority directors $300,000 for the Tennessee Valley Cooperatives. T. V. A. has spent a billion dollars and has had 7 years and even now is not ready to provide its part for the national defense. They now want $65,800,000 and 2 years more.

I have some memoranda here I will read you about the necessity for this thing.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Does the gentleman believe that Mr. Stettinius, Mr. Knudsen, and Mr. Gano Dunn are such gullible persons that they can be deceived by one clever man? Or does he believe they have made their recommendation on the basis of their experience, their investigation, and their technical skill?

Mr. McLEAN. How long did that investigation take? Three weeks, was it not?

Mr. DINGELL. It would not take Bill Knudsen 3 days to investigate it.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I would say that Mr. Knudsen was not a very gullible man.

Mr. McLEAN. He did not testify for this bill.

I do not say that any of them are gullible; I would not apply that adjective to any of them; but I say they are earnest, busy, enthusiatic men, and I think I am privileged to say they share the human frailties of the rest of us. When a man like Mr. Lilienthal comes to them with the ear of the President of the United States and with a copy of Senate Document No. 241, bearing the President's signature, they are likely to fall into mistakes of judgment, maybe, once in a while. But I will give you their latest word about it.

We need aluminum. In the first progress report of the National Defense Council Dr. George J. Mead, aeronautical adviser to Mr. Knudsen, said:

> Taking into account aircraft now on hand the new production program already determined upon and now well under way is expected to give the Army 25,000 airplanes and the Navy 10,000 by July of 1942.

It is important to have dates in mind here. Bear in mind that none of this power will be ready for delivery from the steam plant until December 1941, and from the hydro plant until August, September, or October 1942.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. That is when the peak is going to occur.

Mr. McLEAN. When will this national-defense program find its completion? I mark its start by the speech of the President here on May 16. What is the date we are working for when we are going to have the defense we need and when our demand for supplies will fall off and when the American people will know how much more taxes they have got to pay for it? Are we going to go on for 2 years? Is it 2 years or longer. Is it going to be 5 years? Whatever it is, listen to what they say:

> Plans have been completed for the program for 25,000 additional Army and Navy airplanes during the next 2 years and the placing of orders totaling $100,000,000 since July 1.

Now, listen to Mr. Stettinius. On July 13 Mr. Stettinius stated——

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Where did he state it?

Mr. McLEAN. In his press conference or in his report. It was published in the New York Times of Sunday, July 14:

> Mr. Stettinius summarized the current situation regarding nine critical and strategic materials as follows:
> "Aluminum—essential to the airplane program. Industry has advised the Commission of plans for expansion and its willingness to erect plant to cover entire program as needs develop."

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed just long enough to read three lines.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired under the rule.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not at this time desire to engage in debate with my good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] on the question of national defense. The gentleman has developed the habit of shifting his position on public questions as they arise too rapidly to anticipate just where he will stand any considerable while before the necessity for the making of decision rises. I will debate that question with the gentleman when the issue comes up for the decision of this House.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. No; if the gentleman will excuse me, please.

Mr. Speaker, when members of the Appropriations Committee came before the Committee on Rules on their application for this rule, I raised the query as to whether the bill was business or politics, and I was assured by gentlemen appearing in behalf of securing a rule that it was business and not politics. The reason I made the inquiry was that I knew, as every one of you knows, that different agencies of the Government may be expected to take advantage of this demand for national defense to secure legislation that will give them a stronger position in the Government and a larger share of the appropriations that are to be made in behalf of national defense. This very bill that is made in order by the rule happens to be an instance of that kind.

We should not fool ourselves. This happens to be a case where Mr. Lilienthal of the T. V. A. is taking advantage of the necessity to strengthen the national defense in a particular manner to broaden the operations of the T. V. A. So the gentleman from New Jersey was upon safe grounds in his references to Mr. Lilienthal. But the very fact that that condition does exist, the fact that that statement happened to be the truth, is no reason in this particular instance why the bill which this rule intends to make in order should not pass. I hold no brief for Lilienthal or any of his kind. If it were within my power, I would drive the whole group of leftist reformers out of the Government. Somebody has said that he would like to see a change in order that he could see a delousing of Washington.

I am not making it that strong, but change or no change in the national administration, I am anxious to see, and I think there is a public need that this Government be de-Lilienthaled, de-Lewised, de-Hillmaned, and de-many others who happen to be under the dominion and the control of the one master mind of America at this hour who is now offering the tremendous political influence which he commands on the block. In the next few days we will know who is willing to pay the price that will get that support.

Mr. Speaker, those who have discussed this question have referred to Mr. Stettinius. There is nobody in this House who questions his fine patriotism or his ability, but he does not know anything about the engineering questions involved in this bill. He brought before the Rules Committee Mr. Gano Dunn, whose name has been given you and for whom he vouched upon his own reputation. It was Mr. Dunn who gave the Rules Committee the information upon which it took action.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Dunn has not been overcome by the so-called master mind, Lilienthal. Mr. Dunn is no push-over for anybody. He happens to be the master electrical engineer in the country, possibly the world.

But Mr. Dunn came before us not only as a man of reputation and fine integrity but as a man of understanding and of fine courage. He does not believe in all of this uplift stuff that we have been engaged in.

He does not want to communize or socialize America, but he does want to do the manly thing. He wants to contribute to the national defense which we need, not because of any important pending danger but as a matter of safety, and from the standpoint of safety Mr. Dunn stated that upon his investigation there was immediate necessity for this activity and for this development. He would not support it, he stated, as an original proposition. He stated it serves as an adjunct to what already has been done and while the cost of execution of the project is higher than should be under some circumstances, that its original cost is recaptured a hundred times over in the sense that it improves the whole system. Mr. Dunn made it very plain before our committee, and I am sure before the Appropriations Committee, that having seized, having taken over, or having borrowed every other available block of power in the country, there is still a pressing necessity for the power that this project will provide, and it must be provided if the aluminum necessities of this Government are to be supplied according to the plans that have been outlined.

Let me say to you Republicans who look with suspicion upon T. V. A., and I am not going to blame you, and to you Democrats who think as I do, if there be many, and I think there are, those of us who continue in spite of everything to resist what seems to be the purpose on the part of some to socialize America, our philosophies are not annihilated, and there should be no shock resulting to us because of our support of the bill that this rule intends to make in order. I hope that we may relegate to the rear our general objections to proposals of this kind and may unite in support of this measure, because in uniting we are expressing a concerted desire and determination of giving support to the administration in the effort to strengthen the national defense. There is no politics in this proposal and none should be put in it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], in quoting from statements concerning the attitude of Mr. Wendell Willkie in approval of the purposes of House Joint Resolution 583, overlooked a further statement on page 4 of the report of the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations. When Mr. Stettinius was testifying he made the following statement, among others:

Mr. Dunn—

Referring to Mr. Gano Dunn—was the power-expert member of the Nitrate Commission of the War Department prior to the World War and at that time made studies of the Tennessee River with reference to its suitability and source for power for the manufacture of nitrates. In the lawsuit—this will amuse some of you—

I am still quoting Mr. Stettinius:

In the lawsuit—this will amuse some of you—in the lawsuit which Wendell Willkie and the Commonwealth & Southern brought several years ago to test the constitutionality of the T. V. A. Act, he hired Mr. Dunn's firm to represent him against the Government. Mr. Dunn has previously been opposed to the Government's policy of entering into competition with private utilities, but he now is strongly in favor of this request of the T. V. A., purely from the standpoint of the emergency at hand and the interests of the national defense.

Mr. Stettinius went on further to state:

I have been over this matter for approaching 3 weeks now with Mr. Dunn and the members of our staff, and I am perfectly confident, gentlemen, that from the standpoint of our aluminum production to meet the aviation program which Mr. Knudsen is responsible for, and a great many other developments in the southeastern section, we must have this added power.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] asked:

And you cannot get it from private industry?

Mr. Stettinius responded:

We cannot, sir; and it cannot be delayed for reasons which Mr. Dunn will bring out in his testimony. Not weeks, but days, count now from the standpoint of speeding this work up so that we can get the full effect of the spring floods 2 years hence.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I ask unanimous consent to insert in connection with my remarks the report made by Mr. Dunn to Mr. Stettinius on this subject, together with certain introductory remarks in the hearings before the Appropriations Committee, which indicate the necessity for the construction for which the joint resolution provides an initial appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to, as printed at pages 8–10 of the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations, is as follows:

LETTER IN RE INCREASE IN POWER CAPACITY OF T. V. A.

Mr. WOODRUM. Now I want you to start off in your own way and give us what the picture is, and then we will ask you questions.

Mr. DUNN. We did not expect to come before this committee. We were under the impression when the President had sent in a recommendation several weeks ago, at the time the matter was before the Senate, that his recommendation would be approved. Before we approved this increase in power, I was asked by Mr. Stettinius to write him all the reasons that led us to approve the increase, and I have here a letter which was not intended to be presented to this committee, nor for publication, but as I read it over I rather think it is the best presentation of the case that we could make, especially as it was made as an interoffice explanation of the purpose in hand. I would like to put it in the record, if you will allow me.

Mr. WOODRUM. All right, sir.

Mr. DUNN. It is dated July 1, 1940, addressed to Mr. Stettinius, from Gano Dunn, and the subject is entitled "Justification of approval of 300,000 kilowatts increase in power capacity of the Tennessee Valley Authority."

It would bore you to have me read that letter in full, and therefore I will only take up the high spots in it, if you wish.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; and put the whole letter in the record, if you will.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MEMORANDA FOR E. R. STETTINIUS, JR.

MONDAY, JULY 1, 1940.

From: Gano Dunn.

Subject: Justification of approval of 300,000 kilowatts increase in power capacity of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

In response to your request of June 24, Mr. Raynor and I have prepared a documented chronology of the Tennessee Valley Authority power increase covering all the transactions of which I am aware from June 8 to June 28, inclusive, which chronology in bound form is attached hereto.

The calculations of Mr. Batt and Mr. Folsom for an estimated annual requirement of aluminum (exhibit XVI) based on a production rate of ——— planes per year, beginning July 1, 1942, indicates a shortage of 60,000,000 pounds per year over and beyond the increased production of aluminum that will by that time have been brought about by what may be called a normal increase in the rate of production.

This so-called normal increase involves 30,000 kilowatts of water power to be developed at Nantahala in Tennessee and 30,000 kilowatts more of water power to be developed at Glenville in Tennessee both by the Aluminum Co. itself plus 60,000 kilowatts which by July 1, 1942, will have been developed at Bonneville in Washington and applied to aluminum production there. This represents 120,000 kilowatts of additional power for aluminum before any increase in the capacity of T. V. A. has been considered.

In arriving at the 60,000,000 pounds per year shortage of aluminum after July 1, 1942, due allowance has been made for the supply of aluminum derived from recoveries from scrap and other sources, but no curtailment in normal consumption or its growth during 2 years has been planned.

The energy required to produce aluminum is variously estimated at from 10 to 12 kilowatt-hours per pound. On the assumption that the plants run continuously day and night, which is what is termed at 100 percent load factor, the production of 60,000,000 pounds of aluminum represents a power requirement of approximately 80,000 kilowatts.

There are several possible sources for the whole or part of this power. Among these are the Santee-Cooper project now under construction in South Carolina, the Bonneville Project through a still further increase in the power from that project over the 60,000 kilowatts that has already been included, and there is the possibility of some increase in the power from Boulder Dam, although this latter is likely to be preempted for other projects. There are also power increases in varying amounts possible from other sources.

No increase is possible from T. V. A. with its present installed capacity, for this capacity is not only fully loaded but often overloaded and makes maximum use of the limited amount of water that is available. As the documented chronology will show (exhibit I), the Aluminum Co. has already been given notice of the possible necessity of cutting off 30,000 kilowatts of its secondary power on account of low water.

From the point of view of national defense an increase in power for the production of aluminum can best be obtained by an increase in the capacity of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The principal plant of the Aluminum Co. of America, which is practically the sole manufacturer of aluminum, is located in the Tennessee Valley. Notwithstanding the increase of that company's plant at Bonneville the extension of their plant in the Tennessee Valley is likely to be accomplished with greater certainty and with greater facility than the building of new plants elsewhere, having in mind the time limitation within which the airplane-production program must be accomplished. The same argument that applies favorably to the extension of an existing aluminum plant applies favorably also to the extension of an existing power system such as that of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Also, in recommending power expansion in the Tennessee Valley we had in view creating new sources, not all of one kind of power, but partly of water power and partly of steam power, which gives two alternatives on which to rely in the event that something went wrong with the program.

The increase in the hydro power of the Tennessee Valley Authority is advantageous because, by installing 90,000 kilowatts of generating equipment at the Holston Dam, the water impounded by that dam will not only energize the 90,000 kilowatts there installed but an additional 90,000 kilowatts to be installed at the Pickwick and Wilson Dams farther down the river. This is because the Holston Dam happens to be the highest one upstream from other dams in the Tennessee Valley over which other dams the water which is stored in the Holston Reservoir is also discharged with accompanying power, which would not be the case if the Holston Dam stood alone by itself. By this particular development of the Tennessee Valley it may be said that we get 2 kilowatts of power for every 1 kilowatt that the Holston Dam itself develops.

Our approval of 120,000 kilowatts of steam plant to be located near the Watts Bar Dam has the effect of transforming a large amount of what is termed secondary or dump power resulting from the variations in the flow of the river into primary or continuous power which the Tennessee Valley Authority system greatly needs. The amount of power we approved was 180,000 kilowatts of hydro and 120,000 kilowatts of steam, but while this constitutes a total of 300,000 kilowatts of increased installed capacity it does not constitute 300,000 kilowatts of increased power, since the hydro power and the steam power overlap and they are not both in full operation at the same time. The net amount of increased power made available by the 300,000 kilowatts of installed capacity is in the neighborhood of 220,000 kilowatts.

If the increased requirements for aluminum were the only increased requirements for the national defense for which power will be needed in the Tennessee Valley, an increase in capacity of 100,000 kilowatts would have been adequate to take care of 80,000 kilowatts demand for aluminum and allow some spare capacity.

But, in addition to the national defense demands for aluminum involved in the airplane program, there are other power increases in prospect for the Tennessee Valley, for instance, 7,000 kilowatts to supply the new Du Pont power plant at Memphis (Tennessee Powder Co.) for which a contract has just been let. There is also the requirement of 14,000 kilowatts for a proposed paper mill at Savannah, Tenn., and 8,000 kilowatts for metallurgical operations at Wilson Dam. There will also be by the time of 2 years hence an estimated increase of 50,000 kilowatts in the requirements of the various municipalities in the Tennessee Valley which now are supplied with power by the Tennessee Valley Authority. These increases besides the increase for aluminum and others which may yet arise in the development of the defense program fully justify the increased capacity which we have approved.

In the case of hydro expansion at T. V. A., the construction work can be performed in less than the usual time, because as we have been informed, the designs are wholly complete and the technical staffs now finishing one of the other projects can be immediately transferred to the Holston River project. The Tennessee Valley engineers assure us that under these circumstances the hydro expansion can be ready within 24 months if the appropriation is promptly approved but that if there is delay in starting the hydro work through delay in making the appropriation the power will be delayed nearly a year through missing the opportunity of filling the new reservoir with the spring floods.

With respect to the steam expansion, we are informed that, provided orders are placed for the machinery prior to July 15 and provided authorization is given to employ negotiated contracts instead of competitive bidding, the first part of the steam power can be available within 18 months.

As has already been mentioned, additional power will probably be available from the hydroelectric development at Bonneville in Washington, but the plans for the aluminum requirements (exhibit XVI) already include 60,000 kilowatts additional from there by July 1, 1942.

More power than this it is not considered desirable to apply to the production of aluminum at Bonneville because the site is so far from the sources of bauxite, one of the principal raw materials entering into the aluminum production, that the transportation from Tennessee and Arkansas where the material is now found to Bonneville, which is on the Columbia River in the State of Washington, not only involves large additional expense but with the return shipment of the finished product eastward will tend to clog the railroad systems of the country at a time when the requirements of national defense are going to place heavy additional demands upon them.

In selecting the Tennessee Valley as the location for the principal power expansion which we have approved, we have had in mind not only the location there of the principal plant of the Aluminum Co. of America but also the excellence of the organization, technical and otherwise, that has been assembled there. On account of the large developments that have already been made in the Tennessee Valley, their engineers and other staffs are part of a going organization, experienced in the construction of dams and transmission lines to an extent not likely to be found in any entirely new project not yet completed.

GANO DUNN.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCLEAN) there were—ayes 142, noes 30.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 583) making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 583, with Mr. HART in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The first reading of the joint resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the matter presented in this joint resolution is critically necessary for the national-defense program. I believe every Member of this House is committed in some form or another to cooperate for an adequate national defense. There may be some differences of opinion as to what that adequate national defense would call for. Therefore I hope that in the consideration of this resolution we will not undertake to resurrect and reconsider the question of whether or not there should have been a Tennessee Valley development or whether or not the officials now presently connected with the Tennessee Valley Authority should be there or some others put in their places, and that we will in no respect whatever bring up our old prejudices and our old recollections and our old scars of other battles.

In figuring out this defense program two things have been necessary, preeminently necessary. One was to secure an adequate number of trained human beings for our defense effort. The next was to implement those human beings, to give the pilots airplanes to fly, to give the tank drivers tanks to travel with, to give the soldiers guns, armor, ammunition, and quarters, to give the Navy an adequate fleet, and so forth. To do that most important thing the whole procedure was so to coordinate and so to mobilize private industry as to be able to provide these necessary implements of national defense.

It seems to me the President did a very proper and very appropriate thing when he called into the service of the Government the leading private business experts in their particular lines in the United States, regardless of their political affiliations or their ideas of political philosophy, in order to constitute this advisory commission on defense. This is not a Government agency in the ordinary sense. It is purely an advisory commission, Mr. Knudsen heading up that Commission. I doubt if any man in this Chamber would challenge the fact that Mr. Knudsen is probably as well, if not better, qualified than any man in the United States when it comes to the question of mass production, of actually producing expeditiously these necessary implements of national defense. Mr. Knudsen surrounded himself with experts of equal prominence, one of the principal of whom is Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., former chairman of the board of United States Steel. Mr. Knudsen's job is to take the materials and work them into the finished product. The job of Mr. Stettinius is to provide Mr. Knudsen with the raw materials.

These men proceeded, then, to surround themselves with men expert in their own particular lines in order to build up this defense program and get it going. They have been before the Committee on Appropriations several times. I for one wish to record the fact that I believe everything humanly possible is being done to carry out the wishes of Congress and the wishes of the American people that this defense program be expedited and that we not only appropriate money but get something for the money that we appropriate, and get it quickly.

When it comes to the question of producing airplanes, the President laid out a tentative program approximating a program of 50,000 planes a year. This does not mean that we will make 50,000 airplanes this year or next year, but it is a program, it is an objective, to build up and expand, to build new plants if necessary, so that as soon as possible our production of planes will reach the point of 50,000 a year or thereabouts. This program was laid before this Advisory Commission on Defense, and they were asked to do it.

They went to work on the proposition. Mr. Knudsen, in figuring on it, said to Mr. Stettinius:

> We begin on this, and we can build up gradually. This a program that is progressive. We will build up gradually, but by the end of June 1942 we will produce a certain number of planes. Public policy suggests that we should not name the exact number, but it is a number less than 50,000. We will be at a point where industry, expanding industry and new industry, can be on a production of so many thousands of planes a year. But when we reach that time, according to the survey my experts have made, we will be short 60,000,000 pounds of aluminum per year. So as this program is built up to that point, if we are to carry on from there you must simultaneously make provision so that when it reaches that point we will have aluminum in a greater quantity by 60,000,000 pounds a year than we have now.

Hence the beginning of the proposition which is now before the Congress.

No; we do not need the power tomorrow. We have enough aluminum tomorrow to build the number of planes that are laid out tomorrow, but we will be lacking 60,000,000 pounds a year in 1942 of being able to carry on this program.

Why think about building planes in 1942? I believe I am not stating any secret, because it has been in the pubic press, when I say that the British Government is now putting its own funds into America to finance new airplane enterprises in order to furnish them planes on a basis of 3,000 a month for their own use, and they cannot get them into production until 1944. So they are looking ahead and we must also look ahead with respect to this program. The Advisory Commission on Defense is also looking ahead, as well as Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius, not in a casual or nonchalant way, but with all of the emphasis and all of the force they can put behind this appeal and they have stated to the Appropriations Committee that it is vitally and urgently necessary that they be provided with this additional aluminum by 1942.

Now, how are you going to get it? You must build new plants. It is proposed to build a new plant in the vicinity of the present one in the Tennessee Valley area, and to do that there is required additional power. The Advisory Council on Defense summoned to its assistance Mr. Gano Dunn, well known to the gentleman from New York City [Mr. TABER] and many of you gentlemen on the Republican side of the House. He is a Republican, and an outstanding Republican, very firm and very orthodox in his Republican beliefs, but, like you and like myself, or like we have professed to be, he is for this defense program first. Not only is Mr. Dunn a member of the minority party but Mr. Dunn has been an habitual and relentless opponent of the T. V. A. He has opposed it at every step of the way. He has lectured many times on the value of producing electric power by steam rather than by water power, and he will say to you now that if it were a question of starting at scratch and producing this new power that is needed, if there were no T. V. A. to build on to, unquestionably we should do it by steam, but Mr. Dunn will also tell you this: He will tell you that, already having T. V. A. set up as a going concern and already having this succession of dams on the Tennessee River, that by going up on the Holston River and putting in this Cherokee Dam, of which Mr. Wendell Willkie speaks in his statement, that you get not only the primary power produced by the introduction of a new dam but every time the water goes over one of those dams downstream you get additional power.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

And Mr. Dunn, as I say, one of the outstanding and leading electrical engineering experts in the country, will tell you, as he has told all of us, emphatically and unequivocally, that this project is justified, this project which calls for the building of this dam and supplementing it by one steam-generating plant.

The project calls for a total expenditure of $65,800,000.

The building of a storage dam and hydroelectric power plant on the Holston River near Jefferson City, Tenn., will cost $36,000,000; installing two new generating units at Wilson Dam and one at Pickwick Dam to cost $5,300,000, and by making these additional installations you get the benefit of the additional storage you have upstream by putting in one steam-generating plant to cost $10,500,000, and the necessary transmission facilities to tie this up to cost $14,000,000.

This power is vitally needed. It cannot be secured anywhere else. Private industry cannot provide it. Of course, someone has said, "Could you not take the power from T. V. A. by having the T. V. A. shut off the power it is selling to some other people and turn all of the power over to the defense program?" Certainly you could do that if you wished to shut off that power which the T. V. A. has sold and is delivering to other manufacturers, many of whom are also engaged in work of the defense program, but it would not be the part of good business or good judgment to take power that T. V. A. has sold to someone else and divert it. It would simply require those people to build new plants of some kind or to shut down their operations.

Now, some one has suggested, and I believe such an amendment will be offered, that we cut out the dam and just build the steam-generating plant. I want to read you a letter which Mr. Gano Dunn wrote to me, at my request, when that question was raised. This letter is dated July 29, 1940.

DEAR MR. WOODRUM: Certain members of the committee of which you are chairman have raised the question: Why should not the increased capacity of T. V. A. required for national defense purposes be wholly in steam power instead of partly in steam power and partly in hydroelectric power as has been recommended by the engineers and approved by the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense?

The most reliable and economical operation of a mixed system like that of the T. V. A. comes about when the amount of steam bears to the amount of hydro a ratio determined by engineering considerations. If in the T. V. A. system the steam is expanded at the expense of the water the cost of operation is considerably increased and some of the benefits of hydroelectric development is lost. If not enough steam is provided the operation in respect to prime power becomes uncertain and a large part of the power becomes secondary power of much lower value.

The amount of steam power included in the plan is the right amount to give the best compromise between these conflicting requirements and any important change in it would be contrary to good engineering.

There is another consideration of a most serious kind. Since the matter came up a month or so ago the power demands for national defense have begun to rise all over the industrial part of the country and many large orders have been placed with the manufacturing companies for steam machinery and equipment. To such an extent has this occurred that whereas deliveries of 15 to 18 months were then possible—I am informed that in the last 3 weeks the General Electric Co., the largest manufacturer of steam turbogenerators, has been obliged to lengthen its delivery dates so that it is now quoting deliveries no earlier than 25 months from the date of order.

If under these circumstances the amount of steam equipment for the T. V. A. expansion should be materially increased it could only be at the expense of the expansion of steam plants elsewhere also needed for national defense and it is probable that the priority authorities would not recognize the claim for early delivery of a large part of the T. V. A. order.

For all these reasons and in the interest of the prompt determination of the T. V. A. expansion which is urgently needed for the national defense I urge that the proportions of steam to hydro which have been carefully determined from engineering considerations be not disturbed.

Respectfully yours, GANO DUNN.

Mr. Chairman, may I say this. In a program of this magnitude, you have to place confidence in some people whom you think have information and certain technical knowledge, and I do not know where you would go, and I do not believe my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] can suggest anywhere to go, to find a greater electrical engineering expert than Mr. Dunn, and with his background and with his predilections, when he goes in as vigorously and as strongly as he does endorsing propositions, backed up by the Advisory Commission on Defense, saying this is vitally needed for our airplane-production program, then it would seem to me that the House of Representatives or any Member thereof would be going a long way to place his lay judgment against the expert judgment of these gentlemen.

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. JONKMAN. How much additional aluminum will this plant produce, and how much is being produced at the present time?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That statement is in the hearings. I cannot recall it at the moment, but a number of pounds above what I stated in my opening statement. That is to say, when this program reaches July 1, 1942, as it has progressed, there will be 60,000,000 pounds of aluminum short. There is in the hearings a statement of how many pounds is presently being produced. This statement may be surprising. It requires on an average 5 tons of aluminum for each plane.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I find on page 9 of the hearings a statement in Mr. Dunn's report that they will need 60,000,000 pounds of aluminum, which represents a power requirement of approximately 80,000 kilowatts, and yet we are asked to provide 100,000 kilowatts from steam and 120,000 kilowatts from water power—apparently three and a half times more than the maximum needed to produce the aluminum.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Oh, there is a number of other defense requirements down there besides aluminum.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Obviously, from his statement, unless there is some further explanation, his statement is not very clear. It is hardly even an excuse, because he further states that 60,000 pounds can be procured out West at Bonneville. Therefore he is only 20,000 shy, and we are providing 200,000 kilowatts more for other purposes. Are those other purposes just general in nature?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Oh, no; there is a powder plant coming in there that originally asked for 7,000 kilowatts, and now that request has been jumped to 14,000. And there is a number of other industries. My attention was called to page 10 of this report, and I read the following:

If the increased requirements for aluminum were the only increased requirements for the national defense for which power will be needed in the Tennessee Valley, an increase in capacity of 100,000 kilowatts would have been adequate to take care of 80,000 kilowatts demand for aluminum and allow some spare capacity.

But, in addition to the national-defense demands for aluminum involved in the airplane program, there are other power increases in prospect for the Tennessee Valley; for instance, 7,000 kilowatts to supply the new Du Pont power plant at Memphis, for which a contract has just been let.

And, as I say, that has been stepped up now to 14,000.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. McLEAN. That power plant will need this power long before December 1942. There is not a dollar's worth of power now being provided for that will be used at that powder plant. This will not produce any more power until 1942.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman will see from Mr. Dunn's statement that there are other points along there where power is coming in. There are two private projects there. The Aluminum Co. has a power project coming in, bringing in additional power, and the whole thing is progressive. We do not want it tomorrow, but we will need it later.

Mr. McLEAN. The gentleman will please get the point. Under this program that we are asked to vote this $65,800,000 for, the Tennessee Valley Authority says that the steam plant will not be ready until December 1941, and that the hydro plant will not be ready until successively August, September, October, 1942. What right have they to avail themselves of this powder plant, which is ready to open and must necessarily operate instantly, as a reason why we should now spend this money for power that is needed immediately and that will not be available until 2 years from now?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. In answer to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN], the hearing before the Rules Committee was later than the hearing before the Appropriations Committee. Mr. Dunn explained clearly that according to the program of the National Defense Commission the bottleneck will be reached on July 1, 1942, and that all available power anywhere within the United States would be used from now on; but that on July 1, 1942, if we are to keep up our program of building airplanes according to schedule, we must have the power provided for in this bill. This bill is to meet a demand which will arise on that day.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. RICH. When you talk about furnishing powder plants, why does not the Du Pont Co. locate its power plants where we now have power accessible, as we have in Pennsylvania, where they already have powder plants, and where they can go ahead and manufacture powder immediately? Why wait on this plant?

One other question: You are going to build a proposed paper mill. My goodness, the paper mills of this country are adequate now to furnish all the paper we need. Why start in constructing new paper mills under this project?

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the chamber of commerce of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Brother RICH'S community might better present that proposition.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. What effort has been made to ascertain whether or not private industry could furnish this all-important material, aluminum, which is so necessary for the manufacture of planes?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Private industry will furnish it, but they must have power with which to make it. Somebody has to produce the power to furnish to private industry.

Mr. DONDERO. And that is not available now?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is not available now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. RICH. I would like to have the gentleman answer why we are building this proposed paper mill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. My time has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, no one is more interested in promoting the national defense than I am. However, I am not inclined to support something that I believe to be a racket, trying to ride in on the skirts of national defense, just because it is passed on by someone who I do not believe has given it adequate study. I am sorry to say that is my opinion of the type of consideration that Mr. Dunn has given to this particular project.

Let me say to you that the Tennessee Valley Authority has been continuously an outfit that we could tell absolutely nothing about. When they gave us figures, we could not depend upon them. When they gave us operating statements, we could not depend upon them.

Let me give you the slightest bit of history of this outfit and of that development. The Board of Army Engineers estimated that for $75,000,000 they could put in all the navigation works that might be desired there. Let me say to you that with reference to their flood-control proposition, it has gotten down now, I think, to about 259,000 acre-feet in the Norris Reservoir, according to a statement put out by their Chief Engineer, Colonel Parker.

Let me say to you that in the hearings last winter it was claimed there were 1,500,000 acre-feet of storage in Norris Reservoir for power purposes and 520,000 for flood control; that it is now claimed that 1,761,000 there is for power, and I understand that another engineer from the T. V. A. has estimated that that power storage is 1,100,000 acre-feet within the last 2 or 3 days.

Let me say to you that they have furnished me tables showing the run-off of this Holston River month by month, week by week, over a period of 19 years. They tell us that in an average year, like 1927, Holston Reservoir would be filled in 3 months. In 1927 the average cubic-foot-per-second flow was 5,910. That was the second highest year in history. The average flow is 4,673 over the 19 years, or one-fifth less. The average flow over the last 10 years is 4,250, or about two-thirds what they figure on. In the lowest 12 months in the last 24 the flow is 2,031 cubic feet per second. It is apparent that the dam will be filled in not less than 6 months.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Not at this time. If the gentleman has a question later, I will yield.

Every statement we have had from that T. V. A. outfit has worked out just like that.

So that we may know something about what the power situation ought to be according to the tables that they have given us, and so that we may know something about how they have been operating, I want to call attention to this, and I am going to put this into the RECORD in a table. The total cost of these items, according to the table on page 1682 of last year's hearings, is $343,978,000; deduct from that one-eighth of the Norris Reservoir that they claim is for flood control today, $3,750,000; and deduct two-thirds, although it is altogether too much, on the navigation proposition, $50,000,000, and you have left a cost of $290,208,000. The interest on that is $8,706,000. Depreciation on a reasonable basis is $5,804,000; and operating expense, according to page 1630 of the hearings, for the year 1941, is $7,464,000. This makes a total cost of $21,974,400.

The estimated revenue for that year was $12,800,000. This shows a loss for the year of $9,174,000. The taxpayers from your district and mine will pay that cost and will continue to pay it just so long as that incompetent outfit runs the T. V. A.

Cost (p. 1682 of 1941 hearings)	$343,978,000
No flood control except one-eighth Norris	3,750,000
Navigation, two-thirds of engineers' estimate (liberal)	340,208,000

Cost of power:
Interest, 3 percent	8,706,240
Depreciation:
10 percent on transmission
1½ percent on dams
3 percent on wheels and generators	5,804,160
Average, 2 percent
Operating:
Estimated expense (p. 1630) for 1940	7,464,000
Total cost	21,974,400
Estimated revenue (p. 1630)	12,800,000
Loss	9,174,000

At the present time, according to the testimony of this outfit in the 1941 hearings of last December, and adding to it 60,000 kilowatts of steam plant, the present capacity of the plant is 939,000 kilowatts. According to their own statement, their average secondary capacity is 70,000; their firm capacity is 599,000; their peak demand is 790,000. By July 1, 1942, including this 120,000 steam plant they are asking for, there will be a plant capacity of 1,105,000 kilowatts, a firm power of 612,000 kilowatts, and an average secondary power of 182,000 kilowatts, with a peak demand of 945,000 kilowatts. Add to that Pickwick No. 4 and Wilson 9 and 10 or Wilson 11 and 12—the testimony is rather confusing on that—and you get 1,193,000 installed; adding the new plant, 120,000, you get 1,313,000, with a firm kilowatt capacity of 732,000.

This set-up is sufficient to take care of the average power requirements for 1942. It runs the total demand up to 642,000, according to their estimate, and it shows a surplus of 90,000 kilowatts after providing for these items of war preparedness.

The reason I am going to suggest that this steam plant be allowed to stay in is because I believe—and the T. V. A. investigating committee a year ago so found—that they need a steam-plant auxiliary, because they had gone to work and invited everyone down in there at prices below cost. They had gotten manufacturing outfits down there so far beyond the capacity of the outfit to take care of them the way they were operating that they needed a steam-plant auxiliary to take care of that situation. At the present time if they would operate that outfit as it should be operated I believe they would have the capacity to take care of this national-defense proposal. The total amount of power that would be required for aluminum would run from 65,000, according to the aluminum company, to 80,000, according to Mr. Dunn. The other item might run 30,000 additional, so the peak capacity that would need to be added would be 116 kilowatts.

The following table, as I understand it, is the capacity of the T. V. A. without the so-called Cherokee Dam:

	Plant capacity	Average kilowatts, secondary	Average kilowatts, firm	Peak demand
Present, including Wilson Dam 60,000-kilowatt steam plant	939,000	70,000	599,000	790,000
July 1942 Watts Bar moved up including Wilson steam	1,105,000	182,000	612,000	945,000
Add Pickwick No. 4	36,000
Wilson 9 and 10 or 11 and 12	52,000
Total	1,193,000	182,000	612,000	945,000
Add new steam	120,000		120,000	120,000
Power available	1,313,000	182,000	732,000	1,065,000
Estimated 1942 peak demand and average power requirements		70,000	526,000	779,000
Add for war preparedness			116,000	116,000
Total		70,000	642,000	895,000
Surplus after providing for war preparedness		112,000	90,000	170,000

Why should we go ahead and add another dam out of the National Treasury to spread out these people into the power business is beyond me. Just think of putting up to us the building of a power dam in such times as these to install a paper mill, when all of us know that a paper mill can go anywhere and that it has nothing whatever to do with national defense. It is perfectly ridiculous. We ought to keep away from that kind of operation. We ought not to get into the sort of thing they are trying to lead us into here. There is absolutely no reason why we should go ahead and provide for this new dam. If we go ahead with it, we shall take the best farms they have left in the Tennessee Valley. Already all sorts of folks down there are building up cases for big damages for taking their land, and we are going to get into just one more racket like the one we were in before when we started in with the power business.

Why can we not have a sense of responsibility as we approach this problem? Why can we not use our own common sense? I am going to prepare for the RECORD a table showing the flow of this river year by year and the average flow over the last 10 years from the statement that has been furnished me by Mr. Parker. Why should we turn over all this money to this particular outfit to go ahead and waste, when we know they will waste it if we give it to them?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. There are power facilities in other parts of the country where they can manufacture powder. Why is it necessary to increase these dams and build this power plant in this particular location for the manufacture of powder?

Mr. TABER. I will not question that, because it is a matter of only 15,000 or 20,000 kilowatts; I am not going to fuss about that. Powder is an item for national defense, but I presume they could build those plants elsewhere. This outfit, however, is running its power out and selling it, as I have demonstrated to you, for less than it costs, at the expense of other taxpayers. If a manufacturer can go down there and get the power at the expense of the taxpayers, there is naturally some attraction to go there.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

When the appropriate time comes, I shall move to strike out that part of the bill providing for the power dam, because I believe they have all of that sort of thing they ought to be allowed to get into in that particular territory. I do not believe there is any reason why we should go into it. Ten million dollars will build the power plant, according to their testimony, in 18 months. The other thing will take from 2 to 3 years, and it will just be a waste. There is very serious doubt as to whether that outfit could possibly ever get it ready, and I do not believe it is in the interest of national defense to waste our substance. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, the measure now before the House provides for the construction of what is known as the Cherokee Dam on the Holston River near Jefferson City, Tenn., and for the installation of three electric generators, two at the Wilson Dam and one at the Pickwick Dam; and also for the construction of a steam-generating plant to supplement and equalize the production of firm power from these nine dams in the Tennessee Authority during periods of drought.

If the reasons advanced in support of this measure are sound and if the facts stated in support of it are true, the measure should pass. It has just been stated here by the distinguished gentleman from New York that the Tennessee Valley Authority had induced a large number of industries to come down there in order to use this power. That is not in accordance with the facts. This was an industrial region before the Tennessee Valley Authority came there and it is such today. And today one-third of the critical war materials that are produced in this country are produced in the Tennessee Valley area. This includes copper, iron, and aluminum.

At Alcoa, in Blount County, is located the largest aluminum plant in the world. It is located on a tract of 3,000 acres of land. The buildings themselves cover 90 acres of that land. There is shipped each day of the year to Alcoa 1,000,000 pounds of alumina, which is an aluminum oxide which has been produced from bauxite at the company's plant in St. Louis, Mo. That ore is mined in Arkansas and in South America.

The 1,000,000 pounds of aluminum oxide is there, by the use of electric current, separated into its component parts. This is done by mixing the alumina with cryolite in a molten state, and by submerging in the mixture 24 electrodes, and by passing from the electrodes electric current to carbon-lined sides of the melting vat. From the 1,000,000 pounds of alumina received there each day 500,000 pounds of pig aluminum is produced. Under the old method of manufacturing aluminum before the use of electricity came into vogue it required 24 hours to produce 30 pounds of aluminum, which sold then at $8 a pound. Now, by the use of this current, it is possible to produce 30 pounds of aluminum in 10 seconds.

We all know that in the manufacture of airplanes for war purposes aluminum is absolutely essential. There is required 5 tons of aluminum to produce one airplane. Would it not be a tragic thing that as a result of dallying in this hour of our Nation's peril and quibbling over something that is already an accomplished fact, the time should come in America when our children and our housewives would be gathering together aluminum pots and pans, as they are doing in England today, in order to build airplanes for defense purposes?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I have heard a great deal about this figure of 5 tons of aluminum for one airplane.

Mr. JENNINGS. That is the testimony of Mr. Stettinius.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Whoever testified to that may be mistaken. It is like talking about the fact it takes 5 tons to build a locomotive or an automobile.

Mr. JENNINGS. I did not yield for a speech. I am stating the testimony of Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Knudsen. I saw in that plant with my own eyes less than a week ago the aluminum plates and sheets and other forms of aluminum for the manufacture of airplanes, airplane engines, their cylinder heads, their piston rods, and so forth. That is what they tell me, and I accept it as true. I am not here to impugn anybody's integrity or to question anybody's patriotism. When men with the standing of Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius testify before a committee of this House that it requires 5 tons of aluminum to make an airplane I assume they are telling the truth and know what they are talking about. These men say it is absolutely necessary that we have this additional power.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. No. If the gentleman will hear me with an understanding heart and an open mind it will not be necessary for me to yield.

Mr. Stettinius, Mr. Knudsen, and a large number of representatives of the General Staff of the United States Army went to Alcoa, and they learned, as has been stated on the floor of this House, that although the Aluminum Co. of America with its present facilities and available power will have no shortage of aluminum until July 1, 1942, yet at that time there will be a shortage of 60,000,000 pounds. They then undertook to find out where they could get this additional power. There is just one way to produce and manufacture aluminum, and that is by the use of electric current. They cannot get it from private companies. It is not feasible to go to the Bonneville Dam in the State of Washington. If that were done it would be necessary to have 4,000 freight cars per year to transport the bauxite out there, the raw ore, or the alumina, as the case might be, then bring the finished product back. In addition to this there is no rolling mill out there.

Mr. Chairman, this great plant at Alcoa has been there for over 20 years. All they have to do down there is install additional melting pots and expand the facilities to some extent and there will be absolutely no shortage of aluminum in this great projected defense program that we have under way at the present time. Forty-three percent of all the aluminum produced in this country is produced at Alcoa, and 75 percent of the aluminum that is going into our war planes today comes from that plant.

Something has been said about the flow of water in the Holston River. Now, I know about the Holston River. I live down there on the Holston River. I have fished it, I have hunted on it, and I have land that adjoins the river, although below the dam. But I know the river. It is a large river. It drains a watershed of 3,400 square miles and has its origin in the State of Virginia. It is a very large stream, as I stated. The advantage of this upstream dam is that there will be produced at this dam, which covers an area of 30,000 acres, 90,000 kilowatts of electricity, firm power; then the water stored in the Cherokee Dam, when it is released, flows over eight downstream dams, so that the water impounded by this dam will be used eight times over these downstream dams; and by the installation of the two electric generators at Wilson Dam and the one at the Pickwick Dam 90,000 additional kilowatts will be produced.

Something has been said about our candidate for the Presidency, Mr. Willkie. He said in an interview on June 14 of this year, published in the papers of this country, in response to a question, that in the event an impartial board recommended the construction of an additional dam he would favor it. Who doubts the impartiality of Mr. Knudsen, Mr. Stettinius, or Mr. Dunn? Mr. Dunn is a sort of a modern Apostle Paul. He has been a Pharisee of the Pharisees, but now he comes in this hour of the Nation's danger and says that this is absolutely necessary; that the bottleneck in the production of essential war materials is the production of aluminum and the use of power.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. I told the gentleman to listen and I would give him some information. I have the greatest esteem in the world for the gentleman, but I cannot play with him now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. As I was saying, the water impounded by this dam is available at eight downstream dams. When we supplement that regular and uninterrupted flow of power by this steam-generating plant we are assured of an additional 220,000 kilowatts per year.

This power is not needed alone for the production of aluminum. There are other industries there—industries that are engaged in the production of munitions and industries that are engaged in the production of magnesium, which is an alloy used in the manufacture of aluminum. This current is used for that purpose. It would be ridiculous to say that in a great industrial area of this country where munitions of war are being made and where people exist by virtue of taking part in those industries we should have a black-out and cut off the power from these essential industries.

Mr. Chairman, there has been set on foot a progressive and national program that has in view total preparedness. Before I would do anything consciously to retard the full arming of this country against threatened invasion from abroad I would rather that my right hand should forget its cunning and that my tongue should cleave to the roof of my mouth. This is no time to dally; this is no time to hesitate. We must get ready. There is just one way to do it, and that is to act now. [Applause.]

I now propose to cite facts and reasons which absolutely refute the charge that this measure is proposed by the Tennessee Valley Authority under the guise of advancing the national defense. The undisputed facts hit this unjust charge squarely between the eyes. Every Member of this House knows that a crisis—an emergency—world-wide in its scope, exists, threatening a black-out of free government throughout the world and laying the ax at the very roots of our national existence as a free people. To meet this threat to our institutions, this challenge to the American way of life, the Congress has appropriated billions, and will shortly appropriate billions more, in all totaling more than $10,000,000,000. This Nation is preparing for total defense. In the present world catastrophe no measure short of this will suffice. At this hour the hearts of men are being "sifted out before the judgment seat." "He who dallies is a dastard, and he who doubts is damned."

The President wisely sought the experience, the ability, and the assistance of the best minds in our business world. He summoned to his aid, and to the service of the country, Mr. Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., and Mr. William S. Knudsen, and made them members of the National Defense Advisory Committee. To Mr. Stettinius has been delegated the gigantic task of securing the production and of assembling the necessary critical materials for the construction of the material parts of a gigantic war machine for national defense. To Mr. Knudsen has been given the well-nigh superhuman task of seeing that these materials procured by his associate, Mr. Stettinius, are built into guns, airplanes, tanks, armored cars, tractors, ships, cannon, rifles, machine guns, ammunition of all types, and all of the paraphernalia of modern warfare. No man doubts the ability, the genius, the outstanding records of achievements, and the devoted patriotism of these two great men.

Shortly after their appointment as members of the National Defense Advisory Commission they conferred with the General Staff of the Army as to the needs of the Government with respect to critical materials needed in our expanded air-defense program. They went to Alcoa, in Blount County, Tenn., where is located the largest aluminum manufacturing plant in the United States. This plant is owned and operated by the Aluminum Co. of America. We all know that aluminum is the absolutely indispensable material used in the manufacture of airplanes, and I mean by that bombing and fighting planes. On conferring with the officials of the Aluminum Co. of America, Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Knudsen made known the quantity of sheet and plate aluminum and other aluminum necessary in the manufacture of airplanes and airplane motors. They were informed that the Aluminum Co. of America could supply the needs of the Government until July 1, 1942, at which time it was developed there would be a shortage of 60,000,000 pounds of aluminum. Thereupon they requested of the Aluminum Co. of America an increased production of aluminum to meet the Government's needs. The officers of the Aluminum Co. informed them that to produce the needed quantity of aluminum more electric power was absolutely necessary. The Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority were then approached, and they informed Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Knudsen that the Authority had contracted its available power to municipalities, cooperatives, and industries making essential war supplies. The officers of the Tennessee Valley Authority stated that if it could build another dam—the Cherokee Dam on Holston River near Jefferson City, Tenn., to be specific—and install the three electric generators at the Wilson Dam and at the Pickwick Landing Dam, and could build the electric generating plant above referred to, it could, by July 1, 1942, produce primary power in sufficient quantities to meet the requirements of the Aluminum Co. of America in the production of aluminum in quantities required by the Government in the fulfillment of its war-airplane program and power needed in the normal growth of industries and increasing demand for power in the area, and also power necessary in the development of other needed war industries in the Tennessee Valley area. This proposed dam, the installation of these additional electric generating facilities in the downstream dams, and the construction of the proposed steam-electric generating plant therefore did not originate with the Tennessee Valley Authority. These projects were the logical, the imperative outgrowth of the Nation's dire need for war materials in the present emergency.

These facts were developed and established by the testimony of Mr. Edward R. Stettinius and Mr. William S. Knudsen, members of the National Defense Advisory Commission; Mr. Gano Dunn, assistant to the Commissioners; Mr. David E. Lilienthal, vice chairman of the Board of Directors of the T. V. A.; and Col. T. B. Parker, chief engineer of the Tennessee Valley Authority, in the hearings conducted by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of this House on Tuesday, July 9, 1940.

Speedy action is required. This action is referred to by Mr. Stettinius in his testimony as a "trigger action."

Mr. Stettinius, on page 5 of his testimony, states:

If the appropriation is not promptly provided, then there may be a whole year's delay because you will miss the spring floods in filling the reservoir, and with an empty reservoir you cannot get power, even if your machinery is all installed.

Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Knudsen request this expansion program on the part of the Tennessee Valley Authority for the production of additional power after conferring with and reaching a complete agreement with those responsible for national defense and after learning that the Tennessee Valley area is one of the important areas for the production of such essential national-defense materials as aluminum and other metals, explosives, and phosphorus, and other chemicals, and, more recently, aircraft. They learned that a deficiency of power supply is the bottleneck in the time essential to the production of these critical war materials. They ascertained that all existing power installations, both those of the Tennessee Valley Authority and private companies in adjacent territory, are now being taxed to the limit to meet normal demands. I again quote from the testimony of Mr. Stettinius before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on July 9, 1940. In developing these facts Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Knudsen had not only the advice of high Army and Navy officials but also that of Mr. Gano Dunn, one of the outstanding electrical and mechanical engineers of the Nation. I now quote from the testimony of Mr. Stettinius, on page 4 of the hearing:

Mr. Dunn was the power expert member of the Nitrate Commission of the War Department prior to the World War and at that time made studies of the Tennessee River with reference to its suitability as a source of power for the manufacture of nitrates.

In the lawsuit—this will amuse some of you—in the lawsuit which Wendell Willkie and the Commonwealth & Southern brought several years ago to test the constitutionality of the T. V. A. Act he hired Mr. Dunn's firm to represent him against the Government. Mr. Dunn has previously been opposed to the Government's policy of entering into competition with private utilities, but he now strongly is in favor of this request of the T. V. A. purely from the standpoint of the emergency at hand and the interest of the national defense.

I have been over this matter for approaching 3 weeks now, with Mr. Dunn and the members of our staff, and I am perfectly confident, gentlemen, that from the standpoint of our aluminum production to meet the aviation program which Mr. Knudsen is responsible for, and a great many other developments in the southeastern section, we must have this added power.

Mr. WOODRUM. And you cannot get it from private industry?

Mr. STETTINIUS. We cannot, sir, and it cannot be delayed for reasons which Mr. Dunn will bring out in his testimony. Not weeks but days count now, from the standpoint of speeding this work up so that we can get the full effect of the spring floods 2 years hence.

Mr. WOODRUM. The program calls for the erection of a storage dam and hydroelectric power plant to be built on the Holston River, near Jefferson City, Tenn., at a total cost of $36,000,000; then for the installation of steam-electric generating facilities at a cost of $10,500,000; Wilson and Pickwick units, $5,300,000; transmission facilities, $14,000,000; making a total of $65,800,000.

Now you are asking for $25,000,000 in 1941, $20,800,000 in 1942, and $11,000,000 in 1943.

Mr. STETTINIUS. That is correct, sir.

Mr. WOODRUM. And the Council of Defense has been over that thoroughly and regards it is necessary and important, and that time is of the essence?

Mr. STETTINIUS. I do not think I can say "The Commission," but Mr. Knudsen, in charge of production, and I, from the standpoint of materials, and Mr. Dunn, having jurisdiction of the power to be supplied, all definitely unite in the conclusion that this expansion is justified and must take place to meet the production ahead.

Mr. Stettinius further testified on page 13 of the hearings:

Mr. STETTINIUS. Yes; it is all a part of a coordinated whole, in that the plane production, and specifically aluminum, and the powder production that are contemplated to be financed through this approximately $5,000,000,000 request that you will shortly receive, are all part of the program, and are in proper relation to it. The chemical plants, the ammonium and other plants, and the aluminum plants must be served by this power increase.

Mr. Stettinius further testified on page 17 of the hearings:

Mr. WOODRUM. Do you wish to say anything further in reference to the aluminum shortage?

Mr. STETTINIUS. There is a shortage of aluminum, and I can tell you that we must increase our aluminum facilities as rapidly as possible to meet the plane program.

Mr. WOODRUM. There is nothing like an adequate amount of power for carrying on this work in connection with the national defense.

Mr. STETTINIUS. That is true. I might add, Mr. Chairman, that the support we are getting from the President, and all the way down throughout all the agencies in Washington, is most encouraging, and most inspiring. I include Congress in that statement, of course.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, private industry everywhere is interested in the national defense.

Mr. STETTINIUS. That is correct. The Commission is getting full support from industry on all sides, and we are getting the full support of the Government agencies in Washington. Particularly, I would like to go on record as to the magnificent cooperation we have been receiving from the Army and Navy.

Mr. LUDLOW. As a member of the committee, I am heartily in favor of this proposition, but if it were not in a time of emergency you would not be in favor of the Government engaging in the power business?

Mr. STETTINIUS. No, sir.

Mr. DUNN. Neither would I.

Mr. STETTINIUS. Mr. Dunn is an expert in the field of power. I am not an expert in the field of power, but I subscribe to everything that Mr. Dunn has said in his testimony.

At this hearing, on pages 5 to 7, appears the testimony of Mr. Knudsen. We quote:

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Knudsen, we will be very glad to hear whatever you have to say to us.

Mr. KNUDSEN. I am not a power man; I am a manufacturer. My interest in this project is purely to see that we get aluminum enough or duralumin enough to build the planes with. I suppose you know the average plane takes about 5 tons of this stuff.

Mr. WOODRUM. Five tons of aluminum?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Yes; that is the average; and my interest here in this project is to get aluminum enough for the planes, and the average quantity per plane is about 5 tons, meaning both in the frame itself and in the parts of the motor that are made of aluminum, such as the crankcase, pistons, and cylinder head. And in this area where the T. V. A. is located, that is outlined by the General Staff as area E. We have areas A, B, C, D, and E, which are satisfactory to the General Staff for plant-location purposes, being away from the shore, and in this area E, besides aluminum plants, we have some other plants projected, the actual location of which I am unable to give you at this time, because the sites have not been picked; but they are in this area E. So that there will be a call for power beyond what will be required for aluminum.

Mr. WOODRUM. And you cannot get it from private industry?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Well I do not know, frankly; I am not familiar with that.

Mr. STETTINIUS. I think Mr. Dunn can answer that.

Mr. KNUDSEN. The power people will have to tell you about that. I can only testify as to the manufacturing end.

Mr. O'NEAL. How long will it take to get into production with the money being asked for?

Mr. KNUDSEN. That is something Mr. Dunn will have to answer.

Mr. WOODRUM. Do you mean power production or aluminum production?

Mr. O'NEAL. I mean with the money spent that is proposed here, how quickly will it bring results?

Mr. DUNN. The steam will be ready in 18 months and the hydro in 24 months, provided you take prompt action; but there is a trigger action in this, and if the appropriation is not promptly provided, then there may be a whole year's delay, because you will miss the spring floods in filling the reservoir, and with an empty reservoir you cannot get power, even if your machinery is all installed.

Mr. O'NEAL. I know you have looked into the possibility of more rapid development along that line, but I understand at Grand Coulee there is a vast amount of power to be developed, and that can probably be developed in less time than here. Is that correct, or am I incorrectly informed?

Mr. WOODRUM. How about letting Mr. Knudsen finish his statement first, and then ask questions.

Mr. O'NEAL. I thought he had completed his statement.

Mr. WOODRUM. What else do you want to say about that?

Mr. KNUDSEN. I do not know of anything else.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is the whole story?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Unless you want to ask me something.

Mr. WOODRUM. I would like to ask you this general question if you do not mind. How is the general work of the Defense Commission coming along? Is everything going satisfactory?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Well, you are a better judge of that than I am, because, naturally, I have only been here a month and the time has been spent in getting the schedules for the requirements both of the A schedule, which covers the money appropriated here last month, and the B schedule, which is coming up on the hill here to Congress either this afternoon or tomorrow. We are trying to plan our work so that we can place all the contracts we have got money for now and at the same time we study the capacity, or try to study the capacity, so that we can handle the second program either with contract authorizations or with cash. * * *

Mr. WOODRUM. Referring to aluminum, the proposition is to build another aluminum plant there near this power?

Mr. KNUDSEN. About that, Mr. Stettinius can tell you. We have split our work this way, that he brings the material up to the siding and then I cut it up, so that there is a straight division of our work.

Mr. WOODRUM. He has to bring this aluminum up to you before you can make planes out of it; is that the idea?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LUDLOW. Is this power needed entirely for the production of aluminum?

Mr. KNUDSEN. No, sir.

Mr. LUDLOW. You are going to use it for other purposes, too?

Mr. KNUDSEN. There are other plants plotted in that area.

Mr. LUDLOW. For what production?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Some of them for munitions, some for other things—for powder.

Mr. LUDLOW. But the major part of it would be for aluminum?

Mr. KNUDSEN. That is the thing I am mostly interested in at the moment, because in planes that is the important item; that is the major item in a plane.

On the necessity of this expansion-power program on the part of the T. V. A., made possible by this appropriation, Mr. Dunn testified as follows. I quote from his testimony beginning on page 7 of the hearings:

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask one or two questions of Mr. Dunn first. I want to ask about Bonneville as well as Grand Coulee. I understand that the generators at Bonneville can increase their power facilities; and Grand Coulee, as I understand, can increase their facilities in the near future.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, answering the first of Mr. O'NEAL'S questions, he is exactly right about it; and before we recommend this large block of power for T. V. A. we sought other places where we could get the power. We found a very good supply at Bonneville, and we are planning to take 60,000 kilowatts from there before we take this increase from T. V. A.

Mr. O'NEAL. You can make more speed, then, by T. V. A. than at Grand Coulee?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir.

PROSPECT OF GETTING POWER FROM PRIVATE COMPANIES

Mr. LUDLOW. Did you develop the prospect of getting it from private companies?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LUDLOW. And ineffectually?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LUDLOW. What was the problem, then?

Mr. DUNN. No one company system can furnish it. It would have to be furnished by transmission lines coming in from several different companies. It would be a good deal more expensive than the present power from T. V. A. There would be long delays in negotiating such a supply, and we have got T. V. A. right down there where the main plant of the Aluminum Co. is. Now, it is good management, when you want to increase a manufacturing plant and a power supply, to increase an existing manufacturing plant at an existing power supply. They are both right there together in the Tennessee Valley. We found no other place as favorable as T. V. A. for this large block of power increase; and, as Mr. Knudsen said, it is not only for aluminum but for other national-defense projects as well. The increase, in our opinion, is justified on the aluminum alone, but almost every day now there is some new national-defense demand for power directed in the region of the Tennessee Valley.

For instance, since we first investigated this, there has been a contract signed with the Du Pont people for a powder plant, the Tennessee Powder Co., which requires 7,000 kilowatts, and this is already being increased to 14,000 kilowatts. There are other plants where the increased power for national-defense needs, besides this aluminum need, is going to add up to almost the full capacity that we are here recommending for aluminum. Besides this there is the normal growth in the demands for power by the municipalities that are already located in the Tennessee Valley and are being supplied. You cannot limit or cut off that growth; it would disturb the industrial and social conditions if you did. Of the increase that we are recommending, 50,000 kilowatts goes to supply the growth of what is already connected up with T. V. A.

Does that answer your question?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

From the point of view of national defense an increase in power for the production for aluminum can best be obtained by an increase in the capacity of the T. V. A. The principal plant of the Aluminum Co. of America, which is practically the sole manufacturer of aluminum, is located in the Tennessee Valley, notwithstanding the increase of that company's plant at Bonneville. The expansion of that plant in the Tennessee Valley is likely to be accomplished with greater certainty and with greater facility, than the building of a new plant elsewhere, having in mind the time limitation within which the airplane-production program must be accomplished.

This is true because the Holston Dam is the highest dam upstream from other dams in the Tennessee Valley over which other dams, the water which is stored in the Holston River Dam Reservoir is also discharged. In other words, this water from the Holston River Dam is not only used to generate 90,000 kilowatts at this dam, but it is used again as it flows over the Fort Loudon Dam, the Watts Bar Dam, the Chickamauga Dam, the Hales Bar Dam, the Guntersville Dam, the Wheeler Dam, the Wilson Dam, and the Pickwick Landing Dam. Thus it is used nine times at these nine dams in the production of increased power.

The construction of the 120,000 kilowatts of steam plant to be located within the Tennessee Valley area will supplement and equalize the production of water-generated power, and will enable the Tennessee Valley Authority to produce a continuous flow of primary power. Theoretically speaking, the amount of power to be produced by their new facilities and this steam plant will amount to 300,000 kilowatts of installed capacity, yet the actual and certain amount produced will be in the neighborhood of 220,000 kilowatts.

If the increased requirements for aluminum were the only increased requirements for the national defense for which power will be needed in the Tennessee Valley, an increase in capacity of 100,000 kilowatts would have been adequate to take care of 80,000 kilowatts demand for aluminum and allow some spare capacity.

But in addition to the national-defense demands for aluminum involved in the airplane program, there are other power increases in prospect for the Tennessee Valley, for instance, 7,000 kilowatts to supply the new Du Pont powder plant at Memphis (Tennessee Powder Co.) for which a contract has just been let * * * eight thousand kilowatts for metallurgical operations at Wilson Dam. There will also be, by the time of 2 years hence, an estimated increase of 50,000 kilowatts in the requirements of the various municipalities in the Tennessee Valley which now are supplied with power by the Tennessee Valley Authority. These increases, besides the increase for aluminum and others which may yet arise in the development of the defense program, fully justify the increased capacity which we have approved.

The proposed dam can be speedily constructed because the plans for same are fully complete, all preliminary borings and explorations have been made and the Tennessee Valley Authority can move its technical staff, employees, and equipment from a dam now being completed. Under these circumstances the Holston River Dam can be ready within 24 months for the production of power if this appropriation is promptly approved. If there is delay in starting this work, the power will be delayed nearly a year, thus missing the opportunity to fill the new reservoir with the spring floods of 1942.

The Tennessee Valley has been selected as the location for the principal power expansion approved by the members of the National Defense Advisory Commission and by other authorities of the Government because they had in mind not only the location there of the plant of the Aluminum Co. of America but also the excellence of the organization, technical and otherwise, that has been assembled there. The engineers and other staffs of the Tennessee Valley Authority and of the Aluminum Co. of America are parts of a going organization, experienced in the construction of dams and transmission lines and in the manufacture of aluminum to an extent not likely to be found in any entirely new project not yet completed.

Mr. Dunn further testified that—there is no other place in the country where such advantageous power arrangements can be made in connection with a going concern in the production of aluminum as the T. V. A. The principal plant of the Aluminum Co. is there. These other private power plants under development by the Aluminum Co. are near there, and it is natural therefore to look to T. V. A. for this power increase.

VALUE OF HOLSTON RIVER DAM

Mr. Dunn further testified on pages 11 and 12:

And here I am talking in favor of Government water power. The reason for this is, first, that it is a matter of national defense; and second, this is an unusual situation for a water power, because the storage that will be created by this Cherokee Dam on the Holston River is at the top of a series of dams. It is the topmost storage on the stream, and therefore the storage created by it will not only energize the 90,000 kilowatts that it is proposed to put at its own dam but 90,000 more kilowatts down the river as that storage water falls over some of the other dams, like the Wilson and Pickwick Dams.

Mr. TABER. Well, that depends.

Mr. DUNN. No, sir; it does not depend. It is absolutely so.

Mr. TABER. It depends on to what extent your storage enables you to increase the normal flow of the stream.

Mr. DUNN. That is right; it does depend on that. And the storage from the Holston Dam is such that, in addition to the 90,000 kilowatts that it will energize at Holston, it will energize 90,000 other kilowatts down the river at the Pickwick and Wilson Dams.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. It equalizes the stream flow?

Mr. DUNN. That is right. It equalizes the stream flow. I have no hesitation in recommending this particular water-power development, because those are the facts.

Mr. TABER. You mean that none of this water would come down in such a way that it could be used except for storage?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir. In other words, all the storage water that comes down adds to the effectiveness of each dam that it goes over; or, to put it the other way, if the Holston Dam was alone, if there was only one dam across the stream, the way most of the water powers in the country are, you would only get 90,000 kilowatts out of it, and no more. Here you not only get the 90,000 kilowatts out of it, but 90,000 more down the stream and the appropriation that is here asked for covers both of those sets of 90,000 kilowatts.

NORMAL GROWTH WOULD ABSORB INCREASED POWER PRODUCED

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. What would you propose to do with this power if the war should end?

Mr. DUNN. The rate of growth of consumption in the T. V. A. valley is rapid. The T. V. A. capacities are now overloaded. They are called upon for more power than they can easily deliver, and the rate of growth of the community down there is such that it would only take a few years completely to absorb it in the event the war requirements were removed.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. In other words, it would not be lost if the war was lost?

Mr. DUNN. Oh, no.

Mr. LUDLOW. You mean there would be such an influx of new industries down there?

* * * * * * *

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Dunn, you subscribe, then, to this statement by the Tennessee Valley Authority in connection with the supplemental appropriation for 1941:

Should the emergency period end in the near future, the power capacity made available by this program will be absorbed within a few years by normal growth in demand.

Mr. DUNN. I do, fully.

EARLY COMPLETION OF THE HOLSTON RIVER DAM IMPERATIVE

Mr. DUNN. There is another reason for haste, which is not as urgent as the reason that I have previously dwelt upon. The reason that I have previously dwelt upon is what I called the trigger action of getting this great dam finished in order to fill the reservoir with the spring floods of 1942. It is a case where 2 or 3 weeks lost may mean a year lost. That is unusual. There is a speculative element in it. You cannot tell. We are short of time already and the year may already be lost; but if on account of a short delay now, a year is lost, we will be held responsible by the public when the time comes, and Congress will be held responsible by the public when the time comes.

Mr. LUDLOW. What time limit do you give yourselves on the completion of this program?

Mr. DUNN. July 1, 1942, for the hydro and December 1941 for the steam.

I think I know what is in Mr. TABER's mind, and I can show him to his complete satisfaction that in this case the building of this Holston Dam is the equivalent of building two dams, because on account of upstream storage you get 2 kilowatts for 1—for every kilowatt that that dam itself delivers.

In his testimony, then, Mr. Dunn points out that the Tennessee Valley Authority is now so overloaded with demands for power that it has notified the Aluminum Co. it must cut off 30,000 kilowatts of the power now supplied that company.

Mr. Dunn then stated:

I would like to read a statement by Mr. Willkie (Mr. Wendell L. Willkie) into the record. Here is what Mr. Willkie said on that subject on June 15, when this proposal was presented in a memorandum to the President. On June 12 it was presented, and it became public without our knowledge. The reporters went ahead and saw Wendell Willkie, expecting to get a grand slam from him against doing this thing. I will quote from this newspaper interview of June 14 in a Scripps-Howard paper. This is what Mr. Willkie said:

"Nothing is more important than defense, and there is nothing which might and will mask more political logrolling than the flag-waving variety of national defense. But if some impartial group, the United States Army or its engineers, for instance, do say that the completion of these dams is a link in our national defense, the dams should be completed and as rapidly as those charged with our defense think necessary."

That was a quotation from Mr. Willkie.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is a patriotic statement.

Mr. DUNN. Yes. He said an impartial board, and I think I can submit that men like those associated with the National Defense Commission are an impartial board.

Mr. TABER. I have every confidence in everything that you tell us, and it seems to me that this, if it was true, would be an answer to the question. * * *

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] then entered into the role of a doubting Thomas and expressed himself as at liberty to either support or oppose the project.

THERE IS URGENT NEED FOR INCREASING THE PRODUCTION OF ALUMINUM

Mr. WOODRUM. Do you wish to say anything further in reference to the aluminum shortage?

Mr. STETTINIUS. There is a shortage of aluminum, and I can tell you that we must increase our aluminum facilities as rapidly as possible to meet the plane program.

Mr. WOODRUM. There is nothing like an adequate amount of power for carrying on this work in connection with the national defense.

SPEED NECESSARY IN THE PURCHASE OF EQUIPMENT

Mr. Dunn further testified:

With these huge expenditures that Congress has been providing for, the industries of the country will be filled with orders. Therefore it is of the greatest importance, particularly with respect to steam machinery, that the orders for the increased T. V. A. equipment be placed promptly while there is a place for them in the factories. In order to place these orders promptly, negotiated contracts are much more desirable than competitive bidding, because of the long time necessary in providing for competitive bidding.

INCREASED ALUMINUM PRODUCTION

Mr. Dunn then testified:

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. How many pounds of aluminum will this produce annually?

Mr. DUNN. The amount that T. V. A., with this increased power, will produce, is 60,000,000 pounds of aluminum, of which we are short.

PRESENT AND ULTIMATE CAPACITY

On page 22 of the hearings, Colonel Parker, Chief Engineer of the T. V. A., testified as follows:

Mr. TABER. What is meant by present capacity and what is meant by ultimate capacity?

Colonel PARKER. Present capacity includes those generating machines already installed, and the ultimate capacity refers to the possible capacity that could be realized by using the space constructed for such future installations.

Mr. TABER. By putting in more generators or more water wheels. You do not call them water wheels now, do you?

Colonel PARKER. Yes, sir; ultimate capacity means additional installations, such as at Wilson Dam or anywhere. There we constructed 8 generating units with space in the building for the installation of 10 more such units.

It appears from all of the testimony that the vital and crying need is the production of more power by the T. V. A. by the construction of this dual-purpose dam on the Holston River. The installation of the three new generating hydro units at the Wilson and Pickwick Landing Dams, and the construction of the steam generating plant. This is shown by the following testimony of Colonel Parker:

Mr. TABER. The Wilson outfit has not any capacity to run a great deal more than you are now figuring on. None of these outfits has?

Colonel PARKER. Not unless there is additional storage added.

I think I should add there that in the normal expansion of that system, if it were expanded, the next step would be the development of upstream storage, which would make possible the economical addition of units downstream.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is called for in the estimate we are considering?

Colonel PARKER. Our plan was to develop the Cherokee storage, and the reason that is desirable as an emergency program is that that storage can be built very promptly. With storage at Cherokee added units downstream become feasible on short schedule.

The units downstream being duplicates of existing units, the specifications and plans are already prepared. So if it were possible to dispense with the ordinary bidding process and advertising we could immediately order duplicates of those machines simply by taking these specifications out of the pigeon hole where they are now being kept.

So the idea of building storage dams together with the units downstream is something we can do immediately.

LAND PURCHASES

Testimony of Colonel Parker then shows that the T. V. A. has a complete organization for the immediate acquisition of lands needed, either by negotiated purchases or by condemnation proceedings which immediately put the Government in possession of the lands condemned.

Under these proceedings the appraised value of the lands condemned is paid into court and is at once available to the landowner, unless he desires to litigate the question of whether or not he is entitled to any more money for the land thus taken by the Government.

The added power to be produced by these projects is needed entirely for emergency use. This fact is shown by the testimony of Colonel Parker appearing on page 28 of the hearings:

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Can you say what percentage of power from this proposed dam, if it is constructed, will go into emergency uses that are primarily responsible for this request?

Colonel PARKER. This output is intended entirely for emergency uses.

It was developed by the testimony of this witness that 50,000 kilowatts of the 220,000 kilowatts increased power resulting from these increased facilities would be used by municipalities.

On page 29 of the hearing the following appeared:

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The other 170,000 is for national defense.

Mr. DUNN. Yes; with some surplus over.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. How much?

Colonel PARKER. It depends; we do not know. For instance, since that letter, 7,000 kilowatts have been added to the powder plant, and those requirements are coming in all of the time and we do not know just how much; but we are confident it will all be used and possibly we will have to go elsewhere, even after that, for some emergency program.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Mr. Chairman, that is an extremely important point. The Board has authorized me to say that none of this power, that is to say, none of this additional increment, will be disposed of under long-term contract except after clearance with the Advisory Defense Commission; because it is intended that it all be devoted to defense purposes. * * * So that we want to make it clear that this entire block—not in specific kilowatts, of course, but this added increment—is definitely intended for defense purposes; therefore, we would like to have the Defense Commission pass on its disposition as I have suggested.

NEED FOR EARLY COMPLETION OF HOLSTON RIVER DAM

Colonel PARKER. I just want to emphasize the importance of the date of beginning this job; that is, in order to fill the reservoir in the spring of 1942, as is contemplated, and just to get the whole benefit of the thing, we have to get it done before the spring high water, and it is already projected to start almost immediately this summer, so as to get it done before the spring high water. If we actually miss that, it means the thing goes over another year before you can fill it.

Mr. WOODRUM. You mean by that the time is so important that the question of days or weeks would make a difference?

Colonel PARKER. Well, we certainly should actually start it some time next month—actually move in there with our construction force. If we do not, we run a serious chance of not being able to fill it Of course, we can always concentrate and increase our force; but in order to guarantee that we ought to start right away.

Mr. DUNN. May I add a word to what Colonel Parker has said?

Mr. WOODRUM. Certainly.

Mr. DUNN. I want to differ with him somewhat with respect to the emergency of starting this work. There are liable to occur accidents, there is liable to occur bad weather, there are liable to occur delays, and we may have such a glut here in the supply of machinery and other things before the contract is let that we feel we have a speculative problem ahead of us. If, for instance, there is a few weeks' delay now—we are already late in starting it—I do not think his organization can complete this water power in 20 months; I think he is underestimating it; therefore in the Defense Commission we feel we should lose no time whatever, because something might go against us, and this is a case where a few weeks, as I know—in fact, we may already be too late. My firm has built many water powers. It built three of the water powers now in the T. V. A.—Ocoee No. 1, Ocoee No. 2, and Ocoee No. 3. Every once in a while we get caught with the appearance of spring floods earlier than expected, and then it is impossible to close the dam. We should not take the risk when the defense of the United States is at stake; and if we do take it and lose, we will all be subject to criticism.

Colonel Parker further testified on page 30 as follows with respect to the combined use of the power developed from the dams of the T. V. A. and the proposed generating plant:

But we do think this combination of those two things is really the best plan and avoids getting into difficulties and obstacles along some one line.

Colonel Parker further testified on page 31:

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Mr. Engineer [referring to Colonel Parker], why do not you go out in West Virginia and locate one of these electrical outfits? They have coal there; you do not even have to go under the earth to get it in some places.

Colonel PARKER. Another thing is that this particular steam plant is designed not to run continuously. If it had to run continuously and burn all that coal every day it would cost very materially more than our hydro-generated energy It is intended to supplement out existing hydro plant and to operate only perhaps 25 or 30 percent of the time, so that it will in that way be a relatively economical development. But if we were to overdevelop it, to build more of it than could be taken care of by our present system, or to develop, as the gentleman says, without relation to our present system, it would cost the Government a great deal more—probably twice as much as water-generated energy does at the present time.

Furthermore, I do not think it is going to be possible in this emergency to get the delivery of very much steam-generating equipment. I think that is going to be a serious difficulty. Do not you agree with that, Mr. DUNN?

Mr. DUNN. I am sure it will; and, unless the orders are placed promptly they will lose their place in rank in the factories.

Colonel PARKER. Last month we had a quotation from the Westinghouse Co. on a steam-turbo generator, and they gave delivery as 14 months. It has now gone up to 16 months, with the lapse of 2 or 3 weeks, and next month I hesitate to think what it will be. We are right at the point where, if we delay any longer, it is going to be almost impossible to get the steam equipment that we can do this thing with.

One-third of our critical war metals and minerals are already being provided in the T. V. A. area. These are iron, copper, and magnesia, which are derived from olivine. At this time only 3,600 tons of magnesia are produced in the United States as against 40,000 tons in Germany each year.

Another critical material found in the T. V. A. area is verniculite which is a substitute for cork, and it is used for insulation purposes. The major portions of the country's cork supply, as we all know, comes from Spain. Two-thirds of the critical war materials now needed for national defense may be produced in the Tennessee Valley area. This area has been designated by the Staff of the United States Army as one of the largest defense areas. General Staff came to this conclusion because of the location of the great aluminum plant at Alcoa, in Blount County, Tenn. A great powder plant is under construction at Memphis and an airplane factory is now in operation in Nashville. The continuation of these enterprises calls for an additional increase in power.

The Holston River on which the proposed Cherokee Dam is to be constructed drains a watershed of 3,428 square miles as against an area of 2,912 square miles drained by the Clinch River and its tributaries above Norris Dam. The area flooded by the Cherokee Dam will be 32,000 acres as against 29,000 acres flooded by Norris Dam. The flow of this water in the Holston River is so great that it will fill this dam every year. In addition to that the area in question is far removed from the coast, is surrounded by mountain barriers, is served by adequate railways and public highways.

THE ALUMINUM CO. OF AMERICA AND THE MANUFACTURE OF ALUMINUM WITHIN THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AREA

The plant of the Aluminum Co. of America at Alcoa is located on a 3,000-acre tract. The buildings housing the various operations of this company at Alcoa cover 90 acres of ground. This plant was located at its present site on account of the availability of an almost unlimited amount of hydroelectric energy. The company's plant at Alcoa is the largest in the world.

It owns and operates three dams. One at Calderwood, Tenn. One at Cheowa, and one at Santeetlah, both in the State of North Carolina. It has now under construction two additional dams, one at Nantahala, and one at Glenville, both in North Carolina.

Representatives of the General Staff of the Army recently made a visit of inspection at Alcoa. Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Knudsen recently visited the company's plant at Alcoa. On making known the material needs of the Government for additional aluminum in carrying out the Government's expanded program for national defense, the fact developed that on July 1, 1942, the Aluminum Co. of America would be 60,000,000 pounds short of the amount of aluminum desired by the Government, and this despite the fact of the increased manufacturing facilities which it proposed to install, and the increased production of power by its 2 additional dams now under construction. Electricity in vast quantities is absolutely essential to supply the additional 60,000,000 pounds of aluminum needed, and which would constitute the shortage on July 1, 1942, unless the present bill is enacted into law, and the Tennessee Valley Authority permitted to expand its power facilities as provided by this appropriation. Under the old system of the manufacture of aluminum it required 24 hours to produce 30 pounds of aluminum. By the modern method, through the use of electric current, this being developed by Mr. Charles M. Hall, a graduate of Oberlin College some 50 years ago, it is possible now to produce 30 pounds of aluminum in 10 seconds.

Aluminum is made of bauxite, a mineral consisting chiefly of hydrated aluminum oxide, but containing several percent of other oxides, chiefly silica, titania, and iron oxide. It is mined in Arkansas and in Surinam, South America. This ore is treated in St. Louis, Mo., to remove the impurities, and is there ground to a fineness that will pass through a sieve containing 200 openings to the square inch. The ore when thus refined loses 50 percent of its weight. It is then known as alumina, which is an aluminum oxide. Two pounds of alumina produce one pound of aluminum.

The solvent, molten cryolite—containing a small percentage of fluorspar, in which alumina is dissolved to form the electrolyte—is not consumed, the small losses are made up by additions during the course of operation. Cryolite, sodium alumina fluoride, occurs in appreciable quantity in only one natural deposit, which is in Greenland. Facilities for its production synthetically are available at East St. Louis, and a substantial percentage of that which is used is produced there from materials which are readily available within the United States. If necessary, this production could be expanded to produce the entire requirement. Small additions of aluminum fluoride, made at East St. Louis, are made from time to time. Fluorspar occurs in quantity in Kentucky and southern Illinois.

The large amount of electrical energy consumed in the production of aluminum at Alcoa is supplied by a series of hydroelectric developments on the Little Tennessee River system, supplemented by purchases from T. V. A. This is conducted over power lines of aluminum cable, steel reinforced, as high-voltage alternating current to minimize transmission losses. At the reduction works the voltage is stepped down and the alternating current is changed to direct current by means of either rotary converters or mercury arc rectifiers. Since the voltage drop across a single reduction cell is small, approximately 6 or 7 volts, a sufficient number of cells or pots are connected in series to correspond to the voltage of a single rectifying unit. The current will vary with the type of reduction cell but is upward of 30,000 amperes.

The reduction cell or pot, as it is called, is a large steel shell with a carbon lining separated from it with heat insulating material. The carbon lining serves as cathode or negative electrode of the cell. The electrolyte is kept molten by the heat generated by the passage of the electric current. The current is led into the electrolyte through anodes, which are usually blocks of carbon suspended on metal rods from the positive bus bar. These anodes are made from petroleum coke or pitch coke, ground and mixed with pitch and tar and molded while hot to the desired shape, and then baked to drive off the volatile constituents of the mixture. These grades of coke which are low in ash are used, since any impurity in the anodes will be dissolved in the electrolyte as the carbon is consumed and will be deposited as an impurity in the aluminum.

As the current flows into the cell, oxygen is liberated at the anode, and unites with the carbon at the high temperature—about 1,800 degrees Fahrenheit—the carbon dioxide escaping into the atmosphere. At the carbon lining of the cell where the current leaves the electrolyte, metallic aluminum is deposited. Since the temperature is above the melting point of aluminum—1,220 degrees Fahrenheit—the metal is deposited in molten form. When all the aluminum oxide dissolved in the electrolyte is used up, the voltage of the cell rises, and a telltale lamp connected in parallel with the cell glows to warn the operator that more aluminum oxide—called alumina—must be added. The new charge of alumina which has previously been sprinkled on the crust which freezes over the electrolyte, to be preheated, is added by breaking the crust and stirring it into the bath. The alumina dissolves the voltage drops to the normal operating value, the light goes out, and the process of making aluminum continues. At fixed internals, usually of about 3 days, the aluminum is removed from the reduction cell into a large ladle and poured into cast-iron molds, where it solidifies as pig aluminum. A sample is taken from each ladle or cast and analyzed. Each pig is marked with a grade letter corresponding to the purity of the metal.

In some of the reduction cells a single large cylindrical anode is used instead of several rectangular anodes. When this method is used, the electrode mixture of ground coke and pitch is packed in an aluminum shell provided with suitable arrangement for leading in the current. The heat generated by the passage of the current bakes the mixture and drives off the volatile material. As the lower end of the electrode is consumed by the oxygen liberated during electrolysis, additional electrode mixture is packed in the top of the cylindrical aluminum shell, new sections being added as required.

The aluminum pig is then shipped to the various fabricating plants to be transformed into the various usable forms, such as notched ingot, rolling or extrusion ingots, sheet, plate, tubing, bar and rod, and shapes, castings, and so forth.

It is not feasible to expand operations in the State of Washington, due to the cost of transportation of bauxite to its plant on the Columbia River and the reshipment of the finished product across the country. The costs incident to such transportation are prohibitive, and an addition thereto would cause a congestion of railroad traffic because it would necessitate the use of 4,000 railway cars annually. The feasible, practicable, and only possible way to meet the present emergency and needs of the Government for national defense is to increase the company's manufacturing facilities at Alcoa. This the company has taken all steps to do. It only awaits the enactment of this measure as a green light and go-ahead signal.

I visited its great plant this month and spent some 3 or 4 hours in observing its various operations. I there saw the bauxite deposited into melting pots where submerging in a cryolite bath it was by the use of electric current melted and then siphoned into receptacles from which it was poured into pig molds. I there saw these aluminum pigs again melted, refined, and made into pure aluminum ingots of the desired shape, and also combined with copper and manganese to make the different aluminum alloys required in the manufacture of needed war planes for the defense of this country, and in the finishing rooms and shipping rooms I saw carloads of airplanes and airplane parts consigned to every airplane manufacturer in the United States. These aluminum products produced by this company by power developed at its own dams and by power acquired by it from the T. V. A. and the shortage to be supplied by electric current from the projects to be made possible by this appropriation are essential to the defense and preservation of our institutions and the protection of the lives, the property, and the liberty of our people.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the program before us this afternoon calls for the ultimate expenditure of $65,800,000. It is before us ostensibly as a program of national defense, to produce from 60,000 to 80,000 kilowatts of power to in turn produce some 30,000 tons of aluminum for airplane manufacture 2 years in the future.

Broken down, the program recommended divides itself into four parts, as follows: A new hydroelectric dam for the T. V. A. system on the Holston River, $36,000,000; new generating equipment at the Wilson and Pickwick Dams, $5,300,000; a new steam generating plant, $10,500,000; additional transmission facilities, $14,000,000—a total of $65,800,000. This is to produce 220,000 kilowatts of firm power.

Mr. Chairman, I believe every Member of this Committee under present conditions is for national defense 100 percent. I believe every Member of this Committee, if additional power is essential for that purpose, wants that power produced in the surest way and in the cheapest way it can be produced. It is obvious, however, that we are not justified in appropriating large sums of money for this or that purpose simply because it comes in here with a national-defense tag around its neck.

As far as this particular proposal is concerned, I personally am prepared to go along with items 2, 3, and 4 of the program. I am also prepared to go along with items 2, 3, and 4 and an additional steam plant if necessary. I regret that I am not prepared to support item 1 of the program, providing for the construction of a new hydroelectric plant on the Holston River for the T. V. A. I regret that I cannot support that item of the program, because, in my judgment, the proponents of the program have failed to establish the necessity of the power to be generated by that dam and have also failed, if we assume that the power is necessary, to establish that the sure way and the cheap way to produce the power is through the suggested hydroelectric construction.

May I say, Mr. Chairman, that I have not only listened to the testimony on the record in this connection; I have talked personally and at some length with Mr. Dunn. I have gone to considerable lengths to consult other persons off the record who, in my judgment, are qualified as experts on the subject. The result has been to confirm my own judgment to the effect that the hydroelectric dam is not justified.

This program comes before us with the ostensible approval of the Council for National Defense. May I direct your attention in this connection to the very brief and desultory hearings on the program. If you will consider these hearings, you will find that the Council for National Defense as a whole has not endorsed the power features of the program. You will find that Mr. Knudsen has not endorsed the power features of the program. You will find that Mr. Stettinius has declined to qualify as an expert on the power features of the program. You will find that the primary responsibility rests squarely on the shoulders of Mr. Gano Dunn, consultant for Mr. Stettinius in this field of activity of the Council for National Defense.

Here is what Mr. Knudsen said. I quote from page 5 and page 7 of the hearings.

Mr. KNUDSEN. I am not a power man; I am a manufacturer. My interest in this project is purely to see that we get aluminum enough or duralumin enough to build the planes with. * * *

Mr. TABER. Then all you are giving us is a sort of picture indicating that you feel that we need more aluminum capacity.

Mr. KNUDSEN. Yes, sir.

I quote also the following statement by Mr. Stettinius appearing on page 18 of the hearings:

Mr. STETTINIUS. Mr. Dunn is an expert in the field of power. I am not an expert in the field of power, but I subscribe to everything that Mr. Dunn has said in his testimony.

I have had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Dunn. I have talked with him both on and off the record. I know of the splendid standing he has enjoyed for years in his field of engineering. I have the greatest respect for his ability and for him as an individual. If Mr. Dunn came to us in connection with this program with his own figures, obtained as a result of his own independent investigation; if his recommendation were based on his own independent judgment, I should think much more highly of the proposal than I can under present conditions. I say this for the reason that it is perfectly apparent from Mr. Dunn's own statement that the figures upon which he has relied are not his own figures but the figures furnished by the T. V. A. and the T. V. A. engineers.

Now I want to call your attention to the fact that 7 months ago these same T. V. A. officials appeared before the Independent Offices Committee and presented detailed tables in connection with their testimony. These tables, which will be found at pages 1614 and 1615 of the hearings, set forth in detail the installed capacity, the available power, the estimated peak demand, and the estimated power requirements period by period up to and into the year 1943.

Now, if you take the figures furnished in those tables 7 months ago and deduct every kilowatt of power called for in the program which is before us today, including the increase to be anticipated in the consumption of municipalities, you will find that over and above the requirements of the T. V. A. system, if you include the steam plant alone, there will be some 16 percent of excess power available. If you include both plants called for here, the steam plant and the electrical plant, you come out with a figure of something like 35 percent in excess of the power required for all the purposes now under consideration.

Mr. Dunn stated that he had not even seen these T. V. A. figures, although they were officially presented to the Congress only 7 months ago. Mr. Dunn apparently relied on figures more recently presented by T. V. A. I have not seen those figures. It is therefore impossible to reconcile them with the figures officially presented 7 months ago. Once again apparently T. V. A. has furnished two sets of official figures. It is impossible to tell which set of figures, if either, is correct. I regret that Mr. Dunn's recommendations come to us based on one set of figures with no knowledge on his part whatsoever of the other set of figures.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EATON. The T. V. A. program has cost about one-half billion dollars, and I want to know as a Member of this House and representing taxpayers why it is, after this enormous expenditure, it is now necessary for a hurried defense proposition to be brought in here to spend $65,000,000 more to get something we ought to get out of the $500,000,000 already spent.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I cannot answer the gentleman's question. I think it is a very proper one. I do know, however, that this dam is brought in here with the same old argument that we must begin to build it at once or lose the flood waters some 2 years hence. The same argument has been used again and again by the T. V. A. in seeking this or that dam and almost invariably it has proved impossible to complete construction in the time estimated for construction.

Mr. EATON. This enterprise was started as a defense proposition and now it is worth nothing and we have to build a new one in a hurry.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that Mr. Dunn's testimony, appearing on page 19 of the hearings, is a valid argument in favor of defeating this $65,800,000 power dam for the benefit of the Aluminum Trust? Mr. Dunn states, on page 19 of the hearings:

> Water power used to be cheaper than steam power, but now steam power is cheaper than water power.

Mr. Dunn also stated:

> Roughly, water power requires three or four times as much capital as steam power does.

If we are interested in national defense and in conserving the funds of our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury, we had better build some steam plants in the coal-mining districts of the country, in view of Mr. Dunn's admissions that water power costs more than steam power and water power requires three or four times more capital than steam power does.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I personally agree with the gentleman, and I am coming to that matter in a moment.

I want to say in passing that although Mr. Dunn has relied on recent figures of the T. V. A., he was compelled to testify, in response to questions by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], that he was not sufficiently familiar with those figures to give the storage capacity of the proposed hydroelectric dam on the Holston River. Not until a week later did the committee receive any real information on such matters as the minimum flow of the river, the height of the proposed dam, and so forth, and then only from the T. V. A. engineers.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that on the record before your committee, the need of the power to be generated by this hydroelectric dam has not been established; that, on the contrary, on the basis of the record, the power to be produced by existing facilities, plus the new steam plant, is more than sufficient to take care of all foreseeable demands.

I further submit, Mr. Chairman, assuming that the power in question is in fact required, that the proponents of this program have failed to establish that the hydroelectric plant is either the quickest or the cheapest way in which to produce the power.

On the contrary, the record indicates, in my judgment, that the proposed hydroelectric plant is not entitled to consideration on either score.

The record indicates that the hydroelectric plant must be completed in time to catch the floodwaters of the spring of 1942. Failure to complete the structure by that time means that the construction is useless for national defense or any other purpose for a full year thereafter. All experience with T. V. A. indicates a period of at least 3 years as necessary for the completion of this structure. I offered to lay a wager with Mr. Dunn that the proposed dam, if approved, would not be constructed prior to June 30, 1942. The wager was not accepted. The record indicates that a steam plant could, in all probability, be completed within 18 months and therefore be available in time for the June 1942 bottleneck in power, which this program seeks to eliminate.

Those with experience in the hydroelectric field have suggested that additional power could be made available promptly through the release of reserves now held by T. V. A. for navigation and flood control, by proper arrangements with private companies for the purchase of off-peak power, by the operation of existing steam capacity, by drawing on other sources of power, such as Canada or Bonneville or Grand Coulee, or in other ways. Without passing judgment on these suggestions, the record indicates indisputably that under the proposed program we are to procure 100,000 kilowatts of power for $10,500,000, at the rate of $105 per kilowatt by steam power, while we are asked to pay $41,500,000 for 120,000 kilowatts of power, at the rate of $344 per kilowatt for power generated by the proposed hydroelectric plant. In other words, the hydroelectric-power proposal costs almost three and one-half times as much as the proposed steam power.

On the basis of testimony before your committee, I am unable to support the proposed hydroelectric dam. The need for the power has not been established. If it is in fact needed, it would appear that it can be produced far more cheaply and surely 2 years hence by steam power.

The only basis upon which I could support the hydroelectric-dam proposal would be on the basis of placing the newborn child on the doorstep of Mr. Dunn, hoping that it would prosper under his guidance. Personally, in the light of expert off-the-record testimony which I have obtained, I am unwilling to resort to this method of procedure.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me particularly unfortunate that the T. V. A. has been injected into this argument. The situation that the House finds itself in today is simply this: The Aluminum Co. of America has a plant in Alcoa, Tenn., which produces about 43 percent of the aluminum produced in the United States. The airplane industry is supplied to the extent of three-fourths of its requirements by this particular plant. During the period from July 1939 down to February 1940 the Aluminum Co.'s plant in Tennessee could not run to capacity because of lack of electrical power. In other words, this country's airplane-building program is dependent entirely upon the production of aluminum, and our production of aluminum is dependent upon electrical energy, securable in the vicinity of the plant that the Aluminum Co. of America has elected to place in the Tennessee Valley.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I regret I cannot. We are faced with the necessity of building airplanes and they are built out of aluminum. During the calendar year 1939 and the first 4 months of the calendar year 1940—16 months—the total importations of aluminum to the United States amounted to $34,500,000. That aluminum largely came from Canada, the United Kingdom, France, Norway, Switzerland. Gradually these importations have dwindled to the extent that we are now getting practically no aluminum from these countries. England needs all of the aluminum that Canada and the United Kingdom can produce for her own airplane needs. There will be no importations of aluminum from France and none from Norway and none from Switzerland, because Mr. Hitler is not going to permit importations from those countries to build planes for Great Britain and our needs.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I am sorry. If this country requires aluminum, the only way that we are going to get it is by passing this water-power bill. Aluminum means airplanes.

This country produced during the last calendar year 148,000 tons of aluminum. If it requires 5 tons of aluminum to build a plane, and all of this tonnage was used solely for airplane production, that would mean 29,600 airplanes yearly. Of course, we are going to have to use aluminum for something other than airplanes, so the airplane share of aluminum would not give us more than 10,000 airplanes, and yet we talk about 50,000 more airplanes, and talk is all it is, unless aluminum is produced in sufficient quantities to supply our needs.

Now, what is the situation about aluminum and the production of aluminum in this country and elsewhere?

I am reading from page 634 of the Minerals Yearbook, 1939:

> Although official data on world output of bauxite and aluminum in 1938 are incomplete, both commodities probably established new high records. For the third time in the last 5 years the production of aluminum in Germany exceeded that in the United States. Of the total output of the world, Germany contributed 29 percent and the United States 23 percent. Canada, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and France ranked next in importance as producers. The total consumption of more than 500,000 short tons of aluminum in 1938 can be attributed partly to the strategic importance of the metal in a war-threatened world.

Germany ranks first in production of aluminum. The United States ranks second, and Canada ranks third, and the reason Canada ranks third is because of the enormous water-power facilities of the Dominion of Canada.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us look this question squarely in the face. Without electrical energy we cannot produce aluminum and without aluminum we cannot have the airplanes that are necessary for the military protection of the people of the United States. That is the story. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I want, if I may, to answer just briefly one of the arguments advanced by my very delightful and very distinguished colleague from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS]. He told us that the power plant at Alcoa, Tenn., produced 75 percent of the aluminum produced in the country. Now, that is a very important and stupendous statement from two standpoints——

Mr. JENNINGS. Will the gentleman yield? I said 43 percent.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I understood the gentleman to say 75 percent and I wrote it down that way, but let it be 43 percent. That will do as well. That still is a stupendous statement from two standpoints. One is that it is entirely too much of a percentage of any product to be produced by any one plant in this great country of ours—especially of a product so essential as aluminum. My idea of defense is to conserve one's resources when produced. This is quite as important as to produce them. We must learn a lesson which some of the combatants in the present war failed to learn. We must scatter and diversify our production plants so that if one is put out of operation the whole production of that one product is not endangered. We ought not to increase the production of this very important product at this large plant. Aluminum can be produced almost anywhere for the raw materials from which it is produced is not found in Tennessee. The gentleman's statement is also one worthy of notice when he said that Alcoa has been operating for 20 years. That was long before the T. V. A. was ever thought of. How did the Alcoa plant operate then without the T. V. A.? The T. V. A. was not there then. How would it operate now if the T. V. A. had not been created? It would operate as before, for the T. V. A. is not indispensable. How would other aluminum plants down in that section operate now if it were not for the T. V. A.? They would probably operate much more freely. Some of them have petitioned and asked time after time that they be given permission to build their own dams, build their own power plants. They do not want to be bound by this ruthless economic giant. But this gigantic octopus that has been built up under the protection of the National Government insists on dominating the whole region.

The T. V. A. is determined to stamp out all competition of every kind. Its officers, who can always find it convenient to come into our galleries, as they are today, insist on dominating the situation.

Are the T. V. A. officials interested in this new dam from the standpoint of national defense? No. They are interested because they want to extend their power. They want their dynasty to extend its power and influence. It wants to reach out in every possible direction. Why did it not include this Cherokee Dam in its first program of dam construction if it is so important? Why did they omit it from its program? I cannot believe it is so important now. This great program of power construction planned by the New Deal was wonderful to contemplate when first published. It was wonderful enough to be terrorizing. I wish I had my big map to show how extensive and expansive this program is. It starts from the headwaters of the Tennessee River halfway up in the State of Virginia and goes down across North Carolina and Tennessee, over across Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi, and back up across Tennessee again. This one little dam that they propose to build now is right up in the northeast corner of the State of Tennessee. It is on the headwaters of Holston River, which is nothing but a small mountain stream, and is practically dry much of the time. What do they expect to benefit from the construction of this $35,000,000 dam? They can hardly expect it to be more efficacious than the beautiful and much advertised Norris Dam. Just how wonderful is the Norris Dam today? I do not know how many of you have seen it. My, how in its majestic whiteness it rears itself into the air two or three hundred feet! White and beautiful, it gleams in the sunlight. It is a thing of beauty, but, oh, how useless it is today. It and the city of Norris were terrible mistakes, and we have a bridge in our home city that they call Misfit Bridge. They should rename this dam and call it Mistake Dam. Today the Norris Dam is useless. It has been for many days. It was useless for a good portion of last year. What is wrong, you ask. My reply is that the water is so low that none is going over the spillway, and the river is dry for a long distance below the dam. The beautiful dam is there, and millions have been practically wasted to give Senator NORRIS a monument. There is some water back of the dam. This is in the form of a lake, upon which the pleasure seekers paddle their canoes or race their motorboats or leisurely fish and swim, all at the expense of Uncle Sam. Poor, deluded, ignorant Congressmen that we have been in the heavy tax-paying States to vote our money for a playground that is not necessary and terrifically expensive.

Now, you ask me, what are we going to do at this Cherokee Dam? We will do just what is done at Norris Dam. We will spend $35,000,000 just for a monument for some uplifter. I have a letter from the most prominent man living in that community today, and he says, "I walked across the Holston River a few days ago, and in many places right exactly where they propose to put this new dam the river is dry." My friends, I call upon you not to be carried by this war hysteria to do what your more sober judgment would condemn. If Norris Dam is a mistake, Cherokee will be also.

My friends, if you talk about national defense, what are the elements that should characterize a project to recommend it as one of importance to national defense? First, the project ought to recommend itself from the point of the swiftness with which it can be constructed. Speed and time are often the principal prerequisites. The cheapness with which it can be constructed is also an important item in determining the desirability of a project. You have heard a lot of testimony here today about Mr. Dunn and one or two other gentlemen. Certainly they are all respectable men. Who is it who wants to impute improper motives to these gentlemen? I am sure I do not. But, friends, listen to me; in the testimony given by these gentlemen to the effect that this dam would be feasible and would be advisable they say most emphatically that they can construct a steam plant for producing electricity for $10,000,000 which will produce more power than this dam will produce when it is running under most favorable circumstances. Why spend $35,000,000 to construct a dam which will produce practically no firm power when you can by spending $10,000,000 construct a steam plant which will produce much more power, all of which will be firm and marketable power ready to be used any and every day?

Half of the time this dam will not produce any power; there will not be enough water there to produce power. It will be just like the Norris Dam. The distinguished Senator was here in the Chamber until just a few minutes ago. I wish he had stayed so that he might have heard us talk about that beautiful dam that bears his name but does not bring to him the honor and glory that he expected. The Norris Dam was not constructed for protection or national defense. It was constructed there as a social experiment to try out Government-controlled power. It was never a navigation nor a flood-control project. It was essentially a power project from its beginning.

I am opposed to this whole Government-controlled plan of power production. I have said many times on this floor that I am not for the destruction of all these dams and plants that have been built; I would not dynamite these fine structures that have been put up; rather, I would complement them; I would build by the side of each one of them a coal-burning, steam-producing power plant so that they could have an effective and constantly sustained flow of usable power. Take the Norris Dam, for instance, a great, silent monument today not worth a dime except for recreation. If you had by it a fine, big, steam-power plant you would have something worth while. But I hope the time will come when we will take out of Government control this gigantic agency and put it under safe and efficient control.

How did Alcoa operate before T. V. A.? They operated on their own steam-generated power or their own dams. You ask why did the Aluminum Co. go to Alcoa or any other place down in that section? I do not know. I presume they saw the advantage of cheap coal and cheap water-power sites. Why did they not take it to St. Louis or some place where they treated or processed this bauxite ore? Why did they not build it in southern Ohio? I think they could have done as well. According to Mr. Parker, the chief engineer, it would take a lot of coal to produce power by steam. He said it would take 1,400 tons of coal a day to generate the power necessary. He seems to think that 1,400 tons is a tremendous tonnage. In my own district there are several mines that can produce more than 1,400 tons of coal per day. We have several that will produce twice or three times that much. Why not construct one of these plants over in Pennsylvania, or in southern Illinois, or in southern Indiana?

My distinguished friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] said something to the effect that this aluminum plant is down there and that it should be supplemented. Well, my goodness, is there no place in these great United States of America for a second plant? Must we be limited in our production of aluminum to one producing plant? Why should we not have several other plants located elsewhere so that we would not be limited to reliance upon one producing plant only? If the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi who speaks so frequently in favor of T. V. A. were here he would no doubt vote to build this dam for the Aluminum Co. of America. Not one of you will stand up here and admit that you are voting for this bill to help any one plant, but if you vote for this bill you are casting a vote to help one company that has one plant that produces 43 percent of this one product in these great United States of America.

Mr. Chairman, let us use a little common sense here today. Let us have a little reason; let us look at this thing from the standpoint of common sense and reason. We are all for national defense; we want to produce aluminum; but will anybody say to me that we cannot produce aluminum in any place but Tennessee? Is that true? Well, bless your life, it cannot be true. Then, if we can produce it somewhere else, let us produce it somewhere else so we shall not be entirely dependent on one place.

Let us for just a minute look at the relative costs of producing electricity by coal as against water power. You cannot find a statement by any reputable engineer anywhere that does not say that steam will produce electricity cheaper than it can be produced by water power. Let us look at the testimony of Mr. Dunn. I understand he is now in the gallery. I have never had the honor to meet him, but they say he is a wonderful man, and I believe he is; he must be because he surely has a great reputation in the power field. What did he say? He said that up to about 10 or 20 years ago it took 8 pounds of coal to produce 1 kilowatt of power, but now they have it perfected so that it takes only nine-tenths of a pound of coal to produce 1 kilowatt of power.

Mr. Chairman, is there any magic about this power-producing business? Can it be done nowhere except in Tennessee? If not, how does the great State of New York operate without the T. V. A.? If not, how does the great State of Michigan operate without it? How does the great State of Ohio operate without it? The plants in Tennessee should be compelled to operate just as the large plants in all the other States operate. Some of us prophesied that the T. V. A. would fail to carry on. We prophesied that this thing never would carry itself. Last year it failed and again this year it failed. Out in Ohio I have two great power plants in my section that produce power by coal. One of these plants, I believe, uses 4,000 tons of coal a day. I do not know who owns the power companies. One is the Allegheny, and one is the Ohio, and one is the Southern Ohio. I do not know much about them except I know who the local managers are. But what did these companies have to do last year? They had to operate their power plants in the southern parts of Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky to the limit and to divert their load into the Tennessee Valley to take up the load that T. V. A. could not carry. Why this terrible failure on the part of the T. V. A.? The T. V. A. sold more power than they could generate. That is a habit with them. Mr. Lilienthal had to admit when we had our investigation of the T. V. A. that they sold power many times before they ever made it. And they tell me—I cannot prove this, but they tell me—that they are down there now working on this dam site provided for here in this bill, and have been working on it quite a little while spending money recklessly, with no appropriation whatever made for it. What effrontery. How do they do that, Mr. Chairman? How do they justify their arrogance? They do it because of the organization that they have developed down there and because of the unrestricted power we have assigned to them.

We have surrendered power to them to an extent that is little short of shameful. As I stated before, they march across these States with a tread that is irresistible, with a tread that is crushing. They ask no advice of a governor. They tell him. They ask no mayor, they ask no county commissioners, for a concession or advice. They tell them what to do. Down there if you want to run for constable you have to have a T. V. A. sign on you or you cannot be elected. Mr. Chairman, what kind of a situation is that? What do you think of that kind of a grab when they ask for this power or for this dam under the stress of the present times? Do not be carried away by the claim that this is national defense. Look rather at the people who are interested in it. Why should the T. V. A. people be in the gallery today? Does it make any personal difference to them?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; the gentleman is such a fine fellow and always yields, that I yield to him.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman has commented several times on that. I personally requested the T. V. A. and Mr. Dunn to be present in order to give us technical information if we need it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not know how they could give it from the gallery.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Would the gentleman let them come on the floor and give it?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; and neither would the gentleman. This is not the place for it.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he has information to the effect that this dam has been started without any authorization or appropriation?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I cannot give you that with the same authority that I give you the information that these rivers are dry. I gave you that emphatically and without any equivocation. With reference to the statement whether they have been started to work on this dam site, I only have that from the letter of one individual, and I do not vouch for it. I did not say I would vouch for it. Let us not have any mistake about that. But I believe it, and I believe it because I have had the experience and I know how they operate, and you members of the Committee on Appropriations ought to believe it because you know how they operate. They fear no law but themselves, and they recognize no authority but the New Deal.

Let us not be carried away by their surreptitious demand for more authority.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is going to introduce an amendment, for which I will vote, because I am against this kind of control. I am against the Government doing these things. I am in favor of letting the Aluminum Co. buy its own power like they do in Ohio, Indiana, and in every other State of the Union. Let them go out and buy the power. Let some power company come in and supply it. That is the American way of doing business. I shall vote for the amendment which the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] proposes, because I think it will make the T. V. A. more certain, more useful, and more effective against the time when a Republican administration shall come back to power. I hope then that the Republican Party will do away with all these commissions and take charge of this giant and see that the power is sold as they do at Boulder Dam. Sell it to whoever can use it and pay for it. Let the Government get out of the power business. Then I think we should turn back to the Department of Agriculture all the agricultural activities of the T. V. A., such as the fertilizer business, and put these fellows out of business. At present the T. V. A. officials are more powerful than any Governor. The Federal Government should not grant powers to an Authority that will permit it to challenge or thwart the States in the operation of their functions and inherent rights.

Let me tell you, in all seriousness, let us be sensible about this thing. We are for national defense, but let us follow a sensible course in our effort to achieve it. Build no more dams, but build steam plants that will always be dependable and will not run dry. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, as I see it, there is only one major problem involved in the proposition before the Committee at the present time, and this is whether we are going to provide adequate facilities for turning out national defense installations in the shortest possible time, and at the lowest possible cost. In all walks of life we find that we have to have confidence in the other fellow, and that is true whether it be in our social life, industrial life, or economic life. We have to have confidence in the other fellow. When we go out here and get on the elevator we do not ask questions. We assume that the operator of the elevator has it in a safe condition when we get on it. When we go down to the train, take the train, and get into our berth, we do not ask who the engineer or who the switchman, or who the operators are that will guide the train through the night. We take it for granted that they know their business. When we go down here and get on an airplane and go up into the heavens during the night or day we do not ask who the pilot is and how much training he has had. We assume he is placed there because of his knowledge and efficiency.

In this particular case I have confidence in the men who testified before our committee. I have confidence in all of them, and especially in the three men to whom I refer; Mr. Knudsen, because of the position he has occupied in the field of production with General Motors that uses more aluminum perhaps than any other firm. Mr. Knudsen stated in his testimony:

> My interest in this project is purely to see that we get aluminum enough or duralumin enough to build the planes with. I suppose you know the average plane takes about 5 tons of this stuff.
>
> Mr. WOODRUM. Five tons of of aluminum?
> Mr. KNUDSEN. Yes; that is the average, and my interest here in this project is to get aluminum enough for the planes, and the average quantity per plane is about 5 tons, meaning both in the frame itself and in the parts of the motor that are made of aluminum, such as the crankcase, pistons, and cylinder head. And in this area where the T. V. A. is located, that is outlined by the General Staff as area E. We have areas A, B, C, D, and E which are satisfactory to the General Staff for plant location purposes, being away from the shore, and in this area E, besides aluminum plants, we have some other plants projected, the actual location of which I am unable to give you at this time, because the sites have not been picked; but they are in this area E. So that there will be a call for power beyond what will be required for aluminum.

Then over on page 11, Mr. Dunn, in whom I have the greatest confidence—I have followed him as an engineer for a number of years—had this to say:

> And here am I talking in favor of Government water power. The reason for this is, first, that it is a matter of national defense; and second, this is an unusual situation for a water power, because the storage that will be created by this Cherokee Dam on the Holston River is at the top of a series of dams. It is the topmost storage on the stream, and therefore the storage created by it will not only energize the 90,000 kilowatts that it is proposed to put at its own dam, but 90,000 more kilowatts down the river.

Again, I want to quote Mr. Stettinius, and may I say that anyone who has been chairman of the board of the United States Steel Co. for a number of years and has their confidence would naturally know something about the production of commodities and where they could be produced at the minimum cost. On page 17 Mr. Stettinius said to the committee:

> I think there are many emergency expenditures that should be made by the Government for facilities that should be owned by the Government. I might mention the vast expenditures for the item, for instance, of armor plate, which will approach $20,000,000. That, of course, will never be used in peacetime, and my recommendation is that the plants we build be owned by the United States Government. If necessary, they could be leased to private companies for operation, with the title remaining in the Government of the United States.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, I think that in times like this we have to take the word of those who have been placed in a position where we feel confident they know what they are talking about. We have confidence in General Marshall, Chief of Staff of the Army, and we have confidence in the leaders of other institutions. I have enough confidence in these men who testified before the committee and this bill should be passed by a unanimous vote of the House this afternoon. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, the great question before us this afternoon is national defense. I yield to no one in my desire to put this country in an adequate position to defend itself from all aggression. I call your attention to the fact that we are this afternoon asked to appropriate $25,000,000 in the expectation that we shall increase that amount next year by $40,000,000 additional. I want to show you here the report of the engineer, Mr. Dunn, in whom everybody here has expressed such great confidence, that only about one-half of the power that is requested to be developed under this bill is to be used for national defense or to meet a so-called national emergency. I want to read you Mr. Dunn's statement on page 15 of the hearings:

> I am not for a moment saying that this amount of increased power which we have approved is exactly the amount that we need for the aluminum production. It is considerably more. It is nearly twice as much. But, on the other hand, I am saying that in addition to that amount there is 14,000 kilowatts for this new powder plant (since the letter of July 1 was written it has been increased from 7,000 to 14,000). Then there is 8,000 kilowatts for metallurgical work that is going on there; there is 14,000 kilowatts for a proposed new paper mill at Savannah, Tenn.; then there is 50,000 kilowatts for increased consumption of the public and general uses of the cities that are already taking it.

If that is national defense, then I do not know anything. Where is the emergengy for 300,000 kilowatts? Is it national defense when you are furnishing power to cities that are already taking it at less than cost and when you are furnishing 14,000 kilowatts for a proposed paper mill, when we have paper mills in this country that can furnish all the paper that is necessary in time of war or in time of peace, and when the paper mills of this country need the business and want to keep their own plants in operation now? I say, then, that this bill is camouflaged, I say this bill is hypocrisy, I say this bill is only trying to fool and humbug the American people. You are trying to hoodwink the Members of Congress into voting for something in the name of national defense. God give us more men in Congress and in high public places who will be honest and not say when they make proposals that they will be used for national defense when they only set the Government up in more business.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield for a question.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman why this bill calls for $25,000,000, when it is admitted that you expect to follow it up with other bills increasing the amount to $65,000,000? Why do we do this sort of thing by piecemeal? Is it fooling anybody?

Mr. RICH. It will take 2 years to build this dam, and they will need only $25,000,000 of it now. We have been appropriating and appropriating and appropriating right along. That is practically all we have done this session. Before we get through we will have many, many more appropriation bills. I have never seen anything like it in my life, nor have I ever heard anything like it.

Let me call your attention to the fact that Mr. Dunn also made this statement:

> They present this and the President asks us, "Is this a thing that is needed for the national defense?"

Who are "they"? Lilienthal and his gang down there, who want to build up the Tennessee Valley Authority. Lilienthal and his gang, who say, "If you do not give me this, we will tell the Aluminum Co. that by July 1 we will turn their power off." Did you ever hear a sound businessman make such a threat? Then they try to create a national-defense aspect to this so that Lilienthal and his gang can build up this great power project called the T. V. A. I say it is rotten. I do not call it a national-defense bill. I call it a camouflage bill, unjust and unwarranted and unsound.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] just gave you some very fine statements to the effect that instead of concentrating all of our aluminum manufacturing in one spot we ought to try to divide it up and put it at other places in this country. All your eggs in one basket might get broken. All military plants in one spot might be bombed.

It has been proven by Mr. Dunn, this great engineer of whom you talk, that we can generate electricity by steam more cheaply than by water. All you need to do is read his statement on pages 18 and 19 of the hearings and see what he says. It is important enough for me to read it so that some of you will get that point. He says they can produce steam power with about nine-tenths of a pound of coal per kilowatt-hour. I quote:

> With the cost of steam power going down, as it has for a number of years, it has passed below the cost of water power. Water power used to be cheaper than steam power but now steam power is cheaper than water power.

Let me show you that to produce 120,000 kilowatts of steam power they want to spend $10,500,000, and to produce the balance, or 180,000 kilowatts of water power, they want to spend $54,500,000 to build the dams and install generators. Water plays out in drought periods—coal and oil will always be here.

Does not that reveal to you, from the standpoint of a business proposition or from the standpoint of national defense, that you can build and equip a steam plant in one-third of the time you would be able to get this water-power development constructed; and does it not convince you that when you can build a 120,000-kilowatt plant for ten and a half million dollars, and you have to spend fifty-four and a half million dollars for 180,000 kilowatts of water-power electricity, when the sum total as stated by Mr. Dunn is not going to be 300,000 kilowatts, but the total power generated is to be 280,000 kilowatts—does not that convince you, according to the figures he gives in the report, that a steam plant should be constructed?

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Washington for a question.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman will admit that the initial cost of producing electrical energy is not necessarily the measuring stick as to the cost of energy throughout the years after it is installed.

Mr. RICH. No; but Mr. Dunn has stated it is cheaper to manufacture current, considering the cost of the investment and the amount of interest which you have to pay. I know there are a lot of people that do not expect the Government to get anything back when the Government goes into these great water projects. They expect your taxpayers and my taxpayers to foot the bill; they make up the difference in taxes between cost and sale price; and that is why they are camouflaging and humbugging the American people in this way. The Government operation of business most always is at a loss; very seldom is there an exception to this.

Then you talk about putting 9,000,000 men to work. I say do it by helping the miner, the railroader, and you will help the farmer as well, for every kilowatt generated there will be required 10 men in the mines and 3 men on the railroads to move the coal; and when you are talking and thinking about putting men in this country to work, why do you not diversify your industry and put the industries in the places where they will be strategically placed and cut out this paper mill in the guise of national defense and cut out the Government furnishing the power to these municipalities under the guise of national defense; that is a dishonest thing to do; and do all of these things in a sound, businesslike way, in an honest way? Put the proposal on its merits, with no thought of trying to set the Government in business in the guise of national defense.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In view of the record, is it not a fact that this project can be placed in the category mentioned by Mr. Willkie, according to Mr. Dunn's testimony, appearing on page 16, when he stated that Mr. Willkie said:

> Nothing is more important than defense, and there is nothing which might and will mask more political logrolling than the flag-waving variety of national defense.

If that is what Mr. Willkie said, does it not apply to this bill? In view of the record, is this not shown to be an antinational defense, T. V. A. political "pork barrel" and log-rolling piece of legislation?

Mr. RICH. You are exactly right. In my opinion, if there was ever a bill presented to the Congress that represented an effort to camouflage the Members of Congress and camouflage American people, this bill is it. I tell you I cannot see how the Members of Congress are going to support such legislation under the guise of national defense. I tell you men and women that when you talk about national defense you have got to have in mind a sound Treasury. You have got to have honest people; and it is high time we got honest men and women to represent this Government of ours and bring in bills just on their merits and what they will accomplish, and not under the guise of national defense. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, let me say at the outset that I am going to support this measure and I do not come down into the Well of the House to find fault with the judgment of the men who brought in this legislation or who suggested it to the Appropriations Committee, but I do want to say this: I am satisfied that the National Defense Advisory Board has not to date investigated the four corners of the United States in respect to their program. No doubt this undertaking now proposed is deserving, and you cannot tie to it the suggestion that it is partisan. You cannot even say that it is one supported by the sponsors of public power as against private power, because that is not the fact. Those who recommend this, and those who made this finding, are the best-known proponents of private power in the United States. They rank on a par with Mr. Willkie himself.

So it cannot be branded from that angle, and I take it therefore that it is necessary. T. V. A. is not asking for it, but I assert that those who sponsor it, with all respect to them, have not investigated all the possibilities, and there are going to be many new calls for the use of electrical energy, and the critics of the present administration will doubtless live to see the day when they will recognize, and even admit, that they were mistaken in their criticisms on the expansion of this great national power program.

GENERATING SOURCES AND TRANSMISSION LINES

Grand Coulee has an ultimate capacity of 18 generating units of 105,000 kilowatts each. Three of these units have been contracted for and are in process of construction and will be in operation before the end of 1941. The smaller house or auxiliary units will be completed ready for service this summer.

The Bonneville Dam is completed and 2 units, totaling over 86,400 kilowatts, are in operation. Two more units, which will make the total available capacity 195,000 kilowatts, will be in operation this fall or winter. Two more units have been authorized, are in process of construction, and will be completed by the end of 1941. At that time Bonneville's available capacity will be 300,000 kilowatts. This Congress authorized the foundations for units 6 to 10, inclusive. The remaining units, totaling 218,000 kilowatts, could be completed in 2 years' time at a very low cost per kilowatt.

The 220,000-volt transmission line connecting Bonneville and Grand Coulee will be completed this summer. This line will have an immediate capacity of 100,000 kilowatts to shift current in either direction. The two 220,000-volt transmission lines connecting Bonneville to West Vancouver, Wash., are completed and are delivering current. The lines to Portland, Salem, and Eugene, Oreg., are also completed, and the line from Vancouver to Kelso, Tacoma, and Seattle is in process and will be completed within a year. All that is needed to give a 250,000-kilowatt outlet from Grand Coulee is closing the gap between Seattle and Coulee. This could be accomplished in less than a year.

In addition transmission lines have been authorized from the midpoint on the Bonneville-Coulee line to Hanford, Pasco, Walla Walla, and Colfax, Wash., with branches to Pendleton, Oreg., and Yakima and Ellenburg, Wash. These lines are under survey. If these lines and the Oregon branch lines are projected on a map it will be seen that the two States have a considerable coverage, which can easily take care of the power requirements of any raw-material industry. These lines will provide interconnections with the public storage systems of Tacoma and Seattle and the principal private systems, thus "firming up" the installed capacity at Grand Coulee and Bonneville. Here is a natural set-up to supply large quantities of the lowest-cost power to be found in America.

We have in the United States, in the Northwest, power galore, and it is going to be used, and I want it to be considered for use by the end of 1941. There will be brought into the States of Oregon and Washington, at Coulee and Bonneville, in excess of 500,000 kilowatts of power, in addition to what we have now, instead of the amount mentioned in the statement made by Mr. Dunn on page 11 of this record, where he says there will be 60,000 kilowatts.

I am not here to criticize Mr. Dunn, but he shows an evident lack of knowledge of what there is in the West when he states we will have but 60,000 kilowatts additional of power out there.

There is an aluminum plant being built there, and it will be in production very shortly. It is being built by the only concern that can produce aluminum, the Aluminum Co. of America. This company has a practically 100-percent monopoly on aluminum, and this is a most unfortunate and unhappy situation. Sixty percent of the airplane construction of the United States is or will be on the Pacific coast. The aluminum pigs that will be produced by Bonneville's power will have to be shipped clear across the continent to be fabricated, and when fabricated shipped back to the coast to go into planes, and then they will be shipped back again across the continent. That situation should be given consideration, and there should be careful examination made of all the United States and not adopt what seems to be a policy, and I again find myself where I must criticize. There seems to be an attitude on the part of the United States Army men that the United States consists very largely of that territory from this region north, and from the Mississippi River east, less than 20 percent of the area of the Nation, and they are concentrating nearly all our defense program in this small area.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. And in connection with the power to be developed on the Columbia River, does not the gentleman think our national defense today should take into consideration the fact of the manufacture of airplanes on the west coast, the power of the Columbia River, which will be available, and also 30,000,000 tons of alunite in the southwest part of Utah which are available as the best source of aluminum in the United States.

Mr. LEAVY. Yes; and more than 30,000,000 tons of magnesite also available in that region in and around Grand Coulee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 minute more.

Mr. LEAVY. According to the present national-defense program, by 1943, the requirements for the Pacific coast airplane production will be about 100,000 tons of aluminum. The plant being built at Vancouver, Wash., which will be in operation shortly, will produce 30,000 tons of pig aluminum. Why should we not give consideration at least to cheapest hydro power on the face of the earth, Bonneville with more than 500,000 kilowatts and Grand Coulee, with 1,800,000 kilowatts, and a steady flow of water, as an assured source. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has again expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCHENS].

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, the resolution before us provides an appropriation of $25,000,000 for construction of a dam on the Holston River near Jefferson City, Tenn., the purpose of the dam being to create power and generate electricity for the reduction of bauxite ore to aluminum, 5 tons of which, I am informed, are necessary for the construction of one American bombing plane. It is estimated that a total of $65,000,000 will be required to finish the projects, the object of this resolution.

I rise before this honorable body to call attention to the fact that over 95 percent of the located bauxite-ore deposits in America are in central western Arkansas and that 90 percent of the ore used in the United States is from Bauxite, Ark. In this connection let me point out also that near these bauxite-ore deposits, at the foothills of the Missouri and Ouachita Mountains, in southern and western Arkansas, are to be found unlimited quantities of cinnabar from which quicksilver, an indispensable war material, is extracted. These deposits of cinnabar are in Clark, Pike, and Howard Counties, Ark. There are numerous small cinnabar-mining companies now mining cinnabar in Clark County, in my district, and in Pike and Howard, adjoining counties in the district of my colleague, Hon. FADJO CRAVENS. In that territory are also bentonite, the Okay clay and cement deposits, lead, novaculite, zinc, some manganese, and the only diamond mine in America. Allow me to call your attention also to the fact that just below that area, in southern Arkansas, are to be found some of the greatest oil and gas fields in the world; while just to the northwest, near Fort Smith, Ark., are to be found unlimited deposits of coal, both anthracite and bituminous; and on Ouachita River, near Camden, in my district, are an estimated 75,000,000 tons of lignite.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in that territory, where is located all of these necessary, critical, and strategic minerals, is one of the great rivers of the West, and the only navigable river west of the Mississippi, and I refer to the Ouachita River that rises in northwestern Arkansas, flows in a southeasterly direction through the lower Ozarks, Ouachita, and Missouri Mountains to the Mississippi River. On that river and its tributaries in these mountains are to be found some of the finest power sites in America. I have been trying to excite and arouse the interest of the Government in further controlling, developing, and harnessing the waters of the Ouachita River and its tributaries, not only for the control of floods that cause great damage to the people, but for the enormous power available in the waterfalls of that river and its tributaries in the midst and vicinity of these enormous mineral deposits.

I am pleased to inform the Congress that, after long effort, I now have ready for the Congress a most favorable report of the War Department, its Board of Engineers, Federal Power Commission, and National Resources Board, approved by the President, recommending that a dual-purpose dam for flood control and power be constructed immediately at The Narrows, in the midst of all of these minerals and ores, on Little Missouri River, one of the tributaries of the Ouachita River, at a cost of no more than $6,800,000, and which will also include protection from floods of the lands of Terre Noire and Ozan basins. Not only will this dam and reservoir give flood protection to the people, but it will generate, as a beginning, 15,400,000 kilowatts of power, to be easily increased to 30,000,000 kilowatts according to the report.

Likewise, in that report is a reserved approval and recommendation of another dam and reservoir on Muddy Fork Creek, a tributary of Little Missouri River, also in the center of these great deposits of mineral ores, the cost of which would not exceed three and one-half million dollars. In other words, the necessary power can be generated within the area of the ores for $15,000,000 or less. The United States Board of Engineers, for the first time in its history, last August visited that area, personally inspected the dam sites, some of the mines, examined the levees, canals, and flood-damaged lands of Terre Noire and Ozan creeks, and held public hearings at Prescott, Ark.

It occurs to me that as a sound business proposition, where we have all the ores and all of the potential power necessary to develop those ores, such development in the interest of economy, flood control, and the best interests of the people and national defense, should be in the area where such ores and minerals are to be found. I am constrained to believe that those in authority do not appreciate or have been insufficiently informed of the immense possibilities of obtaining cheaply, at the source and in the same area, all the ores, critical and strategic minerals, and power necessary for their development where the greatest deposits in America are to be found.

Numerous dam sites for power and flood control exist on Ouachita River and its tributaries, as well as on the White River and its tributaries, in Arkansas, for the development of power equal, if not greater, than that of the Tennessee Valley, and, mind you, this power is there in the midst, as I repeat, of the greatest mineral deposits in America and in the vicinity of some of the greatest oil, gas, and coal fields in the world.

I shall not oppose this resolution under the circumstances in these perilous times. We are in an emergency to make America safe for Americans, and it is our purpose to build the best and more bombing planes and the best and more destroyers, battleships, cruisers, torpedo boats, submarines, tanks, antiaircraft and antitank guns, and the most destructive shells and munitions in the world, but in doing so let us avoid waste of time, effort, and money in obtaining and reducing to use and assembling the necessary materials. Let our Government not overlook that great mineral and power area in Arkansas and its other resources. Let it not overlook our inland and strategic position in Arkansas.

Forty-three percent of all aluminum, it appears, is produced at Alcoa, Tenn., from the bauxite ores of Arkansas by Mellon's Aluminum Co. of America. Is it wise to increase and centralize our defense facilities in one area? It occurs to me that a dispersion of such facilities is necessary so that the acquisition of necessary defense materials will not be jeopardized if one plant or one area be out of commission. I therefore commend to the Congress, the National Defense Council, and the President a prompt consideration of the potential power, critical and strategic minerals, and other resources, and their immediate development in Arkansas.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN].

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, out of deference to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], I shall not reopen the old sores and I shall say no more about past controversy in respect to the T. V. A., but I shall bring him up to date on the arrogance and impudence of the Tennessee Valley Authority. After the objection was made the other day I received a great many letters from people interested in the Tennessee Valley district, complimenting me upon my action and stating their views. One of those gentlemen wrote:

> Already they have hundreds of men at work at this dam site, and our town and other towns nearby are all flooded with T. V. A. cars and men. This has been going on for 2 weeks, and the money not even appropriated.

That 2 weeks' period fits in very nicely, almost exactly, with Mr. Lilienthal's arrival in Washington, his visit to the President, and his reference to the Defense Commission and his appearance on the radio on the 20th of June when he announced to the world that this measure was going to pass before the end of the week, and that was Thursday. It will be interesting for us to know who is running this country.

When my time expired under the rule, I was showing that recent statements and reports that have been made indicate that this legislation is unnecessary and ought not to be enacted at this time. Bear in mind that this action is going to bind future Congresses to expenditures that are going to be made pursuant to this proposal. To show the lack of necessity for it I want to read what Mr. Stettinius said in his press conference, as reported in the New York Times on Sunday, July 14. I believe it was a report of progress that he gave out. In speaking of essential materials being made available, he said that—

> The aluminum industry has advised the Commission of plans for expansion and its willingness to erect plants to cover the entire program as needs develop.

Now, if we have the assurances of the producers of aluminum and from the aluminum industry that they are willing to furnish all that is necessary as the needs develop, why do we experiment with this proposition, bind ourselves and future Congresses to spend $66,000,000, from which there will be absolutely no benefit until December 1941 when the steam plant will be completed? The hydro plant will not be completed until October 1942.

Then last night perhaps some of you heard Mr. Knudsen being interviewed over the radio by Mr. Pearson and Mr. Allen, in which he stated that by autumn American airplane capacity would jump from 900 planes monthly, the present capacity, to 1,500. The present production of motors is 2,200 monthly.

Then, of course, we have the statement of Secretary Morgenthau. It has been rather difficult for me to understand how Mr. Morgenthau fits into this picture, but he evidently speaks with authority; and he says that in addition to the American needs the airplane industry will supply 3,000 planes per month to the British, in addition to our own demands.

There is a first line of national defense, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] knows what it is. It is a stable financial policy and a sound Treasury. When we come to an expenditure of $65,800,000 we ought to stop and think what that means. We have increased the nuisance taxes. The tax of $1 a barrel on beer only brings in $43,000,000. Those of us who are concerned with raising revenue must give some thought to expenditures. I do not propose to turn the Treasury over to David Lilienthal and let him send it all down the Tennessee River.

Here is the real reason why they want this increased power. They have overloaded their supply. They collected $15,000,000 last year from current sold. Does the Treasury get any of that? It does not. It is all spent by the T. V. A. It reminds me of the story of the chap who went into the oil-refining business. He sold a lot of stock to his friends. When the factory was built and operating he asked them all to come down and inspect the plant. They went down and had a fine lunch and they saw the beautiful side walls all done with tile and partitions made of plate glass, beautiful nickel-plated machinery all running smoothly; and one of the stockholders asked him, "How many barrels of oil do you make?" He told him. He then asked, "How many barrels of oil do you sell?" His reply was, "Oh, we don't sell any oil. It takes all the oil we make to run the plant." [Laughter.]

That is about what happens in the Tennessee Valley today.

I respect Mr. Dunn. He has made a valuable contribution to the American Congress in the testimony he has given in this regard. From his testimony we can readily gather the real facts.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I want to read this analysis I have made of Mr. Dunn's testimony. If I have time after that I will be glad to yield.

Mr. Dunn has made a valuable contribution to us who are really conscientiously and earnestly desirous of knowing what is going on in the Tennessee Valley, and getting the good out of the T. V. A., if it is possible, and preventing it from running us into very serious debt. This is a digest of Mr. Dunn's testimony:

Point 1. The T. V. A. supply of electricity is not only fully loaded, that is, at this time, but it is overloaded, and makes maximum use of the limited amount of water that is available.

Point 2. The amount of increased power sought is not the amount needed for aluminum production. In addition to that amount, there are 14,000 kilowatts for a new powder plant. That powder plant needs that power now if it needs it at all. It cannot wait for 2 years to get it. Not $1 of this appropriation will go to any current furnished to that powder plant. There are also 8,000 kilowatts for metallurgical work that is being done at the Wilson Dam and 14,000 kilowatts for the proposed paper mill at Savannah, Tenn.

And now here is the significant thing which leads to my conviction that this proposition amounts to nothing more than the T. V. A. seeking additional funds under the pretense of national defense. The scheme of the T. V. A. to put the measure across is to dress it up and send it forth in the cloak of national defense. They calculate that against the plea of national defense resistance is difficult. They know it is likely to be embarrassing, and they know that any proposal for national defense is a signal for affirmative action. Hence, this is their accepted hour to expand their facilities one-third larger than they are at the present time. Here is a significant thing that makes me think that is true. Mr. Dunn says that 50,000 kilowatts of this increased capacity is needed for increased consumption of the public and general uses of the cities that are already taking it. The demands I have stated, in addition to the 80,000 kilowatts for aluminum, make up the total amount of 220,000 kilowatts for the proposed increase.

Here is their report, as published in the papers yesterday. I have not seen the report, but in this article the T. V. A. puts emphasis on the growth of this Federal agency during the last 18 months, during which they acquired the electric properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., the Mississippi Power Co., and the Alabama Power Co., all subsidiaries of the Commonwealth and Southern Corporation. The T. V. A. is overloaded, Mr. Dunn says so.

The third point I would make is that the Tennessee River affords huge power when floods are coming down, but for 10 percent of the time there is hardly any power there at all.

The fourth point: It is the desire of the T. V. A. to transfer to this new project the technical staffs now operating one of its other projects.

I do not blame them for wanting to keep their friends employed, and if they have finished the project on which they have been working, they have to have a new project in order to keep them employed, and, according to the advice I have received from my friend in Tennessee, they have already embarked upon this project, they have already transferred their staff to the new site, already spending the money they propose to get which has not yet been authorized.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. McLEAN. Point 5: This huge appropriation is not to be earmarked for this project, but it is to be in addition to and carried into and accounted for as a part of the T. V. A. appropriation for the current year.

There has already been made available through the T. V. A. for the present fiscal year $40,000,000. Adding this $25,000,000 makes $65,000,000. In addition to this it must be borne in mind that they are selling power, that they collected $15,000,000 this year from power sales. This will make their total $80,000,000. Next year it will be $94,000,000 if we give them the $39,000,000 in the project authorized in the pending bill. We are not voting for $25,000,000 but for $65,800,000. In 1942 they will have $66,000,000. So what the T. V. A. will really have for spending in these 3 years will be $240,000,000, and we get no return whatever out of the T. V. A.

Point 6: It is intended to spend this money and do this work without competitive bidding. T. V. A. will be permitted to award the contract for the steam plant to whomsoever they see fit.

In the light of the statements made by Mr. Knudsen, Mr. Stettinius, Mr. Dunn, and Mr. Morgenthau, that industry is willing to take care of this proposition, that industry is willing to furnish the material when it is needed and that our program is well under way and that we are going to have 25,000 planes for the Army and 10,000 for the Navy—and all this before this program will be completed—why do we need to authorize this tremendous expenditure?

I now yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

Mr. MASSINGALE. Having heard the splendid speech of the gentleman from New Jersey and noted his enthusiasm I am just wondering if what he has said is correct—and I am satisfied that most of it is—whether America is not going to be mighty hard put to find anybody on whom we as Members of Congress can rely for advice in matters of this sort, when he rejects an engineer like Mr. Dunn.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further. I may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that I do not reject Mr. Dunn.

Mr. MASSINGALE. All right, but the gentleman does not follow his advice.

Mr. McLEAN. I follow his advice to the extent that I think it proper that I should.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Does not the gentleman feel also that if he cannot accept the suggestion of a man like Knudsen, of a man like Stettinius, that we are hard put to believe any man?

Mr. McLEAN. I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that we should put such weight on a witness' testimony as we feel it is entitled to. We are expected to balance the things a man says against other available evidence. If I must say it, Mr. Knudsen appeared before the Appropriations Committee and did not say one single solitary word to the effect that this appropriation was necessary. Mr. Knudsen said only: "I am not a power man. I must tell you frankly I know nothing about it."

Mr. MASSINGALE. What about Stettinius?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Stettinius said one thing before the committee and, the following Saturday, he said that the industry had advised the Defense Commission that plans were being made for expansion and its willingness to erect plants to cover the entire program as needs develop, and I believe that. I have faith in American industry and that American industry will supply all the aluminum and all the power we need for this program of airplanes. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, we have heard the Holston River referred to as a trickle. The gentleman from New York belittled its size and its potentialities. It seems to me that when we are discussing the erection of a dam on a stream one of the basic questions is the size of that stream, and its flow.

The drainage area and flow of the Holston River is an established fact, established just as surely as the altitude above sea level of this Capitol. I would like to read some figures here which can be obtained from the Geological Survey comparing the Norris Dam with the proposed Cherokee:

Drainage area in square miles: Norris, 2,912; Cherokee, 3,428.

Average annual flow in cubic feet per second: Norris, 4,600; Cherokee, 4,800.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. TABER. What is the source of the gentleman's figures?

Mr. GORE. I am citing figures from the Geological Survey.

Average regulated flow: Norris, 4,250; Cherokee, 5,100.

Average head at dam: Norris, 160; Cherokee, 114.

Downstream head, and the distinguished gentleman from Alabama will speak on this subject—Norris, 420; Cherokee, 490.

As a matter of fact, the actual figures show that the Holston River is larger than the Clinch River above the Norris Dam. It can thus be seen that the ability of the project to furnish continuous power and to provide storage for the downstream installation compares favorably with the Norris project. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. SCHIFFLER].

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Chairman, I propose to vote against the pending bill, which has for its object the appropriation of $25,000,000 for the further extension of the activities of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and I shall do so for several reasons:

I am in complete sympathy with the entire necessary program for adequate national preparedness and defense. I shall support every necessary and rational effort to better protect our Nation and to preserve our Government. It shall never be truthfully said that I have been derelict in the discharge of my full duty to my country. All that I possess in this world I will gladly and willingly give to protect and preserve the blessings that have been so generously bestowed upon me and my fellow Americans by reason of our form of government. I am compelled to oppose the present proposed appropriations. I am actuated by a desire to serve only in that manner which will reflect such services in substantial benefits to our country. Several reasons suggest themselves why I should oppose such appropriation.

First. The Tennessee Valley Authority and the projects under its control do not represent the sound philosophy which supports our American way of life. To take by taxation from some of their capital for the enrichment of another group is unfair and un-American. This is only justifiable when the distress and necessity of any particular group or class require such. When distress exists it is the duty of all to aid in the relief of that distress. It must, therefore, logically follow that the entire scheme or plan of the T. V. A. is predicated upon a fallacious foundation of unsound financing and of discrimination.

Second. The projects included within the T. V. A. are in direct competition with like facilities created and existing by reason of private capital investment. This, in spite of the fact that much of the capital derived from taxation and invested in the Tennessee Valley Authority and like projects, comes from the very people who are being injured by its program and operation.

Third. The present appropriation is called for because of the fact that we have an insufficient supply of aluminum necessary for the purpose of manufacturing the planned number of airplanes—the desired airplanes being necessary for our complete national defense. This is undoubtedly true, and the necessary power to increase the aluminum production can be obtained in another more efficient and economical manner. All of the evidence submitted before the committee directly confirms this statement.

Undoubtedly the emergency calls for prompt and certain relief and it is clear and undisputed that the development of the necessary supplemental kilowatts of electricity can be obtained by a steam plant in a much shorter period of time than by the water-power plan. According to the best evidence produced before the committee, it will require not less than 2 years, and probably 3 years, to construct the necessary dams and install the equipment for such water power electric development, while a steam plant for the generating of such electricity can be completed and in operation within 18 months. It is also quite obvious from the best evidence submitted, that the steam plant will cost much less to construct than the hydro plant and that the operating costs are much less. It therefore logically follows that efficiency, economy, and the best interest of our country at this time, in view of the existing emergency and of the necessity for additional electricity, could be obtained by the erection of steam plants. Another very important element that requires our most serious consideration is that of the continuity of power flow.

It is also clearly shown that some of the hydroelectric operations operated by the Federal Government, including some of those in the Tennessee Valley, have interruptions by reason of insufficient water supply. This necessarily interrupts the continuity of electric power supply. A steam-generated plant will produce electric power 24 hours daily for 365 days of the year.

Fourth. And, I think of paramount importance, is the employment of hundreds of now unemployed coal miners and railroad employees, some of whom are now employed by the W. P. A. or are on direct relief. These men are trained and accustomed to do their particular kind of work. They are without employment today. They are being supported from the Federal Treasury. They do not want such support from the Federal Treasury. Why continue by pursuing this policy further in destroying or suppressing jobs for worthy American workmen when these men and their families seek only the opportunity to render an honest day's labor and receive a fair day's wage? They ask for nothing unjust, but only for that which is righteously theirs. This opportunity to provide that employment for them should not be overlooked. They ask only to sell their labor and to receive enough to live as decent self-respecting Americans and to keep their families and rear their children as such.

Fifth. There is not one scintilla of evidence to disclose that private capital and private industry have been requested to supply the necessary power, notwithstanding that billions of dollars remain idle and millions of men remain unemployed. These two important factors in our national defense, when coordinated and encouraged, can give impetus of incalculable value to such program. It has been suggested that the facilities to supply the additional required electric power are not available. Nothing, however, has been done to encourage men and money to set to work and by the construction of a steam generating plant put these two forces energetically and cooperatively to work.

I might urge other reasons why the present appropriation bill should be defeated, but I feel that I have given clear, undisputed, and sufficient sound and logical reasons for such. I urge each of you to vote against such bill in the interest of our unemployed citizens, in the interest of our idle capital, and in the interest of real and progressive Americanism, with the knowledge that our every emergency can be met only when there is complete harmony.

I am certain that such can be obtained and a more closely coordinated policy and plan followed, when and if, we take into consideration the rights and interests of all our citizens.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have often expressed my worry about the Public Treasury. I am worried now about items that will be asked for, of doubtful value for national defense. Huge appropriations will be labeled as such and you will be most unpatriotic if you vote against any measure so classified. It seems to have been proven that we are to have twice as much power as we will need for the purpose of aluminum, although I assume the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] could use it.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Not now.

Mr. Chairman, this purely social experiment troubles me. I dislike to enlarge it, yet I do not want to be unpatriotic. The gentleman from Oklahoma asked, "Are we not hard put when we cannot take the testimony of such men as these three men mentioned?"

Well, are we not hard put when we have only one man who can rule the Nation for another 4 years? [Applause.]

Mr. MASSINGALE. I may say to the gentleman that it is a rather unfortunate circumstance perhaps, but it seems that the American people have about reached that conclusion.

Mr. GIFFORD. I hardly think the American people had much to say about it or whether our beloved Speaker should be Vice President rather than Santa Claus. If ever my feelings were hurt, it was when I listened to the radio and heard the result of the votes cast at that convention for our beloved, able Speaker [Mr. BANKHEAD], who has given his all for the man who dictated his defeat. If there is any red blood in you Democrats, I expect you to demonstrate it. I shall. So that when you say you are hard put for advice, you speak truly. I do not know much about this particular matter. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] gave you most enlightening information, in my opinion. It was clear, it was concise, it seemed irrefutable.

I can hear the statement of the gentleman from Virginia ringing in my ears when he said he would not like to assume the responsibility for holding this thing up for 2 weeks. He made that statement some 2 weeks ago. But they actually began operations more than 2 weeks ago. They knew we were "rubber stamps." If there is any racket in government, it seems to be down there and there is no curb on their activities that seems to be effective.

We should worry about doubtful governmental spending and in my job of criticizing at every opportunity I may say that I am greatly disturbed in the way you are putting this over. Let us amend it. Let us do only what is necessary and save a large amount of these millions. I am contemplating the days ahead, the billions that will be spent without careful consideration and under the hysteria of the moment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE].

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, it is very interesting for one who is particularly disinterested from a personal or political standpoint to note the arguments made against this resolution. Some find that it is very unwise to use water power to generate electric current, a power in which this country stands in need at the present time, but it is quite proper if the power is the product of coal and steam. In other words, they do not feel that water power should be used to generate electric power. But when they find there is a necessity to have this power they think coal ought to be used instead of water. So on it goes.

However, my purpose in rising at this time is to give my reaction to the testimony submitted to the House through the committee hearings.

First, it is shown there is a military disturbance both in the Orient and in Europe. The disturbance is of such magnitude that this country feels the necessity of increasing its national defense. In outlining a national-defense program it is found there is a lack of airplanes, and that in order to increase this supply it is essential there be an increased supply of aluminum, and in order to have an increased supply of aluminum it is necessary to have an increased supply of electric energy. The question then arises as to which is the cheaper and the better way to supply this energy.

The National Defense Council, chosen for their wisdom, for their knowledge and their integrity, advises that after due research aluminum can best be obtained through water-power development near the seat of the T. V. A. If that is true, and I assume it is, I can see no objection to the plan. However, I want to go just a little further in this matter because the evidence does not disclose all of the elements of defense with reference to aluminum, for we are told that most of the aluminum in this country is manufactured from bauxite. We are also told that about 60 or 65 percent of the bauxite is imported from South America, 3,000 miles away, and that only about 30 or 35 percent is obtained in the United States. The question that arises in my mind is, if this material is so absolutely essential, and I know it is, have we given any thought to the possibility of conditions arising in South America by which we would not be able to obtain the necessary amount of bauxite? If such a condition should arise, where will we get our supply? What will be the source of supply of aluminum, that indispensable material in the manufacture of airplanes, that material essential in the development of that implement of war so necessary in these modern days?

I take the position that the National Defense Advisory Council will bring to this Congress, after careful study and due investigation, other bills asking Congress to appropriate funds for finding other sources of aluminum in our own country in order that we may be fully prepared in case bauxite from South America is unable to reach us in such quantities to enable us to continue to manufacture aluminum. It has been suggested that in South America today you could take a bomb no larger than your hand and choke the streams on which the bauxite deposits are located, thus preventing the shipment of 1 ton of bauxite from South America to the United States. I am told that these deposits are located along small streams not much wider than an ordinary creek. We are told also that on some of these streams a boat cannot turn around but has to back up and get the bauxite from the mine.

Suppose Mr. Hitler or someone else should drop a few bombs along the British and Dutch Guianas of South America from which practically all of our imported bauxite is obtained. Or suppose some other condition should arise that would prevent the importation of bauxite, and the production of airplanes would continue to depend upon aluminum, what would happen to our national-defense program from the standpoint of airplanes? It would not take a great engineer or Philadelphia lawyer to see that this country would be seriously handicapped in the completion of this particular phase of the defense program. Therefore, from the evidence already before us it is extremely important we should begin to give some attention to other sources of securing aluminum than relying solely on bauxite from which it is to be obtained.

I gather from reliable information obtained from the Bureau of Mines, the Geological Survey, and the outstanding geologist of my State that there are inexhaustible supplies of kaolin found in my district and adjoining districts in South Carolina, as well as in adjoining territory in the State of Georgia. I learn further from reliable information that some of these kaolin deposits have yielded as high as 48 percent of aluminum oxide, the refined product from which aluminum is manufactured. It is extremely important, therefore, that attention should be given to this situation from the standpoint of national defense. Now, if the statements I have made are absolutely correct, and I am prepared from the source of information referred to say that they are correct, this Government should take such steps as will be necessary to develop the processing of these deposits or cooperate with those who have developed means of processing same so that when the peak of airplane production arises by July in 1942 we will be prepared to substitute the manufacture of kaolin into aluminum, because bauxite by that time may not be available.

Mr. Chairman, in this connection, I should say that midway between the kaolin deposits in Georgia and those in my district the Army Engineers, the engineers of the Federal Power Commission, and others who have studied the matter have all declared that there is the best site for the construction of a power plant in the Southeastern United States on the Savannah River near Clarks Hill, S. C. This site has been studied, investigated, and surveyed by army engineers and others for the past 10 years or more, and time and time again it has been recommended that a hydroelectric power plant be erected on this site.

On August 15, 1935, the President of the United States addressed a communication to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the chairman of the Federal Power Commission, directing that a three-member board be created, consisting of one representative of the Corps of Engineers, one from the Natural Resources Commission, and one from the Federal Power Commission to make a further study and prepare a report on the advisability of proceeding the following year with the Savannah River improvement by erecting the dam at Clarks Hill. In this report the committee says:

The Clarks Hill site is one of the best undeveloped power sites on any stream entering the Atlantic Ocean from the South Atlantic States.

The estimated cost of this dam and equipment is placed at approximately $28,000,000. This dam is within 10 or 15 miles of some of the deposits referred to, and I am firmly convinced if the development of this project were undertaken at once it would materially strengthen the weakest link I have been able to find in our defense program from the standpoint of adequate production of airplanes, which will continue to be the greatest defense weapon used in future wars.

In Senate Document No. 66, page 7, first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, a letter from the Secretary of War to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, April 24, 1939, says:

Meritorious water-power developments are of special significance to national defense. Constructed in time of peace in connection with the development of rivers for the benefit of navigation and for the control of floods—or during depressions as work-relief measures—they represent, in effect, stored peacetime labor, and provide a source of dependable power which almost certainly would be of great value in a war emergency. Power from the Clarks Hill project would thus be available for supplying the increased power load during war as well as the expanding market in the region of the project. It would make possible the establishment of war industries in that region, or, in the alternative, would provide power for transmission, by relay, to distant industrial centers.

In a recent statement made by Dr. F. H. H. Calhoun, dean of the School of Chemistry and Geology, Clemson College, S. C., says:

Bauxite is an ore that is formed only in tropical and subtropical countries. The area in our own Southern States where bauxite deposits have been found have been pretty well prospected, and there are many deposits of low-grade ores, which might be utilized, but these are not extensive enough to give us an adequate supply for many years. Our only alternative seems to be the utilization of our kaolin and other clays.

[Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE] because I want to bring to the Committee thoughts along a similar line. It is my purpose to vote for the bill now under consideration. I believe that Mr. Stettinius, Mr. Knudsen, and Mr. Dunn, the gentlemen who have recommended this bill, are familiar with the subject, and that we should follow their advice. I further believe that the Tennessee Valley Authority has justified itself in this country and that the people of the country have saved and will save millions of dollars by reason of the yardstick that has been furnished by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

However, I wish to say this—and I say it in all kindness and without questioning their integrity or motives—and that is, that I believe that, so far, the National Defense Advisory Council has not given any indication of a purpose to seek out other sources of supply of this material, aluminum, which is vitally essential in the manufacture of airplanes. At page 16 of the hearings Mr. Stettinius states that there is a shortage of aluminum, and that we must increase our aluminum facilities as rapidly as possible to meet the plane program. We do not have to go far to find bauxite in the United States. In my own State of Arkansas, within 20 miles of Little Rock, my home town, there exists 90 percent of all the bauxite in this country, I am informed, which is the raw product from which aluminum is made. The Aluminum Co. of America owns about 60 percent of the bauxite lands in that region and about 40 percent of them are owned by individual owners. The Government should avail itself of all this supply of bauxite and should not confine itself to the use of that owned by the Aluminum Co. of America, which now has an almost 100-percent monopoly on aluminum production.

I have taken up with the Advisory Council the question of approving a reservoir dam near Ozark in Franklin County, in the western part of Arkansas in the Ozark Mountains, where there is a sufficient flow of water for hydroelectric power and where there are vast quantities of the best quality of coal, which can be used jointly in the steam and water production of power, the impounded water being used for condensation in the steam plant. It seems to me that the National Defense Advisory Council should avail itself of the raw products of the States where they do not have these plants as they do in the Tennessee Valley, which are owned by the Aluminum Co. of America.

Mr. RANKIN. To what stream does the gentleman refer?

Mr. TERRY. I am referring to a proposed reservoir on the Mulberry River in northwest Arkansas, which is known as the Cass Lake project. It is right in the heart of the coal fields of western Arkansas where there are hundreds of coal miners now unemployed, who would be given work by this project. This coal is of the highest type in this country. Reputable engineers have told me that using coal at the mouth of the mine in connection with impounded water from the reservoir used for condensation in the steam plant gives the cheapest power that can be produced. Here we would have all the advantages of steam-power development and all the advantages of water-power development. So I want to call the attention of this committee and the Congress to the fact that the Advisory Council, in my humble opinion, is not proceeding rapidly enough in taking advantage of the products of those parts of the country that are not developed at this time. [Applause.]

The bauxite deposits of Arkansas are well known, comprising, as stated before, about 90 percent of all the bauxite in the United States. And yet there is not 1 ounce of bauxite refined in Arkansas. We are told that the Government desires to increase the supply of aluminum as rapidly as possible, and that it desires to avoid all lost motion and transportation congestion. If this is so, why would it not be good business for the Government and the Defense Council to aid in the establishment of a plant where the power is located within the same area where the raw product is mined?

We were told by the President that it was the part of wisdom to establish small plants in various sections of the country in strategic areas and not place all industries in one area, where an enemy attack might disrupt the whole program. Why should the production of aluminum be confined largely to the Tennessee Valley when other sections of the country are blessed with water-power potentialities, are strategically located in the interior, and also have the raw product itself, thus eliminating the delay, cost, and congestion of transportation? I think this program should be scattered as widely as possible over the country, and I submit that one area or one large industrial organization, such as the great Aluminum Co. of America, should not be given the entire control of this most vital and strategic material. It is not good business for the Government and is not fair to the other communities. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HOBBS, or rather I should say the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I am in such good humor this afternoon that I am not even going to resent the imputation that I am from Georgia. I know some distinguished statesmen from that State, than whom there are no whicher, and

I am delighted to be mistaken for one of those eminent gentlemen.

Neither am I surprised in the least that no Republican has yet taken this Well and admitted frankly that they are against national defense if its interest runs counter to their prejudices and selfishness. No Republican in the history of the world would admit that, but if every person who believes it would just give me a dime I could pay off a large part of the national debt with the proceeds. One of the troubles with you Republicans is that you have not learned yet that the War between the States is over. This is no time for sectionalism. We ought not to play politics on any issue involving the national defense. And if you keep on butting you are going to butt your brains out. "Butting" is the oldest "alibi" in the history of argumentation. It is a clever way of trying to take a back door or a side door approach on an issue of this kind which you dare not face through the front door.

This whole issue boils right down to this question: Who knows the most about this? Those who have first-hand information, or those who have not?

It reminds me of the interrupted funeral down in Alabama.

The man who was supposedly the corpse they were burying came in and interrupted the preacher just as he was very vigorously extolling the virtues of the deceased. "But wait a minute, Parson, I ain't ceased yet." The preacher said, "Now, you sit down, brother; you don't know what you are talking about." The interrupter replied, "I sure God do, and I am the only man here what has got first-hand information; I know damn well I ain't dead." [Laughter and applause.]

Now, the testimony of those people who really know what they are talking about is unanimous to the single point that this is a necessary project from the standpoint of national defense. There is no one who disputes it. The Republicans, every single one of them, admit it; but they say—that old "but," you know—"but we just don't like this part of it." Now, what part of it is it they do not like? The part that their preconceived prejudices lead them to be against. The engineers all tell you that this is necessary. We know it. Those of us who have lived with this proposition down there from the beginning and toiled by night and by day for years know it. There is not a single inch of the Tennessee River I have not flown over a dozen times from Paducah, Ky., back up yonder to the sources of the Clinch and the Holston.

I know exactly what this place is they are talking about. It is one of the two finest natural reservoirs ever put by the finger of God on his footstool. They talk about there being no water below the dam at Norris at this minute. Why, that is what it is built there for, an impounding dam to stabilize the flow of the Tennessee so that it will generate prime power 365 days in the year, 24 hours a day. That is the purpose of an impounding dam—to control the flow so that in low water you can boost it up and in high water you can shut it off. You can catch the floods in 1942 with this dam that they propose to build at the base of this natural reservoir on the Holston. That is the whole purpose of these dams, and when you do that, then every drop of water that you impound by this new dam in aid of national defense is going to be used, not once, not twice, but eight times. That is the beauty of a hydroelectric generator; it uses but does not consume the water that drives it. You can use it, the same water, at every single turbine downstream. I have seen the time when there was not a foot of water in the Tennessee River, but I have not seen that since Norris Dam was built, 300 miles above Wilson Dam, and neither have you. It has stabilized the flow until we now have more than twice as much prime power as we ever had at Wilson Dam before. And why do we need prime power for making aluminum? It is because it is produced by a 24 hour a day, 365 days a year process, and if it is interrupted for 5 minutes you can tell the difference in the product. The manufacture of aluminum requires continuous power. The construction of the proposed dam will develop prime power at eight different dams, any one of which could serve an aluminum plant in its vicinity. I appeal to you to lay aside your prejudices about where the dam is going to be. There is not one of you who has the intestinal investiture to stand up here and charge there is any politics in this bill, because you know there is not. If there were any politics in it, we surely would not be putting it in a Republican district of Tennessee. [Laughter and applause.]

Norris Dam also was located and built in a Republican district. We Democrats build dams and other national-defense projects where they should be built—to serve the Nation best. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER].

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, I have carefully studied the report of the hearings before the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate on this resolution. I am personally acquainted with the proposed location of Cherokee Dam on the Holston River, and have been through the enormous plant of the Aluminum Co. of America near Maryville, Tenn. I also personally know of many of the other industries in the Tennessee Valley that are producing munitions and that require a large amount of electricity in their operation.

The Nation has embarked upon a necessary program of preparedness. We have got to arm to the teeth and quickly. The work of supervising the program has been entrusted to a nonpartisan committee in which this Congress and the American people have great confidence. Congress has been cooperating fully with this committee. And the necessity of the case demands that performance be left to this splendid committee after Congress has considered and appropriates money for necessary defense measures. Likewise, we must to a large extent be guided by this committee as to the means in making available strategic materials which they say are necessary to produce the armaments that we must have.

It is difficult for me to understand how any Member of Congress can vote against this resolution if he conscientiously believes in preparedness.

A goal for the production of a definite number of planes has been set. It is necessary to have an additional 60,000,000 pounds of aluminum available after July 1, 1942. The cheapest and surest method of making this aluminum available is the building of the dam, steam plant, and installation of the additional generators called for in this resolution.

The Tennessee Valley has been selected because of aluminum available in that section, and because as said by Mr. Dunn in his statement before the committee:

> In selecting the Tennessee Valley as the location for the principal power expansion which we have approved, we have had in mind not only the location there of the principal plant of the Aluminum Co. of America but also the excellence of the organization, technical and otherwise, that has been assembled there. On account of the large developments that have already been made in the Tennessee Valley, their engineers and other staffs are part of a going organization, experienced in the construction of dams and transmission lines to an extent not likely to be found in any entirely new project not yet completed.

And as said by him on pages 7 and 8 in the hearings before the committee:

> There would be long delays in negotiating such a supply, and we have got T. V. A. right down there where the main plant of the Aluminum Co. is. Now, it is good management, when you want to increase a manufacturing plant and a power supply, to increase an existing manufacturing plant at an existing power supply. They are both there right together in the Tennessee Valley. We found no other place as favorable as T. V. A. for this large block of power increase; and, as Mr. Knudsen said it is not only for aluminum but for other national-defense projects as well. The increase, in our opinion, is justified on the aluminum alone, but almost every day now there is some new national-defense demand for power directed in the region of the Tennessee Valley.

This expenditure differs from many that are being made for national defense. If for any reason the guns and ships we are building should become unnecessary and useless, the money they cost would be to a large extent lost. That is not the case with the money that will be spent in this addition to the Tennessee Valley Authority properties. This is true because the record shows that the additional power produced would be absorbed in any event in 3 or 4 years. It is only necessary to visit the Tennessee Valley and to note the operations taking place there to understand this. Sales of electrical appliances in the valley are increasing at a fast rate. Other industries are requiring an increased amount of electricity, so that this dam, and the additional facilities authorized in this resolution, would be good investments even if they were not necessary for national defense.

Additionally, I wish to call your attention to the fact that this dam has some value to navigation on the Tennessee River, and it has a tremendous value for flood control in that it will have available 1,400,000 acre-feet of storage space for flood-control purposes.

I trust that this resolution will be passed overwhelmingly so that this project already too long delayed can be commenced at once. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, let me devote a few moments at least to a consideration that does not presently meet the eye in this bill, but with which the Congress must wrestle sooner or later. I have had a very recent experience, and in order properly to dramatize the matter it is necessary, of course, to recount a few facts of the immediate past.

On the 10th of July I strolled over to the Appropriations Committee at 3:30 in the afternoon in the hope that a copy of the hearings on this bill might be procured, and they were not yet in print. On the 11th of July, at 11 o'clock in the morning, the full Committee on Appropriations met to consider the pending bill. After an hour of discussion we came up to the floor. Many of the Members, of course, had already gone to Chicago, I assume, and so the request was made to consider this bill by unanimous consent. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN] objected, and he was within the prerogatives of this House in so objecting if he desired. This is what happened. The bill, of course, was not considered, but we spent 3 or 4 hours discussing national defense on this floor. A few days later the Advisory Commission made a release, ostensibly from them, but certainly carrying a White House date line, in which I was mentioned, in which the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] was mentioned, and in which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN] was mentioned. It was some of the material that Senator BARKLEY used in Chicago at the Democratic Convention. It disturbed me a good deal, because I received a few letters and telegrams as a result—none from my own district; some from New Orleans, some from South Dakota, some from New York—couched in the most intemperate language, seeking to put the tarred stick upon those who would dare to exercise their legislative prerogatives and insist, in the name of the people, in the name of the taxpayers of the country, that the Congress ought to exercise decent caution and some degree of moderation in considering a bill that involves $65,800,000. A gentleman wrote me from Chicago that he was distressed to hear that I had placed party politics above national defense and above the general welfare.

In the afternoon of July 11, when there was a quorum call there were only 297 Members of the House who were either in town or who had come here to respond, and I say to you that certainly the people are entitled to a little more consideration than that, and that a bill that involves that enormous amount of money is still more than chicken feed or pocket change to me and the people whom I represent. I thought it rather distressing to gentlemen of Congress on both sides of the aisle. We are not so far removed now from an attitude of mind in this country where, if you stand up and expect to have your say in the interest of the people, the tarred stick will be put upon you by some radicals, by some of those who know only intemperate language. In addition there comes this problem for us. Will we have the fortitude to stand up and exercise our own ingenuity and the forthrightness of spirit and character and such capacity as we enjoy in the hope of doing something for the people, or will we slink and say, "Oh, they tag us now with national defense, and you cannot vote against that?" Then will recur to us all the hideous ghosts of 1917 and 1918, when we bought 33 halters for every horse of the American Army, when we bought 20 saddles for every horse, and when we bought 3 branding irons for every horse. Then will arise the ghost of waste and extravagance. So there is suggested this afternoon as an incident to this legislative process the question of our responsibility as we take on or spurn advice from those who are expected to know.

A member of the Committee on Appropriations, on the morning this bill was considered, stood up in his place on the morning of July 10 and said:

I am going to throw this responsibility upon the members of the National Advisory Commission.

It disturbed me a good deal. I thought, Must I do that? Must I shut my mouth on things of this kind, or do the people expect me to say something if I have some notion about it and feel that perhaps we are going a little too far or making a mistake. Gentleman stand in the shadow today, and the problem that is going to disturb most of us on both sides of the aisle, perhaps as we put a clothespin on our respective noses and approve things that will rankle, is how we shall act. I do not know how you will act, but I shall have my say, because I think my people will expect it.

With respect to the merit of this measure, giving it some attention since the 11th of July, it occurred to me that we have the President's message on this. Remember how your President and mine stood here in all earnestness and said that it was 4 hours from Brazil to Caracas, Venezuela, and two and a half hours from Venezuela to the Canal Zone, and two and a half hours from the Canal Zone to some farthermost point, and then two and a quarter hours to Kansas City, to Omaha, and to St. Louis, those great metropolitan centers in the Central West. In view of the development of speedy air navigation, he sought to emphasize the new military technique in the world and suggested that those cities were not safe if a base were established on Cape Verde, the Azores, or somewhere in South America. Must I remind you that the Tennessee Valley Authority and that area is closer to one of those bases that the President mentioned than is Omaha?

It is closer than Kansas City. It is closer than St. Louis. So that if you are going to concentrate the production of aluminum and the production of aluminum castings in that area, do we not perhaps reach the continuity of our defense program and make it vulnerable in that degree, even as the President of the United States suggested from that rostrum on the 16th of May, 1940?

Now, I see my good friend from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE] here and I want to address a remark or two to the very pertinent and forthright question that he raised that has disturbed me a great deal. Mr. Knudsen wants this, they say. I think there is no finer man, no more able man in the country than Mr. Knudsen, but Mr. Knudsen said, according to the hearings, that he was not a power man so he had to look elsewhere, because his job was production after he got the material with which to work. The question of raw materials was assigned to Mr. Stettinius, so he asked Mr. Dunn and others to serve on a kind of consultant commission. Now, we ought to be able to follow Mr. Dunn. I recognize him as the foremost power authority in the country, but here is the thing that disturbs me: Mr. Dunn has come before the committees of this Congress before and he has said at that time—

Gentlemen, you can manufacture electricity with steam power cheaper than you can with hydro.

Now he comes and says—

I am for this—a combination of hydro and steam.

According to a letter that was addressed to my good friend, the distinguished chairman of our committee, Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, it was sought to be set out that you had to have a synchronized, equalized program between a steam plant and a hydroelectric plant. I have been listening to testimony for over 3 years on the T. V. A. and not a single engineer has ever raised his voice about synchronizing and equalizing steam and hydroelectric power. In fact, they have played down the steam issue. When it was raised in the Senate some years ago by Senator VANDENBERG I went into the matter and asked them some questions no later than this year on the hearings.

Was anything said about equalization? Was anything said about synchronization? Oh, no not a word. Now it appears, according to the letter of July 29 by Mr. Dunn that this is to be equalized.

Well, gentlemen, it is all very amazing, I will say. If you ask me my ordinary lay opinion, for whatever it is worth, they will not generate a single kilowatt of prime power on the Cherokee Dam when it is completed. What is prime power? Well, if I understand the term, prime power is power that is on tap and will furnish a continuous supply all the time, 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. Am I wrong? If I am wrong, somebody stand up and correct me. That is my notion of prime power.

Well, let us see whether you will get the water on the little Holston River. Let us see whether you will get prime power. No. They want a steam plant because from steam you will get prime power and if you gage it to a constant base load you will manufacture it cheaper than you will at a hydroelectric dam. Do you know what the sensible thing would be in this bill? Instead of spending $36,000,000 on a hydroelectric dam to generate 90,000 kilowatts, in the hope that when the water comes over it will go down to Norris Dam, Chickamauga and Wilson Dams and Hales Bar and all the rest, the building of several steam plants would produce more power and save more than $20,000,000.

As for the alleged re-use of the same water, you will if you have the water, but if you do not have the water you will not. So really that is not much of an argument, as a matter of fact. Besides, you will have to count on a good many losses up there, because I have an idea that the reason Norris Dam has not turned out so well and the reason that they have not turned a wheel up there for some days, and the reason the generators have not been working for a little while is probably because lots of water got away; because there are holes; because there are caves; because there is grouting work that probably should be done, as any engineer could tell you; that perhaps it is not all so rosy. It intrigued me a good deal, so the other day I wrote to Mr. Krug, of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. Krug is a fine fellow. He is one of the ablest engineers in the country. I take off my hat to him. He is one of the ablest fellows who ever came before a committee of Congress. He sent me a two-page letter that I got this morning, and I defy any Member of this House to read that letter and then determine whether it was responsive to the question, and to what extent the generators at Norris Dam had not been working and for how long. He just alludes to it very briefly and says that the last generation occurred on July 21, 1940; but he does not say how many of those intervening days and intervening weeks the generators at Norris Dam were not running. That is the difficulty. If they want power in 18 months, if they want it right away, instead of running along with a speculation that may take 2 years at the very least and very likely 3 years if they do not capture the spring floods in 1942, why not do the sensible thing? Go into some of these areas and build steam plants. You can build more than three steam plants for the money that this dam will cost. They will generate 360,000 kilowatts as against 90,000 of alleged prime power by this dam up on the little Holston; that is to cost $36,000,000.

As for reducing bauxite, on the 12th of July the Department of Commerce sent me the figures of imports of bauxite in 1939 from British and Dutch Guiana. There were 520,000 tons. How much did we get in our own country? Four hundred thousand tons.

You can get it from Brazil, you can get it from Dutch Guiana. You can load it on a vessel and take it up to any seaport city and reduce it if you want to. So it is not a question of where the deposit is located. Furthermore, as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] said, most of the bauxite is in Arkansas. The sensible thing to do would be to build a couple of steam plants. Then we would know we would have the power, it would cost less, and we would render the taxpayers a service. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] is recognized for 17½ minutes.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I am hopeful that the debate which precedes the vote will not have obscured the facts and the only issue in the consideration of this bill.

We are confronted here with a proposal to appropriate immediately $25,000,000 and to authorize the letting of contracts that will call for further appropriations which will raise the total amount to $65,800,000. We are asked to do this in the name of national defense. We are told that there is an actual, bona fide need for this power. Who presented this question, who defended these estimates before congressional committees? It was the Advisory Commission to the National Defense Council, composed of Messrs. Knudsen, Stettinius, and Dunn. These men made this presentation to the Appropriations Committee only after consultation with the War Department General Staff and, of course, with the Chief Executive of this Nation. What is the situation?

We stand today in the shadow of a conflagration which threatens all civilization—and this is spoken advisedly. Those who have been wont to laugh and to scoff before cannot do so now, because none can foretell what will happen. War is more terrible today than ever before because of the new and striking weapons of offense. Most terrible of all is the airplane. The present war has demonstrated conclusively the tremendous striking power and the tremendous destruction consequent upon the use of that striking power by the air forces of the various nations engaged therein. Today we have approximately 2,900 planes ready for duty. It is proposed to build within the next 3 years, if possible, 25,000 planes for the Army and 10,000 planes for the Navy. Mr. Knudsen, while he says he is not a power expert, is charged with the manufacturing of these planes, and he tells you that it is necessary to have at least 5 tons of aluminum for each plane, on the average.

Mr. Stettinius tells you that he is not a power expert but that he is charged with the acquisition of the raw materials which go into the finished product. You have the word of these gentlemen that this appropriation is vital and essential for our plane program if we are properly and adequately to defend the Nation. Now, let us turn to power.

In the matter of power we have before us a man who is recognized nationally as the outstanding expert along these lines, Mr. Gano Dunn. No one questions his ability, regardless of whether one agrees with his political philosophy or economic philosophy. No one questions his integrity or his ability to speak on this question, and he says that this power is necessary. He says that this is the most logical place to create that power, and he says that after studying the Nation in every aspect. In this conclusion he is supported by the President of the United States and the General Staff of the Army. You have therefore perfect coordination between these three—the man who is charged with manufacturing the planes, the man who is charged with the acquisition of the raw material that goes into the manufacture of the planes, and the man who is charged with coordinating the power program of the Nation to sustain and to carry on this program of acquisition and manufacture.

Why is it the best place? Because it can be produced more cheaply down there; these kilowatts, 300,000—approximately 220,000 of it is prime—can be produced more cheaply at this particular point than anywhere in the Nation. Then, too, take into consideration the fact that the aluminum plants are also located in close juxtaposition to the dams and to the steam plant which will be constructed.

Why can power be produced more cheaply? Simply because it is a storage dam; it is a power dam purely and simply, with no navigation aspects. It is because of the fact that it will change the secondary power down the stream to primary power and will produce an additional 88,000 kilowatts at Wilson and Pickwick in addition to the 90,000 kilowatts of prime power produced at the dam site. The steam plant can be used here more cheaply and more economically to supplement and to implement the hydroelectric development in the valley than it could elsewhere. So by the construction of this dam we create 90,000 kilowatts of prime power at the dam, and with the water impounded when released to flow on toward the sea, we create an additional 88,000 kilowatts approximately of prime power. With the development proposed in this bill we raise the amount of prime power in the T. V. A. area from approximately 683,000 to 900,000 kilowatts.

Not all of this power goes to aluminum—oh, no—but the amount which goes to the production of aluminum is directly in the national-defense program; and Mr. Knudsen stated in his testimony that additional plants were being studied and additional sites for them would be established in this area. The simple reason for this is that in this area we have closer together more of the essential, vital, raw materials for the national defense than can be found in any other like area of America. Answering the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] when a moment ago he asked why we should locate the aluminum plant there, I may say that the aluminum plant was located there by private industry, by private business from Pennsylvania.

Why do they want to carry on this program in the Tennessee Valley? Simply because the War Department studies made during the World War and subsequent thereto and at the present time show that the Tennessee Valley area is more nearly invulnerable than any other section in all of America. That is why.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I am sorry; I cannot yield.

There are calls for this aluminum. If it takes 5 tons to produce a plane on an average, with a 35,000-plane program for the Army and Navy contemplated within the next 3 years, you can realize the tremendous amount of aluminum that it will be necessary to provide.

You have the power in this area you must use in the powder plants, and I call to the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey that the powder plant at Memphis is not now in operation because it has not been completed. I also call to his attention, if it needs to be called to his attention and if it is worth while to do so, that the national-defense program upon which we have embarked will take from 5 to 7 years to complete in its entirety. Time is of the essence of things in this critical hour. You have already been told by Mr. Dunn that the 2 weeks' delay in the consideration of this bill will probably delay from 6 to 8 months the acquisition of generators that are essential in a steam plant; therefore, the picture has changed since he was before our committee to the extent that it seems probable now the hydroelectric development can be put into use and the power supplied at the dam more quickly than with the steam plant.

Mr. Chairman, few people, few laymen realize the absolute vital essential element of time in modern warfare. Hitler took 7 years to prepare. France and these other nations were beaten to their knees because they failed to prepare. England began 4 years ago on her program when Mussolini called her bluff and went down into Ethiopia. They are not even yet ready to withstand the threatened invasion of those lovely islands and the possible destruction of the British Empire. When and if Great Britain is destroyed the last outpost of civilized governments between us and the totalitarian powers has been removed.

The question was asked, Why not let the private companies in the Tennessee Valley furnish this power? That was answered fully and adequately by Mr. Dunn when he stated that a study had already been made of that possibility prior to the presentation of this bill and the request on the part of the National Defense Council. He stated that after a study of the power requirements and the power supply from public and private sources it was absolutely essential that we have the power provided for under the terms of this bill or that will be made possible by reason of the appropriation of this bill in order to carry on the national-defense program. I challenge each and every one of you who question the economic philosophy back of the T. V. A.—and you have that right—to state on your authority or any competent authority that a complete case has not been made here for the national defense. I challenge any of you to take that responsibility even though from the very beginning you have constantly fought against the development of this project. This bill is presented for the defense needs of the Nation. Those needs are urgent and those who take upon themselves the responsibility to either curtail or delay action are assuming an awful responsibility in face of world conditions.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I will say on my responsibility I do not believe this has anything to do with national defense. I believe the power is available without it.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The gentleman is merely stating a belief based upon his own social and political philosophy and not one which is in accord with the facts. He cannot, from any testimony by reputable witnesses given in any congressional hearing, support any such statement.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is it not true that all of the testimony before the committee given by experts was to the effect that in the interest of national defense and as the greatest link in our national defense program this additional dam on the Holston River is necessary?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The gentleman is absolutely correct in that statement.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is it not further an amazing thing that when it comes to this one thing which is separate and apart in a way from the Tennessee Valley Authority an effort to create additional power in order to make war materials, that these gentlemen over there hark back to their opposition to the original Tennessee Valley Authority? Is it not true, further, that each and every one of these men said that as far as geography is concerned and as far as the production of power in a cheap way is concerned this is the best location in the United States that is available at this time?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Absolutely; and I tried to stress that point a moment ago. There is no place in all America where we can find the power and an aluminum plant in such juxtaposition as you find in the Tennessee Valley. The aluminum plant was located there years ago.

Mr. BENDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. Did not the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] point to the available power at Bonneville?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Yes; and I call attention to the fact that Mr. Dunn also said that power was available, but it is going to be used in developments out there. They cannot wait for the construction of a new plant out there and the completion of Coulee Dam. He said it was necessary to begin work at once on the extension of the plant in the T. V. A. area and the extension of the hydroelectric facilities there just the same as they have already extended the plants in Pennsylvania, New York, and Massachusetts, where we have national-defense installations, in order to meet the urgent needs of the armed forces of this Nation.

Mr. TABER. Every item of power that may be available at Bonneville and at Grand Coulee will be available 6 months before any of this can be completed.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Yes; but there will not be any aluminum plant in the 6 months.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I want to ask the gentleman the same question I asked Members on the other side of this debate.

If the Members of this Congress are denied the right to rely upon the advice of such eminent engineers as Mr. Dunn and such eminent industrialists as Mr. Stettinius and Mr.

Knudsen, where can we go for advice in this kind of procedure?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. You have here a beautiful example of that Scriptural quotation relating to those who have eyes but see not, and ears but hear not. I am afraid that some are so blinded by passions and prejudices against certain social and economic philosophies of the administration that they cannot see any good anywhere at any time in some of the agencies concerned. I say, I am afraid that is true.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. I wonder if the gentleman would not inform the House just how much over-all increase in the power production capacity over the entire dam system the erection of this dam to impound the waters in floodtime will bring.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. If I recall correctly, the construction of this dam, with the consequent impounding of the waters behind the dam to furnish prime power and storage capacity, plus the power made available with the steam plant, will raise the prime power in the Tennessee Valley area from 683,000 kilowatts to 903,000 kilowatts. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired; all time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $25,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as an additional amount to carry out the provisions of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, approved May 18, 1933, as amended by the acts approved August 31, 1935, and July 26, 1939, including the funds necessary to begin construction of a dam on the Holston River near Jefferson City, Tenn.; to begin installation of two additional electric generating units at Wilson Dam, Alabama, and one additional electric generating unit at Pickwick Landing Dam, Tennessee; and to begin construction of steam electric generating facilities with a rated capacity of approximately 120,000 kilowatts in the area served by the Authority; and the acquisition of necessary land, the clearing of such land, relocation of highways, and the construction or purchase of transmission lines and other facilities, and all other necessary works authorized by such acts, and for printing and binding, lawbooks, books of reference, newspapers, periodicals, purchase, maintenance, and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles, rents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and all necessary salaries and expenses connected with the organization, operation, and investigations of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and for examination of estimates of appropriations and activities in the field: Provided, That the foregoing appropriation shall be in addition to and shall be covered into and accounted for as a part of the Tennessee Valley Authority Fund, 1941, as established by the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1941: Provided further, That purchases may be made by the Authority during the fiscal year 1941 without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes and section 9 (b) of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, as amended, when in the judgment of the Board of Directors of the Authority such a procedure will expedite the completion of projects determined to be essential for national-defense purposes by the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: On page 3, line 4, after "Defense", insert the following: "Provided further, That the extent and location of the transmission lines provided for herein shall receive the approval of such Commission."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: On page 3, line 4, after "Defense", insert the following: "Provided further, That the extent and location of the transmission lines provided for herein shall be limited to the present service area except for such national-defense projects as receive the approval of such Commission."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment to limit the operations resulting from this additional program to the present service area, except where power may be required for national defense. This is the difference between the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia and my own amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty with the substitute would consist of not being able to define the area. We are told by the engineers and the experts who worked on this and considered language almost identical with the language in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], it being desired to place a limitation in the joint resolution which would prevent the T. V. A. from expanding their transmission lines outside their present workable area—that their program is extended over so many counties and in so many different directions and under such varied circumstances that the authorities would run into almost hopeless confusion when they undertook to define the phrase "present service area" as used in the gentleman's amendment.

I may say that this amendment which I have offered was discussed with the power people, the coal people, the T. V. A., and the Advisory Commission, and it was felt that this language requiring any extension of service lines to be approved by the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense, would be sufficiently restrictive and would be a satisfactory solution; so I hope the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from New York will not be adopted, and that the amendment which I have offered will be agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that committee amendment and the substitute therefor may again be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the two amendments.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the Woodrum of Virginia and the Taber amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York as a substitute for the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer two amendments and ask unanimous consent that they be considered together.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We do not know what the amendments are, Mr. Chairman, and should like to have them reported first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 1, line 8, strike out the last two words of line 8, all of line 9, and the first two words of line 10, and on page 2, lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "one hundred and twenty" and insert "two hundred and forty."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the two amendments be considered together?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the purport of the two amendments is very simple. The first one strikes out the authority to build the Cherokee Dam on the Holston River, and the second one increases the amount of electrical energy to be generated by steam from 120,000 to 240,000.

When you strip this whole thing of all hysteria and the fine, impassioned speeches that have been made here today, this is the whole thing in a nutshell. Mr. Knudsen says it takes 5 tons of aluminum to produce an airplane. Mr. Knudsen says also that in 1942 we will be short approximately 60,000,000 pounds of aluminum. Therefore, something must be done to provide aluminum with which to produce airplane castings. Everybody agrees with that and goes along with it wholeheartedly. He then turns to Mr. Stettinius who is purveying and providing raw materials, and Mr. Stettinius, looking over the situation as to where an adequate supply of aluminum can be procured, takes into his confidence Mr. Gano Dunn, power consultant, and others and they decide that in order to produce that amount of aluminum they need additional power. That is where we come to a divergence of views. They need aluminum for aluminum castings and they need power with which to produce the aluminum, and the question for us to determine today is where and how shall the power be generated. Mr. Dunn says it should be generated by hydro and steam to cost over all $65,800,000. Here is an alternative proposal to generate this power with steam for which we can spend $25,000,000 for two steam plants and generate the same amount of power.

You want the proof? Let me establish how the gentleman from Alabama, my good friend [Mr. STARNES], was talking by the card and, certainly, not according to the facts, because here is a letter that Mr. Dunn sent to Mr. Stettinius on July 1, 1940, at page 10 of the hearings:

> The net amount of increased power made available by the 300,000 kilowatts of installed capacity is in the neighborhood of 220,000 kilowatts.

The net increase will be 220,000 kilowatts. That is O. K. with me and I go along with it wholeheartedly. So here is an amendment to provide 20,000 more kilowatts than the net that Mr. Dunn himself expects from this kind of installation. If that is not going along with the program, I do not know what the Congress could do in order to persuade everybody of their interest in a program of this kind. They want 220,000 kilowatts of power. We will give them 240,000 with this amendment. We will give that 240,000 at an infinitely less cost and at the same time confer a service on the taxpayers of the country and fully subserve every interest of national defense as Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius have given it to a committee of the Congress.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In addition to that, according to the gentleman's amendment, all that power will be primary or constant power ready every day in the year.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely, it will be prime power in the sense it will be on tap 24 hours a day and 365 days in the year, and besides that, if time is of the essence of this thing, Mr. Dunn himself has stated before the committee that a steam plant can be completed in 18 months, while this dam may take 2 years or it may take 3 years.

I think this proposal will more nearly serve national defense than the proposal brought to us by the committee. So there is the situation in a nutshell for your disposition. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 15 minutes, and I want the last 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER and Mr. RANKIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I have not as much influence with the Chairman as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], but it is all right. I will take my 5 minutes any time I can get them.

So fanatical has T. V. A. been in the last few years to spend for public ownership and operation of the electrical business that it today finds itself with more market than it can actively serve in a year of low water. In fact, today it is purchasing large blocks of off-peak power from utilities in order to conserve what little water it has. Now confronted with a national emergency and heavy demands on its power for the development of the manufacture of aluminum for our airplanes, it is unable to fulfill its principal obligations of assisting the national defense by its own confessions.

Two or three years will be required before the installation now under consideration will be generating power. Had T. V. A. fulfilled its moral and legal obligations to prepare to meet the demands of national defense this agency would not now be in the embarrassing position of coming before Congress with the confession of mismanagement.

As to actual shortage of power in this dry year there can be no question, and unless the fall rains begin early they will be confronted with a serious problem by November.

I suppose it would be unwise to oppose this appropriation without qualification, but it certainly is apparent that the management of T. V. A. has been remiss in its duties by ignoring the national-defense factor and it has purchased more and more markets for its load in the blithe assurance that if its national-defense activities should arise Congress would meekly accord it more funds for more generating capacity.

It is amusing to me to hear these new dealers paying tribute to some of the economic royalists whom they have been ignoring or denouncing for the last 8 years. When Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius and all the rest of them gave you advice about the New Deal and its experiments you threw their advice and recommendations out the window.

Mr. Knudsen has been quoted here as saying that 5 tons of aluminum are required for every airplane. I understand from the testimony that Mr. Knudsen says that 5,000 pounds are necessary. There are 2,000 pounds in a ton, and I believe that is exactly what is required—about two and a quarter or two and a half tons, instead of 5 tons, as has been represented. You know the Tennessee River flows through five States and drains the entire Nation. During the years 1940, 1941, and 1942 we have been asked to appropriate and we are appropriating approximately $240,000,000 to operate the T. V. A., and what is happening to that money and what returns are we getting on our investment? Judge LEAVY points out, and Representative ANGELL pointed out the other day, that at Bonneville we have a great opportunity to produce aluminum, because of that vast power plant there. It is not being used, or taken advantage of, and I say it is wrong for these people to come in here, under the guise of national defense that they ignored, asking for this appropriation at this late hour. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], which would eliminate the authorization for the construction of this dam by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

I have been in this House for many years, and have observed many interesting spectacles, but never have I witnessed so many suicidal confessions on the part of Republican members, in the light of their records on the power question, as I have seen today. They have quoted and requoted the testimony of Mr. Gano Dunn whom they regard as an authority on this subject, in which he says:

> Steam power is cheaper than water power.

I have said time and time again that electricity could be generated, with either coal, oil, or gas, and distributed at the T. V. A. yardstick rates, to the people in every section of every State in the Union without loss on legitimate investments.

These Members now arise and quote the statement of Mr. Dunn, an authority on this question, to the effect that electricity can be generated more cheaply with steam than with water power. When they do that, they confess that they have been wrong and I have been right, when I have contended that electricity could be generated with gas, coal, oil, or water power and distributed to the ultimate consumers throughout the entire country at the T. V. A. yardstick rates, thereby saving the American people approximately $1,000,000,000 a year on their light and power bills.

Now these worthy gentlemen are compelled to confess their errors. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], in order to save his face with the people of Illinois, must now go back home and get down on his knees, so to speak, and confess to the people of Illinois that he was wrong, and that I was right, when I stated that the people of Illinois were overcharged $69,000,000 a year for their electric lights and power. Think of it. For electricity generated in Illinois, by Illinois coal, or Illinois water power, the people of the State of Illinois are forced to pay the enormous overcharge of $69,000,000 a year, according to the T. V. A. rates, $79,000,000 a year according to the Ontario rates, and $85,000,000 a year according to the Tacoma, Wash., rates. In 30 years it would amount to more than twice the amount of the indemnity Germany imposed on France in 1871.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER], and all the other Republican Members from that State who have fought the T. V. A. and the administration's power policies generally must now go back to the people of Ohio and confess that they have been wrong and that I have been right, and that the people of Ohio are paying an overcharge of $47,000,000 a year for their own electricity, generated in the State of Ohio with Ohio coal and Ohio water power. That is more than the value of the entire wheat crop of Ohio.

The stentorian gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] and his colleague [Mr. BOLLES], who is continuously sniping at the T. V. A., must now go back to the people of Wisconsin and confess that they have been wrong and that I have been right in my contention that the people of Wisconsin are overcharged $20,000,000 a year for their electric lights and power, because this power can be generated in Wisconsin with either coal or water power and distributed to the people of Wisconsin at the T. V. A. yardstick rates, after paying all overhead expenses together with a reasonable return on legitimate investments.

You Republican Members from Indiana must now go back home and confess to the people of Indiana that you have been wrong and I have been right in my contention that the people of Indiana are overcharged more than $24,000,000 a year for their electric lights and power, which is more than the value of the wheat crop of the entire State.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], who referred to me in his address, and all the other Republicans from Massachusetts who have opposed the T. V. A. and the power policies of this administration generally must now go back to the people of Massachusetts and confess to them that they have been wrong and I have been right in my contention that the people of Massachusetts are overcharged $44,000,000 a year for their electric lights and power.

It must be humiliating indeed to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] to have to accept this statement of Mr. Dunn and go back to the people of New York and acknowledge that he has been wrong and I have been right in my contention that the people of the State of New York are overcharged $157,000,000 a year for their electricity according to the T. V. A. rates, $179,000,000 according to the Tacoma rates, and $176,000,000 a year according to the Ontario rates.

This power can be generated with either coal, oil, or water power anywhere in the State of New York approximately as cheaply, as it is being generated with water power on the Tennessee River, the Colorado River, or the Columbia River, according to the testimony of Mr. Gano Dunn.

Then, where does this $157,000,000 to $176,000,000 of annual overcharges the people of New York have to pay—where does it go? It costs just as much to distribute electricity generated by water power as it does to distribute it when generated with oil, or gas, or wood, or corn cobs—and no more. But the people of New York, after paying all the operating expenses, after allowing for taxes, sinking funds, depreciation, and reasonable returns on legitimate investments, are still required to pay this annual overcharge ranging from $157,000,000 according to the T. V. A. rates, to $176,000,000, according to the Ontario rates—for which they get nothing in return.

Several years ago I said on the floor of this House that electricity could be generated with coal about as cheaply as with water power. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] took issue with me and demanded that I submit the proof. Now, he comes in, quotes the words of Mr. Dunn to the effect that steam power is cheaper than water power, and uses that as an argument against the building of this dam, overlooking the fact that this dam will be conserving a great natural resource, while burning coal would be exhausting one; overlooking the fact that in addition to contributing to the national defense, this dam will help to control floods, conserve the soil, protect the growing timber, and supply water for the generation of power at the dams below.

But the most remarkable thing about this statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is his walking into the trap and inferentially confessing that he has been wrong and I have been right in my contention that the people of Pennsylvania are overcharged $72,000,000 a year for their electric lights and power according to the T. V. A. rates, $76,000,000 according to the Ontario rates, and $105,000,000 according to the Tacoma, Wash., rates. He must now go back to the people of Pennsylvania and admit to them that they can generate power with Pennsylvania coal anywhere in that State as cheaply as it can be generated with waterpower, and that it can be distributed at the T. V. A. yardstick rates, or the Ontario rates or the Tacoma rates to every consumer in Pennsylvania, without loss on legitimate investments.

Why, Mr. Chairman, in 1871, when the German Army crushed the French Republic, the German Empire imposed upon France an indemnity of $1,000,000,000, which the people of France were required to pay within 30 years. Yet the people of New York, the people of Pennsylvania, the people of Michigan, the people of Illinois, the people of Ohio, Massachusetts, or New Jersey—the people of any one of these States, are paying overcharges for electric lights and power that, in 30 years, will amount to far more than the indemnity imposed by Germany upon the conquered republic of France.

In 30 years these overcharges in Pennsylvania would amount to more than $2,000,000,000; in 30 years these overcharges in Illinois would amount to more than $2,000,000,000; in 30 years these overcharges for electricity in the State of New York would amount to more than $4,000,000,000; in Ohio these overcharges in 30 years would amount to $1,400,000,000. In Michigan they would amount in 30 years to $1,200,000,000, and in New Jersey or Massachusetts they would amount to more than $1,500,000,000.

I have listened to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN] and other Republican Members from New Jersey, not only opposing this measure but opposing every other measure affecting the Tennessee Valley Authority. They must now go back to the people of New Jersey and admit that they have been wrong and I have been right in my contention that electricity could be supplied to every consumer in that State at the T. V. A. yardstick rates, which would save the consumers of New Jersey more than $47,000,000 a year, according to the T. V. A. rates; more than $56,000,000, according to the Ontario rates; and more than $63,000,000 a year, according to the Tacoma, Wash., rates. Unless we can get them relief from these exorbitant rates, the people of New Jersey alone will pay in overcharges in 30 years far more than the $1,000,000,000 indemnity Germany imposed on France in 1871.

All you Republican Members who have fought me on this issue must now go back home, confess your errors, and tell the people of your States that you have been wrong and that I have been right in my contention that the American people are overcharged approximately $1,000,000,000 a year for their electric lights and power, as the following table will show.

These overcharges are in addition to all operating expenses and reasonable returns on legitimate investments. Let the people of every State read them, analyze them, and understand them, and they will realize that we are paying a tribute, an indemnity, if you please, to this organized juggernaut known as the Power Trust amounting to approximately $1,000,000,000 a year, the amount the French people were required to pay as result of the War of 1871. They paid it within 30 years. In the next 30 years, unless your people get relief from these exorbitant rates they will pay tributes in overcharges for their electric lights and power alone that will amount to approximately $30,000,000,000.

When you confess and prove by such outstanding authority as Mr. Dunn that electricity can be generated in any one of these States as cheaply with coal as with water power, you clinch the last argument in favor of my contention that we can force light and power rates down to the T. V. A. rates, to the Tacoma rates, or to the Ontario rates, without injury to legitimate investments, and save the American people overcharges that amount to approximately $1,000,000,000 a year.

In order that consumers of electricity in every State may make their own comparisons, I am also inserting the tables showing the overcharges the consumers in all three classes, residential, commercial, and industrial, paid in every State in the Union, and in the District of Columbia during the year 1938.

According to the expert testimony which you gentlemen have quoted, with approval, and which has not been denied, these overcharges are really greater than these tables indicate.

Mr. Speaker, I am for national defense, but I am also for protecting the American people from such ruthless racketeering as they are being subjected to at the hands of these utilities.

If a foreign power should come and threaten war against the United States unless we paid them an indemnity of $1,000,000,000, we would rise as one man and drive such an enemy from our shore. Yet, when these ruthless racketeers attempt to get control of the water power of this Nation, monopolize the electric industry, and wring a billion dollars a year in overcharges from the helpless consumers of electric lights and power, those of us who raise our voices in protest, those of us who are fighting this battle of the century for justice to these electric consumers, find ourselves opposed by the very members who are supposed to represent the people who are the worst plundered by these overcharges.

While we are preparing against dangers from without, let us not forget that our country, our form of government, our institutions, the very peace, happiness, and prosperity of the American people we are here to represent, are being threatened by this greater danger from within.

This amendment should be defeated, and the bill should pass as presented by the committee.

I am not one of those men who are expecting my country to be attacked from without. I know the unsurmountable obstacles a foreign power would have to overcome to ever land an Army upon American shores. But I believe in preparing my country to defend itself against any antagonist, or combination of antagonists, that might be sent against us, now or in the years to come. In order to do that we must have the strongest air force on earth. We should have had it long ago. They tell us that this dam is absolutely necessary in order to supply the aluminum to make the planes.

Therefore, this amendment should be defeated, and the bill as reported by the committee should be passed by a unanimous vote.

But while we are thus preparing to defend ourselves against enemies from without, we must continue our drive against these enemies at home until we wipe out these exorbitant overcharges the helpless consumers of this country are now paying for their electric lights and power. [Applause.]

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, as one keenly interested in the national defense of our country, I want to make a few observations on this measure because it is designed to provide additional facilities to expedite national defense.

By expanding the T. V. A. with the construction of dams, power plants, generators, and so forth, sufficient power will be generated to produce additional aluminum necessary for the construction of aircraft.

My first observation leads me to believe we are unwise in confining our expansion program to one particular area in our desire to secure the necessary aluminum for national-defense purposes. A number of my colleagues stated very emphatically that the aircraft industry depends on the aluminum plant as well as the dams, powerhouses, and so forth, located in the T. V. A. area.

A moment ago I said it was unwise to confine such necessary part of our national defense in the same area because of the possibility of attack in the event of war. Who can deny that one bomber with his cargo of death and destruction could not wipe out the entire T. V. A. area as it exists today?

Therefore I favor the construction of a series of power plants conveniently located throughout the different areas designated by the War Department as those inland areas safest from attack.

Gentlemen, it is simply a question of heeding the age-old advice: "Don't put all your eggs in one basket."

My next observation is the time element required to construct the dams as compared to the time required to construct steam plants. It has been said here this afternoon that there will be a shortage of aluminum for national-defense purposes to the extent of 60,000,000 pounds by July 1, 1942. In other words, nearly 2 years from now we will be faced with this shortage.

My colleague from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] stated here some weeks ago that it will require 2 years to construct the proposed dam on the Holston River. From other sources I learn it will take from 2 to 3 years. If time is an element as everyone agrees, why not construct immediately steam power plants strategically located in the Central United States that can be completed and in operation in exactly 18 months?

Let us look at the facts. This Holston River dam will be built at a total cost of $35,000,000 and will take from 2 to 3 years to complete. It will have to depend on floodwaters or, in other words, the weather element to produce 90,000 kilowatt-hours of energy annually.

One steam plant erected at a cost of $10,500,000 in a period of 18 months can produce 120,000 killowatt-hours annually without placing any dependency on floodwaters, weather element, or any other contingency.

Gentlemen, here is the picture.

One dam costs $35,000,000, produces 90,000 kilowatt-hours annually, while for the same amount you can construct 3 steam-power plants that will each produce 120,000 kilowatt-hours annually.

Once again I want to repeat if you centralize all of your plants, dams, and so forth in the T. V. A. area you are not adhering to sound military preparedness and you are becoming an easy target for attack.

The War Department furnished in a memorandum their idea of areas in which plants could be safely located and less liablie to attack. The T. V. A. is located in area E which includes part of Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, and westward.

The three plants I mentioned a moment ago could be located at strategic points in area B, which comprises Ohio, southwestern Pennsylvania, West Virginia, western portion of Virginia, and eastern Kentucky. In area B you are in the middle of one of the greatest bituminous coal areas in the United States. Prominent engineers will tell you power can be produced cheaper by coal than by water.

Therefore, in the interest of giving the American people 100 cents out of every dollar appropriated for national defense, let us realize that by the construction of a steam-power plant at the front door of a coal mine with an adjacent river the American people are given the type of national defense to which they are entitled and at a minimum cost.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I hope we will forget about electric-power rates and our antipathies toward the Tennessee Valley Authority and try to get back once more to where we started—the issue in this case.

I will confess that I do not know how much aluminum we will be short in 1942 for the airplane program. I do not know how much aluminum is required to make a plane. I do not know whether there is power available or not. I would not ask this House to decide whether it ought to be hydroelectric power or a steam-generating plant or both on anything I say about it, because I do not know anything about it except from the information I get from people who I think do know about it. Every scintilla of evidence in this record from Mr. Knudsen, Mr. Stettinius, Mr. Dunn, and everybody else nails down the fact that we need aluminum, and that the only way we can get aluminum is to have more power to produce it, and that the Tennessee Valley Authority is the logical place to do it. There is not any getting away from that. Certainly Mr. Knudsen said he was not a power expert, but he had drawn about him men who are power experts. He had conferred with them and collaborated with them, and he was ready to accept their program and come to Congress and endorse it, and he did endorse it enthusiastically.

Now, I want to read you a letter from the chief engineer of the T. V. A. on the question directly at issue, whether you should cut out this hydroelectric dam and do it all by steam power. Here is what Colonel Parker said about it:

> The Cherokee Dam is upstream from nine generating plants on the Tennessee River, either operating or under construction, having an aggregate head of over 500 feet. Its own head will be nearly 150 feet, making a total head of about 650 feet over which can be used the water stored behind Cherokee Dam. In combination with the generating units to be installed downstream, and with the proposed steam plant, additional continuous power will be generated at a cost slightly over 1.5 mills per kilowatt-hour, which is an extremely low figure.
> The minimum cost of producing firm power at an independent steam plant would not be much less than 3.5 mills per kilowatt-hour.

That is, 1.5 with this dam upstream getting the benefit of these generating units downstream, against 3.5 mills if you undertook to make it wholly a steam-generating plant.

> The combination of steam and hydroelectric installations proposed makes possible a remarkable economy, supplements the present system, and provides a diversification of materials and equipment which will facilitate procurement and construction under emergency conditions.

Now, that is the whole story in a nutshell. The experts who do know say that while it may be true that if you started at scratch to generate so many kilowatts of power and you had to build a dam over there to do it on this side, or perhaps a steam plant over there, maybe you could generate that power more cheaply by a steam plant. But here you have an unusual situation, because building this dam upstream you get the benefit of that additional power. Supplementing it with one steam plant you have got a coordinated situation which, according to the testimony of all these experts, is a situation that is desired.

I hope very much that the Committee will vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. In the first place, it does not save a nickel of money. It does not take a penny out of the resolution. The cost of this proposition is not just in the cost of building the plant. Suppose you build a steam plant a little cheaper than you can build a dam, you have to pay 3.5 mills for generating the power.

Let me read you what Colonel Parker said in the hearings. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] asked him:

> Why have you not contemplated putting the steam plant right near the coal mine?
> Colonel PARKER. It will be put as near the coal as is possible and yet on a source of water supply, which is equally important. It probably will be put right near all of our major reservoirs and as near to the coal fields as we can; but that means 1,400 tons of coal a day, which is a great deal of coal.

That is 2,800 tons of coal a day if you undertake to run two steam-generating plants continuously and produce all this power—a prohibitive cost. The present plan is only to run this one plant about one-third of the time.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman talks about burning coal. Does he realize in my back yard we have thousands of coal miners out of work. Probably they will go back to work, instead of going on relief, if we could use more coal.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I appreciate that fact.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I know the gentleman wants to always be fair. While the amount has not been changed, it will save us from embracing these obligations that must be paid later, and there will be a very substantial saving, if we strike out the dam and build these two steam plants.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If you save a few million dollars in building the primary plant but pay more than twice as much for power down through the years you have not made a sensible investment. I say we should accept the testimony of credible experts, and the uncontroverted testimony you have is that this should be a combination hydroelectric and steam proposition. My judgment is that if you are going to take the dam out of the bill you might as well defeat the whole bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired, all time on the amendments have expired.

The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were—ayes 79, noes 118.

So the amendments were rejected.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLEAN: Strike out the entire resolution beginning on line 3 and insert the following:

"That the Tennessee Valley Authority be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to expend not to exceed the sum of $65,800,000 to provide additional facilities for generating electric current to be used in the manufacture of essential materials for national defense, as outlined in Senate Document No. 241, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session; that of this amount there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $25,000,000 to be made immediately available, $29,800,000 in 1942, and $11,000,000 in 1943; that said appropriations shall be kept in a separate fund apart from other funds of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and shall be designated as the Tennessee Valley National Defense Fund of 1940. It shall be accounted for as such, and no part thereof shall be used for any purpose other than to provide additional facilities to be used exclusively for national defense purposes."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to be honest with the American people. We have here a proposal which is dressed up in the cloak of national defense. If this is a national-defense measure, let us keep it such, and let us recognize it as such, and let us protect the funds we appropriate for national-defense purposes designated and characterized as national-defense funds. The American people are not to stand very long for financial legerdemain such as was practiced under the tax bill a few weeks ago when they were told it was a national-defense tax bill, whereas as a matter of fact a considerable proportion of it, the largest proportion of it, went into the general funds of the Treasury. Nor will they stand for legislation of this kind very long. They will soon begin to realize they are being deceived, and that the things that are being done here in the name of national defense are nothing more than providing for the ordinary demands of the people of the country.

If this is a national-defense matter let us make it such. The bill in its present form amounts to nothing more than a supplemental appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for 1941. It is to be included in the same appropriation, it is to be added to the appropriation that was made in the independent offices appropriation bill last April. This is how it reads:

Provided, This appropriation shall be in addition to and shall be covered into and accounted for as a part of the Tennessee Valley Authority fund of 1941 as established by the Independent Offices Appropriation Act of 1941, approved April 18, 1940.

The Tennessee Valley Authority collected $15,000,000 last year from the sale of power, yet no part of that was accounted for to the Congress of the United States. By this bill we propose to give them a supplemental appropriation to be added to their other money to be used for the general purposes of the T. V. A. just the same as if we had included it in the independent offices appropriation bill of last April.

It is time we began to straighten out the finances of the T. V. A. so that we can know something about the money they have at their disposal and what they do with it. If this is a national-defense measure, let us make it such. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in my 8 years' service in this House I have voted for every appropriation which has come to the floor of this distinguished body for the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The very fact that Mr. Stettinius, Mr. Knudsen, and the eminent power engineer, Mr. Dunn, have appeared before congressional committees asking this appropriation is the greatest testimonial we have had as to the wisdom and the foresight of this administration in the construction of power dams and navigation dams on the Tennessee River. [Applause.]

I am going to vote for this appropriation this afternoon. I am going to vote for it because the three eminent men selected by the President of the United States as the most efficient experts in their respective lines in the United States have given their advice to Congress that it is an important step in our national defense. The only reason I rise this afternoon is to point out to this Committee that by enacting this legislation you take a necessary step in national defense, but at the same time you tighten the grasp of that 100-percent monopoly on the source of aluminum in the United States, the Aluminum Co. of America. I wonder if such a monopoly is conducive to national defense? My answer is emphatically "no." There is no time to discuss this question this afternoon as there is such urgency for this legislation, but I would be derelict in my duty as a Member of this House and as a Representative from Utah if I did not call your attention to the fact that we have 30,000,000 tons of alunite in southern Utah. In addition we have a small plant that has demonstrated that alunite is the best and the most economical source of metallic aluminum in the United States today.

I ask our National Defense Council, I ask the President of the United States, and I ask the Members of this House to raise their sights a little bit and encompass the whole United States of America in this national-defense program. Look to the west coast and the manufacture of airplanes out there, then look to the source of aluminum in the deposits of alunite in the State of Utah, located on a railroad. In the vicinity of that alunite you find almost unlimited cheap electric power at Grand Coulee and Bonneville on the north and at Boulder Canyon to the southwest.

I want this legislation passed today, but I hope before we adjourn there will be money appropriated for an investigation of the availability of alunite and the mineral mentioned by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] in his State as a source of aluminum which is so valuable and vital in our national defense. Mr. Chairman, I ask that this resolution be passed making this appropriation, but after that is done let us complete the job by exploring every source of aluminum within the continental United States and relieve this great Nation from its dependence on foreign bauxite as its sole source of aluminum. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending resolution conclude in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the resolution close in 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is said that this is for national defense. I maintain that national security is divided into three parts—military security, which nobody will question; economic security, which everybody knows about; and political security, to which you have paid very little attention.

Under political security comes socialism, nazi-ism, fascism, communism—and the only difference between these is in the size of the dose given. They are all fundamentally the same and all spring from Karl Marx. This country today has to be defended against socialism as much as it has through its military channels. You may have economic security, you may have military defense, but if you have not a political security, socialism, riots, and so forth, will eventually take care of the country. I maintain that all of this Government operation, power, banking, insurance, real estate, and the other 85 businesses that the Government is engaged in is socialism. Every Democrat and every Republican in this House must eventually answer the question, Is or is it not socialism? If it is, I cannot consistently see how any Democrat or how any Republican can vote for these things. They do not have to answer to me, but they certainly will have to answer to themselves some day, some time, and draw the line against the encroachment of socialism on pure democratic government, and upon that answer the security of this country will depend. The best illustration of this is France. It has been said that democracy has fallen in France. Pure democracy has not fallen in France. It was the cancer of socialism, nazi-ism, fascism, and communism that attached itself to the body of pure democracy—destroyed and diluted it so that it could not work. I repeat again that we should stop dead in its track the encroachment of socialism on our form of government. This bill, the balance of the T. V. A., and the Government's operations in banking, insurance, real estate, and in other things are socialism. So far as I am concerned, I am going to stop all of them dead in their tracks and I shall vote against the pending bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, may I say at the outset that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey should be defeated if for no other reason than it is not based upon the merits of the particular bill we have under consideration. It merely gives expression to a view concerning a certain type of political economy.

This measure is before us on a national-defense basis, and it either is or is not a part of the national defense. Whether it is socialism or partially so, or whether it is individualism or partially so are not the great questions.

I want to speak for a moment or two along the line suggested by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK]. It has been stated that in this national-defense program we have a long way to go, and that this $65,000,000 is only the beginning of a great program which will run through the next 4 or 5 years. We are all apparently in accord with the general idea that we must carry on a national defense program and we are all in accord, I believe, with the fact that electrical energy is going to play a large part in that program. In my judgment, that was wise.

The Government has spent $200,000,000 in my district for electrical-energy development as well as for other purposes. That is coming on the market now, and no steam plant ever conceived can begin to compare in price with the mill and a half or 2 mills per kilowatt-hour amortized over-all cost of this developed hydroelectric power. If the Aluminum Co. of America should locate their plant out there, and produce one-third of their pig-metal product there, there would be the requirement to haul back and forth, as I said earlier in the afternoon, everything they produced three times.

There is another ore there in addition to the ore, alunite, in Utah. There is magnesite, millions and millions of tons of it, and it will be all around this giant lake, a lake 151 miles in length, that will be created by the building of Grand Coulee. The power can be taken at the bus bar and the magnesite can be reduced to metallic magnesium, which is a metal superior to aluminum. It is a third lighter than aluminum. It has a greater tensile strength than aluminum. It can be produced for 10 cents a pound and not for 20 cents a pound. The Germans in 1938, with a secret electrical process, produced 40,000 tons of metallic magnesium, against our 4,000 tons. Their planes are being made of magnesium. I want the Defense Committee to look into the things we have in the West. It is not right that this Nation shall be dependent upon one concern and one metal alone, in our vital defense program.

MUST HAVE METALS TO BUILD PLANES

We have been told that each airplane will take about 5 tons of aluminum. On a weight basis this is equivalent to less than 3½ tons of magnesium. The lighter weight, superior magnesium can be produced at nearly half the cost as the more familiar aluminum.

The Defense Advisory Committee now comes before Congress and tells us that there will be a shortage of 60,000,000 pounds of aluminum by 1942. Bonneville and Grand Coulee can supply prime hydro power at the lowest cost in the United States. There is very little difference in the power requirements necessary to manufacture aluminum or magnesium, and any advantage from the consumption standpoint rests with magnesium.

THE MAGIC METAL

Magnesium is the magic metal of the future. Germany is now turning toward magnesium. To ignore this metal at this time borders on dangerous precedent. Lighter planes for a given capacity means greater speed and greater combat efficiency. Magnesium bombs, the plane's cargo, are lighter than those manufactured from any other metal. We cannot afford to ignore technological advances. To do so might lead to some form of disaster.

At present, in this country, magnesium is used for light metal, alloy products, and in the chemical and electric industries, with the greater use going into castings for miscellaneous airplane and automobile parts. Substitution of magnesium for other materials in the airplane is rapidly increasing, but has not progressed to the proportions found in Germany.

From 1935 to 1938 the United States annual consumption of magnesium was a little under 5,000,000 pounds. There was a great increase in consumption during 1939. This year the consumption has increased at a still greater rate, and will probably reach 12,000,000 pounds. The production capacity, with the completion of the Freeport, Tex., plant will about equal this year's consumption. All of our magnesium is now produced from brines, which makes a lower grade of metal compared with the new magnesite ore. It is the contained impurities which lower the resistance to corrosion. The objections urged against magnesium are against the brine metal which in the trade is known as Dow metal. There has been no commercial evaluation of magnesite magnesium, which is a very superior metal.

UNITED STATES OWNS LARGE BLOCKS OF NORTHWEST POWER

Funds have been appropriated for six Bonneville units totaling 300,000 kilowatts; 86,000 kilowatts of this has been completed and 220,000 kilowatts is in process of construction. Grand Coulee likewise has 315,000 kilowatts authorized and in process of construction. This total of 615,000 kilowatts capacity will be available before the T. V. A. plants can be completed. Bonneville can install 218,000 kilowatts and Coulee 1,500,000 kilowatts additional, when needed for around one-fifth of the cost of similar construction in the T. V. A. area. The dams are or shortly will be completed, and the foundations will be in place for the additional capacity. The testimony before the Senate and House committee shows that no private power system in America can furnish the 200,000 to 300,000 kilowatts immediately required. We were further told that aluminum to supply the existing Pacific coast airplane plants, over the Bonneville aluminum capacity, must be shipped from the East. Each pound of aluminum produced at Vancouver has to be reshipped in some form across the continent three times. There are no aluminum fabricating plants in the West.

NECESSITY FOR MAGNESIUM

It would seem, because of the speed element in the defense program, that full consideration has not been given to some advanced vital technological and economic components of this program.

Germany has developed a secret process for producing magnesium metal from calcined magnesite by electro-thermic smelting and distillation. A commercially feasible process which is thought to be the same as the German process has been developed at Washington State College. Vast, unlimited deposits of magnesite exist in northeastern Washington, and the Pacific Northwest is endowed with the largest developed supply of low-cost power in America.

Magnesium alloys are materially lighter than any other structural material. Pound for pound, magnesium alloys have considerably greater strength than steel. These and other characteristics show that the possibilities of this metal must be given full consideration in any airplane-production program. Magnesium is now assured a permanent position in the schedule of light metals.

Dow metal now sells for 28 to 30 cents per pound, aluminum for 20 cents, and it has been estimated by competent authorities that electro-thermic magnesium can be produced from Northwestern magnesite and power for around 10 cents per pound. These technological and economic considerations cannot be ignored. Germany and other air-minded nations are making great strides in the production and utilization of metallic magnesium. If this country wishes to preserve its place in this technological advance, it must take immediate steps to produce and utilize this metal.

Magnesium is 30 percent lighter than aluminum; it can be fabricated with greater ease and has greater strength.

Bauxite ore, the base for aluminum, is listed amongst the critical materials. Our consumption of bauxite is largely imported from Dutch Guiana. Consider what can happen to this supply under existing world conditions. Although we have a fair reserve in Arkansas, and a small reserve in Tennessee, I think you will find that the planes in this program will be made from imported materials.

The employment component of this problem has been completely ignored in the House presentation. Has anyone told us in this testimony that our importations of strategic and critical minerals represent a pay-roll displacement in excess of the total direct mining employment existing in the United States today? This set-up smacks of an aluminum monopoly. Congress is asked to preserve such a monopoly, while at the same time the Department of Justice is trying to break up such an unsound situation.

MAGNESIUM—METAL OF FUTURE

I repeat, this is the metal of the future. Its low-cost production will give mankind numerous fields of activities, now denied to him. It is a metal which weighs only two-thirds that of aluminum and one-quarter that of steel. Weight for weight alloys of magnesium are over 5 times as strong and stiff as steel. No other metal has the strength and light weight of magnesium. The production of magnesium metal in the United States is so small as to create an absurdity. The small production in the United States results from the present production from inadequate local supplies—principally as a byproduct of brine solutions used for other purposes.

The largest supply of low-cost magnesium ores in the country occurs in the Pacific Northwest. Because of shortage of aluminum ores, Germany has developed a highly secret electrothermic process for reducing low-grade magnesium ores. A new process has been developed jointly by Washington State College and the Bureau of Mines which is thought to be similar to the secret German process. This process utilizes electric power.

The combined location of ores and cheap power in the Pacific Northwest justifies the development of the "wonder metal."

In 1915 magnesium metal sold for $5 a pound. Brine magnesium metal now sells for 28 to 30 cents per pound. Ninety-nine and ninty-eight one hundredths percent pure magnesium can be produced from magnesite ores with Bonneville and Grand Coulee power for 10 cents per pound. Heavier aluminum sells for 19 to 20 cents per pound.

Germany before the war was producing over 40,000 tons of this metal annually, and is replacing steel with this lighter-weight metal.

INCREASED USE FOR MAGNESIUM

The airplane use of magnesium in the United States is very small in comparison with the use of aluminum. The reason has been the production of brine metal, its attendant corrosion, and monopoly conditions. These handicaps can be overcome by the production of this metal from northwestern magnesite deposits. It will only be a short time before we will have to meet the competition of this superior foreign produced metal, and then the magnesium production will have to be suddenly increased.

It would seem that the defense committee is relying on production from sea water to meet such a demand, when the production capacity limit is defined by the available supply of power. The sea-water plant under construction in Texas is removed from large power sources.

WEST COAST AIRPLANE PRODUCTION CAPACITY

The New York Times on Sunday, July 23, 1940, section 10, ran an article on the Southern California aircraft production capacity, which brought out that this capacity could be increased to 1,560 planes per month. This estimate does not include the aircraft production of the Boeing Co. of Seattle. For the purpose of analysis it can be assumed, on the basis of this information, that the west coast capacity can be easily increased in a short time to 1,500 to 1,800 planes per month.

According to the testimony of Mr. William S. Knudsen, of the National Defense Advisory Committee, as shown on page 5 of the House hearings, an average of 5 tons of aluminum and the alloys will be used per plane.

It follows then that the west coast aluminum requirements can amount to 90,000 to 108,000 tons per year, or 180,000,000 to 216,000,000 pounds, under a wise program.

The yearly capacity of the new Aluminum Co.'s plant at Vancouver, Wash., will be 30,000 tons per year, or about one-third of these west coast requirements.

The Aluminum Co. can only produce pig aluminum at Vancouver and some castings at their Los Angeles plant. All sheets and shapes must be brought from eastern rolling mills and extrusion plants. If we are to bring our airplane-production capacity up to the stated amount and depend only on aluminum, it seems highly desirable to provide not only additional western pig-aluminum capacity, but also immediate western facilities for rolling and extrusion.

ALUNITE

My good friend the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] has called attention to 30 million tons of alunite in Utah. He is absolutely correct in his statements. Large deposits of alunite are to be found also in the State of Washington. The successful production of aluminum from alunite has been experimentally demonstrated. I am informed that this investigation has proceeded through the pilot plant stage, and that approximately $1,000,000 has been spent by reliable private interests on these experiments. The results have been entirely satisfactory. In the pilot plant, alumina has been produced from alunite with a substantial potash recovery. The alumina was shipped to the East for demonstration and a satisfactory aluminum pig was produced by standard electrolytic methods. Alunite contains about 37 percent alumina while bauxite ore contains about 53 percent. The potash recovery and the difference in process is claimed to produce aluminum that can compete successfully with the product of the Aluminum Co. I understand that reliable interests are willing to build a plant and contract for Bonneville power.

All that is needed to start this program is some assurance that they will be recognized. There is no evidence that alunite production has been given requisite consideration by the Defense Commission. The defense and economic results obtainable from this new alunite process are highly important, as it will compete with the present aluminum monopoly, and will provide new sources of aluminum from domestic sources.

I hope that the Defense Council will be farsighted enough to ask for an appropriation to cover a full investigation of magnesium from northwestern magnesite, aluminum from western alunite, northwestern manganese, western chromium, and other western strategic and critical metals, as it is apparent that extensive consideration has not been given these sources.

THE DEFENSE MAP

The New York Times of Sunday, May 5, 1940, published a defense map of the United States as seen by the defense experts. This map is only line thickness west of the Mississippi and south of the T. V. A. and takes in only 13 percent of the land area of the United States. This map tells the story in few words how our experts have ignored 87 percent of the land area of our country in the defense-material plans. Do the defense experts realize that we must defend this large area as well as the important naval and military outposts still farther to the West?

Our Western States give the Nation a number of raw materials, without which the war industries of the Nation would be stopped. Still other resources are allowed to remain dormant because of monopoly conditions. Nowhere in the current plans of the Defense Council, or in the industrial mobilization plans of the Army or the Navy is there any expressed indication of the need for placing in the largest part of our land area a diversified group of war industries. This short-sighted policy is denying to 87 percent of our country the right to contribute to the defense of the Nation, to its own defense, and the defense of its outposts.

It appears also that the requirement of industrial reserves has been passed over. What are we to do in case of destruction in the concentrated industrial areas, the bottle necks created by concentration, or transportation tie-ups affecting these congested industrial areas? I do not profess to be an expert but I can see that many vital considerations have been left out of this presentation.

Behind it all looms the profits of the Aluminum Co. and certain allied interests. The desire for industrial profits largely contributed to the downfall of France. Are our experts going to lead us into a similar situation? I ask this question, not out of any regional interest, partisanship, or politics. Regional interest, of course, prompted me to investigate, but the disclosures resulting from my investigation are disturbing. The experts need to tell us whether they are providing sufficiency to the remaining 87 percent of our country, and whether they are making the fullest economical use of the resources of all the country. The hearings and this debate leaves many vital points unanswered.

SOME JOKERS

The Dunn testimony as to the relative merits of steam versus hydro is purely academic. Nowhere in the testimony or the debate is the essential cost consideration disclosed. The essential point, due to the large kilowatt-hour requirement of aluminum production is the electric cost per kilowatt-hour. The position of the Aluminum Co. has been that it is necessary to secure large blocks of power for less than 3 mills per kilowatt-hour to make aluminum production feasible.

The T. V. A. under existing contracts sells primary power to Alcoa for 2.78 mills per kilowatt-hour and hydro secondary power available for 75 percent of the time for 2 mills.

The proposed Watts Bar steam plant will, under cheap-coal conditions and the load factor given in the testimony, produce 5-mill current. This is too costly for commercial aluminum production. The Cherokee Dam alone will, without allocation, produce about 3.5- to 3.8-mill current and with allocation 2 mills per kilowatt-hour. The lower river plants, included in the proposal will produce very low-cost power after the Cherokee Dam is built.

Similar prime power can be purchased under the "at site" filed Bonneville rates for 1.75 mills per kilowatt-hour and under the transmitted rate for a trifle over 2 mills per kilowatt-hour. Grand Coulee power can be sold as low or lower than Bonneville power. The testimony shows that it takes about 12 kilowatt-hours per pound of aluminum. Therefore 1 mill difference in the cost of current adds 1.2 cents per pound of metal. This means that the steam power aluminum will cost over 3 cents per pound more than metal produced with Bonneville-Coulee power.

The actual cost figures to the Aluminum Co. will depend on the type of contract T. V. A. and the Defense Council negotiates with the Aluminum Co. Congress has been given no information on this.

The bill language set out in the House hearings and that finally submitted differ. At the last minute the proviso that the extent and location of the transmission lines provided in the bill shall receive the approval of the Defense Committee was added. Is not this virtually giving the admitted former agent of the private power companies authority denied by the organic T. V. A. Act? I do not question the motives of any member of the Defense Committee, but when the public interest is involved, safeguards should be placed against the possibility of private power-company influence being injected into such a vital component of the problem.

The inference that 60,000 kilowatts was allocated to Bonneville is incorrect. The 60,000 kilowatts referred to is covered in contracts executed last December and early spring by the Aluminum Co. These contracts were negotiated before the pending matter was initiated.

CONCLUSION

These facts, as stated in the hearings, and the pending requests are inconsistent and it is evident that: (1) Additional pig and fabricating aluminum capacity should be installed in the Pacific Northwest; (2) defense industrial activities should be decentralized; (3) defense funds should be immediately allotted to demonstrate the advantages of magnesium production to private industry and thus afford private industry an opportunity to mine, process, and fabricate this advanced metal; (4) if private industry will not undertake, after demonstration, magnesium production, then Congress should initiate steps to construct a federally owned magnesium plant.

The identical situation also exists as to alunite, manganese, and chromium production. Extensive deposits of these metals will be found adjacent to low-cost power in Washington, Oregon, and Utah. These and other Pacific Northwest materials are vital to any effective defense program. It is suggested that the same procedure should be followed as to these other metals which has been outlined for magnesium.

The President, in his July 10 message to Congress, stated, "If the United States is to have any defense, it must have total defense." The only purpose of these remarks is to constructively stress some vital points in any program of total defense.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me a little unfortunate that one of the most important factors that should have been considered in the discussion of this subject has received so little attention. It was mentioned by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY]. It has just been recently developed by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY]. That neglected factor is the source of the material from which we are to make the aluminum.

Those of us who come from the West know that there are important deposits of alunite, which the gentleman from Utah mentions. There is also leucite, an aluminum-bearing ore, in Wyoming. In my own State of South Dakota there are inexhaustible beds of Pierre shales or clays from 300 to 1,200 feet in thickness—in a few places they reach a maximum thickness of 2,000 feet—that carry from 15 to 30 percent aluminum oxide. This Pierre shale forms the surface soil of more than a third of the State; it is only lightly covered in another third.

The beds are exposed for 250 miles on the very banks of the Missouri River, where the material could be floated downstream, if it were desired. Power could be developed at one of a half dozen sites on the river or could be developed from coal, because a circle with a radius of 400 miles from Rapid City contains one-fourth of all the known coal deposits of the world. And as concretions in these Pierre shales on the same river is found the largest known deposit of metallic manganese in the United States—102,000,000 tons of metallic manganese in nine townships.

In a comprehensive consideration of this problem from a national-defense standpoint some consideration should certainly be given to the location of the material from which you are going to make the aluminum and its relation to transportation, freedom from attack, nearness to other strategic minerals and coal as well as to power.

I was talking last week with a professor in the school of mines in my State and he said to me "Where are you going to get your cryolite for the bath solution if you are going to produce all this aluminum by electrolysis?" I said, "I do not know." He said, "My understanding is that the cryolite comes from Greenland. Will you not have a bottleneck in the production of your aluminum if imports from outside are cut off and you depend upon Greenland for getting your cryolite?" I confessed to him that I did not know.

When I said a little earlier this afternoon that I thought this debate had some aspects of a "blitzkrieg" it was because practically all we have heard has been talk about power, and there has been very, very little discussion of the source of the aluminum or other factors entering into its most feasible production. Someone did say that if it was produced in the West it would take so many freight cars to take the ore to the plants. Gentlemen, the raw material is there and no evidence has been presented to show that any adequate supply of bauxite exists in the Tennessee Valley. Certainly it is easier to find freight cars for the finished product than to find cars and ships for imported bauxite.

This bill will pass, of course, because it comes up here ticketed as part of the defense program. We are told that if the bill is delayed a day, or at most a week, that we may miss the floodwaters in the spring of 1942. That is typical of the stampede tactics which some day will be ridiculed as people in more sober moments pass on what we do today. Everyone must know that if we were to consider the proposed legislation from a sound and logical standpoint we would not stop at power, we would go into other angles of the question. There is no one here who is quarrelling with the idea of national defense. In fact, in all seriousness, these other things are fundamental considerations for national defense, not merely power but raw materials, transportation, freedom from attack, and so forth. If we were to give the full consideration that should be given to this question we would go into those angles of it, too. With one of the recent speakers I join in the hope that the members of the Council of National Defense will raise their sights and look at the entire United States in approaching these problems. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I was very much surprised to hear the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN] make the statement that this joint resolution contains nothing but a supplementary appropriation for the T. V. A. of 1941. The head of the Advisory Commission is one of the outstanding businessmen of the country, a man who has made his mark, a man who, I am informed, has never voted for President Roosevelt.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. In view of the fact that I have mentioned the gentleman's name, I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. When the gentleman reads this language in the resolution—

Provided, That the foregoing appropriation shall be in addition to and shall be covered into and accounted for as a part of the "Tennessee Valley Authority fund, 1941," as established by the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1941—

Does he not believe it?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman gets very alarmed and excited when reference is made——

Mr. McLEAN. I am asking the gentleman a question and I should like an answer.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman will be seated, I will answer his question. The gentleman made the charge, inferentially, at least, if not directly, when he said that this is nothing but a supplementary appropriation for the T. V. A. of 1941, that this appropriation is not connected with national defense. I call attention to the fact that the President of the United States has called into service one of the outstanding businessmen of the country, a man who, I understand and am informed, has never voted for the President, so politics is not involved; a man whom we all respect as a good American and a contributor to American progress, Mr. Knudsen, who is president of General Motors and one of the outstanding businessmen and financiers of the country. This gentleman appeared before the committee with his associates and has advised the members of the committee that this is necessary in the interest of the national defense of the country; yet we see those on the Republican side, as usual, speaking one way on national defense and voting another way.

I hope my friend, the gentleman from Virginia in charge of the bill, will ask for a roll call on this question so that the country may know whether this is another spectacle of the Republican Members of the House speaking their love of national defense, speaking as they did for the workers who are unemployed on W. P. A. and voting against national defense and voting against W. P. A. appropriations. [Applause.]

The gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] talked about socialism. Is the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Act socialism? If so, it protects the deposits of about 20,000,000 depositors in this country. Is the Home Owners' Loan Corporation socialism? If so, it has protected the homes of 2,000,000 people in this country.

Is the relief that the Democratic Party has given to the farmer of the country socialism? If so, I wonder what the farmer of the country thinks of such specious and incorrect argument, coming from a prominent member of the Republican Party. The gentleman from California charges that this and other activities in the interest of the average person constitute socialism. That is the type of legislation that the Republican Party charges is socialism, legislation that is consistent with the best interests of our country.

I remember years ago, in Massachusetts, as a young man, when the effort was made to enact into law the Workmen's Compensation Act, the charge made against that beneficial and progressive legislation was that it was socialism. I remember the 8-hour law for women and children, when that legislation was enacted years ago in Massachusetts, and its opponents charged that it was socialism. I remember the minimum-wage law for women and children employed in industry, and the opposition to the enactment of such legislation in Massachusetts was that it was socialism. We hear the same cry today against progressive legislation, consistent with the best interests of the people that was made years ago against progressive legislation of the past decades. Yes; I can even go back in history to the days when the fight was made to establish the public-school system in the various States of the Union and the cry made then was that it was socialism, that public education was not the function of the State, but was a matter of private concern. Yes; I remember reading the early history of Massachusetts when the effort was made to have public roads, to be used by the public, built and maintained by the public, the cry was that it was socialism, that it was not the duty of the State, city, or town, or county, to build and maintain public roads for the use of the general public. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOSER].

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up the time of my colleagues, but as late as 4 o'clock this afternoon I talked with both Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius. Up to that time I was not sold on the conclusion whether I would support this resolution; but let me say for the information of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] that Mr. Knudsen assured me that it does require five tons of aluminum to construct one airplane, and, needing material and supplies, asked me to talk to Mr. Stettinius, whose task it is to find it, and who, in accordance with the thought of the gentleman from New Jersey as indicated in his amendment, told me he hoped that he was not being deluded in believing this entire appropriation would be expended for the one purpose of national defense, but that if he was sold on the wrong idea he would be willing to admit it. I therefore state to the Committee that I will support the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN], and I will support the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. I yield back the remainder of my time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McLEAN) there were—ayes 94, noes 126.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee automatically rises under the rule.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HART, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that, the Committee having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 583) making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense, pursuant to House Resolution 544, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit, which is on the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the joint resolution?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am in its present form.

The SPEAKER. Is there any gentleman who is entirely opposed to the resolution seeking recognition; if not, the Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DIRKSEN moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendments:

On page 1, line 8, strike out the last two words and all of line 9 and the first two words in line 10; also, on page 2, in lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "one hundred and twenty" and insert the words "two hundred and forty."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 229, not voting 77, as follows:

Mr. KILBURN. Mr. Speaker, I had a pair with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. BYRON. If he had been present, he would have voted "aye." I voted "no." I therefore withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their own remarks on the resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PACE). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the majority leader, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, during the course of my statement on the rule I secured permission to include therein a letter from Mr. Gano Dunn to Mr. Stettinius. I had intended to ask that there be included therein a brief introductory statement from the hearings, but I find when the transcript came that I evidently overlooked asking for that permission. I now ask that I be permitted to include a brief preliminary statement from the hearings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an article by Beecher Elliot and an article by Colonel Martin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein an article from Time magazine on the gentleman from New Mexico, the Honorable JACK DEMPSEY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include certain tables which I have prepared.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of the legislative business of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by inserting in the RECORD an address delivered last Sunday night by Col. Richard R. McCormick, editor and publisher of the Chicago Tribune, on the necessity for the reorganization of the structure of the Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio speech I delivered last Sunday night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a short article from the New York Herald Tribune.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Also, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short excerpt from a book issued by the Committee on Defending America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, with unanimous consent I ask to have my remarks extended in the RECORD to include a dispatch from Ottawa, Canada.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ARMY REORGANIZATION

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi a moment ago concerning reorganization of the Army and possible plans in that direction. I hold in my hand a United Press article from the Washington Daily News written in Berlin by Mr. Richard C. Hottelet explaining something of the organization of the Nazi air force. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include the article.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The article referred to follows:

SEPARATE COMMAND IS NAZI AIR SECRET

(By Richard C. Hottelet)

BERLIN, July 29.—The German Air Force, which started from scratch 6 years ago, has become indisputably the world's greatest.

Witness Poland, Norway, the Low Countries, France.

The one factor which, more than any other, made the Reich's "Luftwaffe" what it is today was unified organization—organization so perfect in detail that the German Air Force can function in one capacity or a dozen, in whole or in part, in offense or in defense without a hitch and at a moment's notice.

STREAMLINED

The Luftwaffe is modern and streamlined in all its parts.

As one of Germany's three armed services, with which it is coequal, the air force has its own commander in chief. With the army and navy, it is subject to orders from Hitler's high command, the supreme unifying and coordinating power.

Non-German experts acquainted with the air force's organization have reported that it functions with an efficiency rare in such large and ramified bodies.

The methods of organization and the routines followed not only are brand new, these experts have discovered, but are also completely flexible so that they may be changed to meet new situations and to allow the greatest possible discretion to the numerous responsible officials.

The air force is not, as recent history may have seemed to indicate, a purely offensive service. It includes every branch of Germany's defense against air attack, including all antiaircraft artillery. It also has its own signal and medical corps as well as other specialized groups which enable it to operate as a self-contained unit.

The air force may operate independently, or in conjunction with the army and navy. Air force units may be detached for service under army or navy command. Discretion for such employment of the air force lies exclusively with the high command.

Although Reich Field Marshal Hermann Wilhelm Goering outranks Admiral Erich Raeder, Navy Commander in Chief, and Gen. Field Marshal Walther von Brauchitsch, Army Commander in Chief, the air force itself enjoys no precedence over the other two branches.

POLISH CAMPAIGN

The past 11 months have illustrated how the air force works. In an operation like the Polish campaign, the army would request a certain number of planes and antiaircraft batteries for local reconnaissance, artillery observation, and protection.

These units would be temporarily detached by the high command and placed under direct command of the army. Meanwhile, the main body of the air force would be operating in its own sphere, bombing enemy lines of communications and air bases and fighting enemy airplanes.

In an operation over difficult terrain and across a body of water, as in the Norwegian campaign, the air force would be closely coordinated with the navy as well as the army.

In a mixed campaign involving land as well as water operations, as in the offensive against France and Britain, air power would be used constantly both independently and in coordination with land and sea forces.

At the outset of the drive, acting in its own realm, the air force would strike en masse against enemy air bases with a view to seizing air superiority at once. If success met this attempt, large units might then be detached for army service to aid ground forces to smash their way deeper into enemy territory.

Always, however, whatever its function of the moment, the air force is cooperating with its brother services in driving toward some specific strategic objective.

FLEXIBILITY FIRST

The air force's antiaircraft batteries were employed against enemy tanks and even warships as well as against enemy planes. In all instances the greatest flexibility of operation was maintained, and there was no adherence to set schemes of action merely for the scheme's sake.

In overseas operations the air force would act independently, raiding enemy industries, harbors, and other military objectives, and in close cooperation with the navy, bombing enemy shipping or hunting submarines.

An illustration of the air arm's flexibility was the organization of Germany's crack parachute troops. The original idea was Gen. Ernst Udet's, whose job at the time ostensibly was in connection with the technical development of plane engines.

But there was no jealousy or quibbling, and, according to one non-German aviation expert, "No one complained that he was overstepping the functions of his office—they all helped."

The Reich is divided into four air fleets (luftfoltten), each of which includes several air districts (luftgaue). In addition, there are special districts covering small areas of greater military vulnerability, such as Berlin, Leipzig, and the Ruhr industrial valley.

The air fleet command is in charge of all operations and all plane bases, communications, and whatever equipment it may need.

SELF-CONTAINED

If the air fleet gets an offensive assignment, it may leave its home base or even depart from Germany lock, stock, and barrel. It then becomes a completely self-contained fighting unit fully supplied with its own fighting, bombing, reconnaissance, staff, and hospital planes and its own antiaircraft batteries, signal corps, quartermasters' detachments, and medical units.

In short, it is given the task of bringing operations to a successful conclusion and is supplied with all means of doing so.

One expert summed it up by saying:

"If circumstance demands, the air fleet can have infantrymen, sailors, artillerymen, and engineers assigned to it. Nobody worries about the seaming heterogeneity of organization—the only consideration is that the air fleet is to do a job and do it efficiently."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'LEARY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. CLARK, 3 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. HOOK, 2 weeks, on account of official business.

To Mr. RANDOLPH, for 1 day, on account of official business.

To Mr. SHERIDAN (at the request of Mr. BOLAND) for 27 days, on account of being called into active naval service stationed on U. S. S. Cimarron at Pearl Harbor, Honolulu.

To Mr. BATES of Kentucky (at the request of Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky) for 1 day, on account of important business.

To Mr. GOODWIN (at the request of Mr. LECOMPTE), for this week, on account of important business.

To Mr. JACOBSON (at the request of Mr. LECOMPTE), for the balance of week, on account of important business.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 3920. An act to amend the Railroad Unemployment Act, approved June 25, 1938, as amended June 20, 1939, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The Speaker announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 3200. An act to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army in the military departments of Panama and Hawaii.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, July 31, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

9091. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Midwest Federation of American Syrian Lebanon Clubs, Indianapolis, Ind., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to allegiance to the Government of the United States of America; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JULY 31, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Reverend Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose goodness and mercy have followed us all our days, we come into Thy presence through the gateway of prayer. Thou wilt never close this way, for Thy fatherly heart is always open with love in response to those who seek Thee.

In all our duties give us Thy help; in our perplexities, Thy counsel; in our dangers, Thy protection; and in our sorrows, Thy peace. When the evening shadows betoken the end of the day, may a conscience that is peaceful and a heart that is happy be Thy testimony that we have tried to make life less difficult for the distressed and afflicted.

Grant that our beloved country may be the abode of peace and prosperity, of truth and justice, of righteousness and freedom. Keep us true to our historic ideals of integrity and unselfish service to needy humanity. May this Nation be an ambassador of God, leading the way toward a civilization built upon the principles of the Kingdom of Heaven.

In the name of the King of Kings we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 583. Joint resolution making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 4037. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Theodore R. Troendle, for the Dawson Springs Construction Co.

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL NATIONAL-DEFENSE APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 10263) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2810), which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to a very erroneous impression that seems to be going around the country. I hold in my hand an extract from this morning's paper which says definitely that members of the tax subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee met yesterday morning with Treasury and congressional experts, and so forth; then later on it states that—

This afternoon they had a general discussion that ended nowhere.

Mr. Speaker, that is an erroneous impression. The tax subcommittee has not been called together. Yesterday afternoon I met some newspapermen, and they were surprised that I did not know there was a meeting of the tax subcommittee being held. No notice has been given any member on the Republican side of any such meeting. The Democrats may be holding such meetings, which might be termed partisan "nonpartisan" gatherings. They will eventually come in here and tell us that they want to pass a nonpartisan tax measure. Why do they not make it nonpartisan by including Republican members of the committee rather than meeting the way they do, in secret informal sessions in which they presume to determine the whole program? Our assistance may not be of much value, but we are Members of the House and of the committee, and they should not have these meetings without letting us know.

If it were a partisan matter which was under consideration, such as a tariff bill, we might expect to be excluded; but the excess-profits tax is a nonpartisan measure which the Republican members of the committee were instrumental in initiating.

We of the Republican minority are perfectly willing to assume our share of the responsibility in preparing a sound excess-profits tax measure, but we do not want the country to get the impression that we have been permitted to have any part in its drafting up to the present time, for we have not.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] complains of the very practice that he followed himself when the Republicans were in power, when they were trumping up the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill, the most iniquitous tariff bill that was ever passed by the American Congress, one that robbed the American people more than any other measure Congress ever passed, a bill which levied a tribute on everything the American farmer had to buy, from the swaddling clothes of infancy to the lining of the coffin in which old age is laid away.

They held meetings behind closed doors, and I refer to the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, among whom was the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. Now, when we are trying to undo some of those iniquities which they perpetrated during the Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover regimes, he has no right to condemn the Democrats for merely following the precedent set by them in holding their meetings. If our members of the committee are holding separate meetings, as he intimates, it is because they are simply trying to arrive at some decision before they call in the Republican Members who will probably want to throw sticks in the machinery. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Chicago Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I feel certain that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is alarmed about something that has not happened and will not happen. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], who, as I understand, is chairman of the subcommittee on taxation, has for some time been talking to people in the Treasury Department. In all probability the Treasury Department is ready to make a report on what it thinks about the so-called excess-profits matter. I am certain that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] and his subcommittee intend that this matter shall be considered in a nonpartisan fashion and that when the real work that is to come before the subcommittee and the full committee is ready the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and the gentlemen on his side of the House will have all the responsibility that they desire in connection with writing a tax bill.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement, carried in the New York Herald Tribune, by Mr. Leo T. Crowley, Chairman of the Board of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, reviewing the operations of the Corporation this year and setting forth facts and figures.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Williamsport Sun.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, whenever a Republican gets up here on the floor of the House and criticizes something that has happened, such as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], a member of the Ways and Means Committee, stated a few minutes ago he is a member of the committee involved for taxation, and if it does not take well with the administration, the Chair generally recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] to follow the Speaker on the Republican side, it is so apparent.

The gentleman from Mississippi may be an administration spokesman, but the gentleman from Mississippi in the things he has to say here in reference to the Democratic Party in criticizing the Republican tariff or anything the Republicans may do or have done, does not count or register very much for sound American principles. He does not have any business experience that I know of. He wants the Government in all kinds of business. The Chair recognizes him at his will. I want to say here that as long as we permit the importation of farm commodities that take the place of what the farmers in this country ought to raise, or the importation of goods that take the place of American manufactures, while at the same time we want to give employment to the 9,000,000 Americans who are out of work, then I say it is time we have a tariff that will protect American industry and protect American labor. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

HARRY BRIDGES

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of all Congressmen to the fact that the United States Government has in its possession four sworn affidavits made by Harry Bridges, and that three of them on their face must be perjured. I should like to know why the Attorney General does not proceed against Harry Bridges. I believe one of the greatest lines of defense in this country today is to defend us from enemies within. The Attorney General must know that Bridges is guilty of perjury. If he is going to continue to let these aliens make perjurious statements and get away with it, I can see in that a real break-down of American government. I believe this country has a right to look to the highest officials in this land to see that the law is carried out. This is not a Democratic idea, neither is it a Republican idea. It goes to the welfare and safety of this country. I believe this body should insist on this country's officials doing their duty. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Mr. GROSS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a very excellent article on the lack of tin in America, from today's Washington Merry-Go-Round.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

EXPORTATION OF SCRAP IRON

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I made some remarks concerning the shipment of scrap iron to Japan. I believe this morning some remarks were made in regard to the shipment of commodities into America and the fact that these commodities come into conflict and competition with the products of our farms, and thereby work a hardship on our farmers. I believe every one of us today is receiving dozens of letters and telegrams protesting the shipment of scrap iron and other war materials, especially to our potential enemies. The shipment of scrap iron at any time is equal to taking the topsoil of America and sending it to foreign countries, because it never comes back to our land except in the form of bullets or some form of ammunition. Certainly something should be done now because of the shortage of scrap iron here in America to stop this for once and for all, especially in view of Japan's barbarous warfare in China. I trust something will be done very quickly, as we now have a shortage here in America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a newspaper article or two.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two occasions and include therein a communication from one of my constituents and an article from Fortune magazine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein what I regard as a very able speech made by Congressman KLEBERG, of Corpus Christi, Tex., on the 20th day of July, on the subject of preparedness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL NATIONAL-DEFENSE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10263) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; and pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue for 4 hours, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Virginia if it is not his purpose to complete the consideration of this bill during the day?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is, I will say to the gentleman from Texas. We figure that the debate will be over by 4:30, and, so far as any of us know, there is no opposition to the bill and we expect to read it and pass it this evening.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is coming up tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. The so-called amendment of the Commodity Credit Corporation Act, which will not take a long time, and also the housing bill. On Friday we will consider a report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on an amendment to the Securities and Exchange Act affecting investment trusts. I understand there is a complete agreement as to these amendments by the industry, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. So far as I know, it is a unanimous report and there is a unanimous agreement among all the parties concerned about it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10263, the second supplemental national defense appropriation bill, 1941, with Mr. COLE of Maryland in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill carries $4,970,151,957 of appropriations and contractual authority for the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps. I am not going to take a great deal of the time of the Committee in going into the details of the bill. While the amount of money involved is large, the number of individual items is not great. The bill provides equipment for the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps for aviation and for ordnance and for the purchase of essential and critical materials.

You will find in the report which the committee has filed a statement breaking down these several items. The amount of the appropriation in the bill is $2,234,191,957 in cash and the amount of contractual authority is $2,728,960,000. Of this sum the Army gets in appropriations $1,662,265,417 and in contractual authority $2,249,730,000. The Navy's allocation is $571,926,540 of appropriation and $479,230,000 of contractual authority.

By far the greater amount of the appropriations contained in the measure is for so-called critical and essential materials and on account of the construction program of the Navy. The bill provides for the most pressing and important equipment considered to be necessary in an emergency for an Army of 1,200,000 men, and for the most pressing and important critical materials for a force of 2,000,000 men. Critical materials consist of munitions of a type which cannot be easily or quickly acquired; materials of a noncommercial character.

The matériel provided for in this bill for the Army includes practically everything that a soldier and a modern army will use, from articles of the uniform to personal supplies and equipment and munitions of every kind and description.

With respect to Army aviation the committee recommends the Budget proposal for the procurement of 14,394 airplanes of various types, including accessory equipment and spare engines and spare parts.

Included in the munitions program is $38,787,142 for the procurement of 28,401 motor-propelled vehicles, apart from combat and technical vehicles.

Coming to the Navy we provide for commencing the construction of additional battleships, cruisers, and smaller craft, and for the reconditioning of some auxiliary vessels either already in the service or to be acquired, all for and incident to the purpose of reaching the objective of giving us a so-called 2-ocean Navy of about 700 combatant ships, which would be completed in about 3 or 4 years.

We also provide under the Navy head for the procurement of 4,028 airplanes. The total of additional aircraft, Army and Navy, provided for is 18,422.

In a large program of this kind, of course, one of the great problems is the question of the mobilization of industry in order to secure the orderly and expeditious delivery of the vast quantity and varied nature of the matériel involved. To facilitate the program the President appointed an Advisory Commission on National Defense. In the hearings we have set out the name of each member of that Commission and his duties. They are all experts, called from various fields of civil life. It is an entirely civil commission, headed by Mr. William S. Knudsen, of the General Motors Corporation, and Mr. Edward R. Stettinius, of the United States Steel Corporation. I particularly direct the attention of the Members to the round-table discussion found in the hearings beginning at page 232. The committee brought before it in one session the Secretary of War, Mr. Stimson, the Chief of Staff, General Marshall; the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Knox; the Chief of Naval Operations, Admiral Stark; and Mr. William S. Knudsen and Mr. Edward R. Stettinius, of the Advisory Commission on Defense; the purpose being to find out whether or not in making these vast appropriations and laying out, as Congress has laid out this comprehensive hemisphere-defense program, if we were just paying out money and passing laws and getting nowhere, or whether or not it was all on order or we were really getting results in the accomplishment of three major objectives, namely, the early preparation of land, sea, and air forces in which we might feel secure if a need for their employment should arise. We received, without exception, the most emphatic, the most optimistic statements from these gentlemen. I felt, and I believe every member of the committee felt, that we do have a well-rounded, coordinated defense program, that it is in the hands of experts, that we may reasonably expect, and that we may, indeed, promise to the American people that not only is Congress passing these bills but that these acts are being taken in hand by those charged with their enforcement and operation, and that we are going to get results, that the critical hour ahead for the world and for America, if and when it comes, will find us in a position to take care of ourselves.

I do not know of any controversy in the bill. That does not mean that we did not go into it carefully. We did, but I say this for the Appropriations Committee as a whole and for each subcommittee dealing with this defense program: The fact that we are in a great emergency calling for mobilization of our resources and of our manpower for defense needs in no way lessens or minimizes the importance of watching and seeing to those fundamental principles of accounting and budget balancing, about which Congress has been and should be very much concerned. It is going to be the purpose of the Appropriations Committee and of each subcommittee, to follow every one of these appropriations just as carefully as we can humanly do so and see to the application of the purchase money as we would say in the law, or see to it that these funds are expended in the manner in which Congress means them to be spent, and that the American taxpayer gets a dollar's worth of defense for every dollar we appropriate. We believe that can be done and that it will be done.

It is necessary in this emergency to act quickly, to act expeditiously, and the fact that a bill of this size will pass in 1 day's consideration by the Congress does not mean that we are any less interested in fiscal affairs or are going to be any less zealous in days to come to see to it that useless expenditures are cut off and that there shall be an orderly accounting in all fiscal affairs. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to myself. This bill provides for a very considerable amount of money, more than any other bill that has come before the Congress in the 18 years that I have been permitted to serve here. It calls for items for the national defense. In the bill that was brought to the House about the first of June and that became a law some time along about the 20th or 22d of that month we provided for the necessary matériel, guns, munitions, airplanes, and that sort of thing, to provide for an army along with what we had, of 1,200,000 men. This bill covers the matériel, the munitions, and the airplanes required for an army of 800,000 more, or 2,000,000 in all. I shall give some of the largest figures in the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There has been some talk that in some of these bills there will be an appropriation which would enable the United States Housing Authority to continue its operations, not only building housing for the employees at manufacturing establishments engaged in producing war matériel, but also in the building of camps and cantonments. Is there anything in this bill which authorizes that, which I have not been able to locate?

Mr. TABER. There is nothing of that kind here and every single item in here for construction of any housing that there might be would be under the Quartermaster of the Army or the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy.

I think the gentleman's query is well directed and the only reason anyone could have for turning over the construction of any housing to the United States Housing Commission would be that they would be the most incompetent outfit that might be picked in the United States to take charge of that operation. No bill would come in here with my approval from the Appropriations Committee that carried a dollar for them.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In response to the gentleman's question to the gentleman from New York, let me state that in a bill reported to the House a few days ago, section 2 made available solely for national defense, the facilities of the National Housing Commission for naval construction; but after inquiry I can state to the House that that will not be presented, but we will present a proposition for the Bureau of Yards and Docks to build whatever houses are necessary for the Navy. We are completely divorcing the Navy from the United States Housing Authority and not permitting the United States Housing Authority to get its nose under the tent on the national-defense program. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. We were told by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] that we were going to have a two-ocean Navy. Will it be necessary now, if we build a two-ocean Navy, to spend the money that was appropriated for the additional locks on the Panama Canal and the great expenditures that were to be made there?

Mr. TABER. I would not want to answer that question. I would rather the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS] who has given long study to that subject and who is much more familiar with it than I am, would discuss that, because I understand that the additional lock proposition is some way off anyway and all that there is there for the moment is planning, in the nature of a third lock, and that is all there can be for a very considerable number of months. While the Army bill did carry a considerable item, not a big item in dollars——

Mr. RICH. It was $250,000,000, was it not?

Mr. TABER. Perhaps as a contract authorization, but it would not be used in a long time. It was a contract authorization almost entirely, and the only immediate work in connection with that operation, as I understand it, is planning and laying out. There is a lot of work at the Canal in connection with the expansion of our air fields and facilities for our naval vessels, and all that sort of thing, and for our defense operations. But I do not recall any substantial amount for the construction of that item in cash.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I heard with a great deal of satisfaction the very terse statement made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, with reference to the determination to keep the United States Housing Commission from any activity in connection with the Navy construction. I do not recall the gentleman having answered what will be the policy with reference to the Army. I notice there is a big item for Army posts and storage. Will that include any of the things that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] was asking about?

Mr. TABER. There is nothing in the Army proposition, as I recall it—there is nothing in the Army proposition in this bill for construction of housing activities. Mr. Pugh informs me that every dollar of the $70,000,000 is storage facilities, and it is all to be built under the direction of the Quartermaster General of the Army; not a dollar of it under anyone else.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to ask two questions, one referring to page 1 of the committee print report—do I understand that this bill actually appropriates $2,237,000,000 and authorizes contractual obligations for $4,970,000,000?

Mr. TABER. No. It appropriates $2,237,000,000 and provides contract authorization for $2,733,000,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That gives the total of $4,970,000,000; is that correct?

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask one other question? The best the gentleman can determine, what will that bring our Army and Navy defense program up to, in the way of appropriations since January 1 last, in round figures?

Mr. TABER. About seven billion.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is since January 1, 1940?

Mr. TABER. Yes. Of course, a considerable amount of that was deficiency items that we carried in January and February in the first two deficiency bills that we passed. Probably $500,000,000 of that total would have been spent before July 1.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask one other question?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As far as the gentleman knows, are we likely to have an additional appropriation bill pertaining to defense during the balance of the session?

Mr. TABER. Of course, I do not know how long the session is going to last; but I do know this, that if we call out the National Guard we will have to have money to take care of the temporary housing for it. We are going to have to have money to take care of moving it. We are going to have to have the money to take care of feeding it and paying it. That will run close to $400,000,000 a year. If we call out troops, beyond those that are already provided for, it would depend on how many we called out. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is strictly maintenance cost as applied to the National Guard?

Mr. TABER. That would be for their pay, the ammunition that they would use in practice, for their temporary housing, their transportation, and all that sort of thing—routine expenses for such a number of troops as 225,000 or 230,000.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I remember the President's message that came to us a couple of weeks ago with reference to this appropriation bill, it asked for $4,800,000,000. Am I wrong in my recollection?

Mr. TABER. As I remember it, the figure shown on the first page of the report, $4,973,000,000, is the right figure for the President's estimate. That was not all cash, however; part of that was made up of contract authorizations.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I may be wrong about that, but I was under the impression it was $4,800,000,000. I was going to ask the gentleman what was the occasion for the increase, but I may be wrong in my premise.

Mr. TABER. I now recall there was an item added as a supplemental Budget estimate covering somewhere around $122,000,000. The gentleman is correct about that. I had forgotten about that supplemental estimate that came up. While it is dated the 27th of this month, I cannot tell the gentleman the date it came here.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Approximately and roughly what is included in the additional item the gentleman mentioned, this $122,000,000?

Mr. TABER. An additional $25,000,000 for the maintenance of the Bureau of Ships in the Navy. That means mostly improvements upon ships already in commission, and additional repairs that result from having more of them active all the time than we would get if we were in a normal situation, and $45,000,000 for the Bureau of Aeronautics.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Another question, if the gentleman will permit: I see in the papers rather well-authenticated statements to the effect that our appropriations for national defense, when we shall have passed this bill, will approximate thirteen and one-half billion. Is that correct?

Mr. TABER. I am afraid that information is a little misleading. The figures at the end of the recess, about the 22d of June, were just under $6,000,000,000, including contract authorizations. This is the first item since then, and this will make the total run just under $11,000,000,000, including contract authorizations, with the items that have gone before; and that includes not only funds for the fiscal year 1941, the current fiscal year, but about five to six hundred millions of money I referred to a moment ago that was appropriated that had been used prior to the 1st of July; and it also includes a lot of contract authorizations for which we will be appropriating money as late as the fiscal year 1943 in some instances.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That may be the basis of this figure, $13,500,000,000.

Mr. TABER. My figure of $11,000,000,000 takes into consideration all of the contract authorizations for the Army and the Navy passed at this particular session, as well as all appropriations; and I think it is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Just while I am asking these questions, how much are the other appropriations outside of those earmarked for national defense? Approximately what do they amount to for this session?

Mr. TABER. The appropriations to the 1st of July, as I remember—I am giving an offhand figure—I have the exact figures in the office but not in my head—but as I remember it they run about $13,000,000,000. I may be a little off there. Of that the cash appropriations were approximately $4,500,000,000 for the Army. That would leave a little over $9,000,000,000 for something else. I will put the correct figures in the RECORD so that accurate information may be available for those who want it.

I submit the following table, which does not include reappropriations, contract authorizations, and many other items:

Regular annual appropriations, 76th Cong., 3d sess.

Agriculture and farm credit		$918,603,918.00

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Giving a complete break-down of the appropriations up to date?

Mr. TABER. I will do that.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. A few minutes ago the question was raised about the United States Housing Authority building housing at naval establishments, and the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee said, as I understood him, that the Housing Authority would have nothing to do with the building of housing at naval establishments. It is my understanding that under a provision which was included in one of the defense bills passed recently the United States Housing Authority is to build housing for the low-paid groups of naval employees at a number of the establishments; for instance, I understand that at the new base at Corpus Christi, Tex., and probably at Pensacola, Fla., and at Portsmouth, Va., and one other place low-cost housing is to be built for naval employees in the low-paid groups.

Mr. TABER. It would, of course, be high-cost housing if they tried to build it.

Mr. TERRY. I do not know whether that is true or not. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. TERRY. I am asking for information as to whether or not my understanding is correct.

Mr. TABER. I do not know. They may be doing it; but I do not know.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Arkansas, in what is known as the Speed-up Act, authority was given by joint arrangement between the Army and the Navy and the Housing Authority to have additional defense housing built; but, as a matter of fact, no money has been made available and no money is going to be made available for the Housing Authority to build houses for workers in the navy yards.

Mr. TERRY. I may say to the gentleman from Georgia that it is my understanding that they are using United States Housing Authority money to do this work.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. TERRY. They are taking it away from various municipalities where housing projects are already under way.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The United States Housing Authority is out of money; it has no money. That is the reason they sought to put in the naval bill a $250,000,000 bond authorization, so they could get money to do what the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. TABER. I hope they are out of money, and I hope they will stay out of money.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. In connection with the inquiries made by the gentleman from Ohio, the gentleman from New York has stated that he would include in his remarks a table of the various amounts that have already been appropriated or authorized.

Would it be possible to include in that table a further reference to contracts that have been let under those appropriations, so that we may have a complete picture of exactly where we stand financially and in preparation?

Mr. TABER. Well, it would be quite a job to prepare that. I may say to the gentleman insofar as the appropriations that have been made for the Army and the Navy are concerned, it is my understanding that of those appropriations which were for additional ships, ammunition, ordnance, and things of that kind, exclusive of the ordinary food supply, clothing, and all that sort of thing, at the time we were holding our hearings approximately 50 percent of the money that we had provided had been obligated, but as to these other developments I have not any information as to what percentage has been obligated. I do not think a very large percentage of anything beyond the Army and Navy has been obligated.

Mr. TREADWAY. So we have on hand very large sums?

Mr. TABER. Oh, yes.

Mr. Chairman, for a few moments I want to go ahead and say a word or two with reference to these items. The big item including contract authorizations involved here is the ordnance, which for the Army amounts to a billion and a half and the airplanes which amount to almost that. Then there are $325,000,000 for the providing of facilities with which to make ordnance materials. It is the program that all of these outfits shall be operated by private industry. They will belong to the Government because private industry cannot construct them on account of the depreciation rules and that sort of thing and because of lack of funds in a great many cases. Every item that is provided for anything of that kind is particularly set out and is under the control of Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius, so that I do not believe we are going to get into the question of competition with private industry in any way.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. With reference to these buildings the Government is going to give, for instance, powder plants; will they be leased to private industry?

Mr. TABER. They will be, with the exception of small units for increasing a Navy powder plant that is already in operation. That is the program.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I was interested to read that industry will do most of this work, but suppose labor trouble comes up, who settles that? Does Mr. Stettinius have anything to do with that?

Mr. TABER. I shall have considerable to say on that question before I sit down. I do not know whether I want to get into that at this moment or not.

Mr. GIFFORD. Somebody ought to have considerable to say about that.

Mr. TABER. I will say it now.

Mr. GIFFORD. Your report is not very voluminous here.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, England and France are where they are today not so much because they did not have funds available to build what they needed for national defense but because a policy of socialization and coddling has been followed over there. So far as I am personally concerned, I want to see the man who works get a good fair day's pay; but I do not believe that the wage-hour bill, the Walsh-Healey bill, or the National Labor Relations Act have added a single dollar to the average workingman's pay envelope. In fact, I believe that the practices that have resulted following the passage of those bills have thrown a lot of them out of work and have reduced the average man's pay envelope.

Since this program began for the building up of the Army and Navy I know that I have been obliged to work much longer than 10 hours a day. I know that those in executive positions, those who are carrying out great responsibilities, have had to do the same thing. The putting on of overtime, the settling of labor disputes, and that sort of thing has got to be approached from the standpoint of the interests of the United States. Everyone has got to put in the background those things that are selfish.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we have to work if we are going to get out of this situation. Let me say to you that I am informed that as the Germans marched into Paris the Government workers in the Government offices were enjoying a 2-hour luncheon period. That is just a sample of the reason why Germany succeeded, because her people were tired of being on the losing side and were ready to go to work and Germany therefore got the jump on England and France. We in this country must not be afraid to meet our responsibilities and to see that our people do their part and do it as patriotic Americans.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. Did the gentleman get the same propaganda that came to my desk this morning from John L. Lewis?

Mr. TABER. I do not know. I have not got that far in my mail yet. I am not that near up to date.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. May I ask the gentleman if in the hearings his committee got any information as to just what is being done; in the first place have the purchasing authorities which are going to spend this money agreed on a type of a rifle for the United States Army and are they having it made?

Mr. TABER. I understand they have, and that they are having them made to the very peak capacity of the available plants and of those they can work in.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Have they agreed upon the type of tank they want to use, and are they having them made?

Mr. TABER. Contracts have been let for a very large number of tanks within the last 3 weeks. I asked them if they were firm contracts that required immediate starting and the following through of those contracts until they were completed, and I was told that they were. I will say to the gentleman with reference to the tank situation that not all of the possible contracts have been let. The Army has not ceased efforts to develop something better. The gentleman and I would not want them to do that. But on regular service tanks they are going ahead as fast as the situation would warrant.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Have they agreed upon and are they having built planes such as the Germans used in their campaign in France, or similar planes?

Mr. TABER. I suppose the gentleman refers to planes for dropping parachute troops?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Not necessarily planes for dropping parachute troops; I mean the diving type.

Mr. TABER. The Germans did nothing but copy the American dive bomber, with which our Navy started 10 years ago.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Are we having them made?

Mr. TABER. We are having them made, and we have made them. Every one of our aircraft carriers is equipped to the full limit of its complement with dive bombers of the most modern type.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 8 additional minutes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The reason I have asked the gentleman these questions—and I appreciate his answers—is that I know if anybody would try to dig out that information it would be the gentleman from New York. I believe the American people want to know just what is being done; not just what is being promised to be done.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I notice on page 10 of the report there is an item of slightly over $150,000,000 for clothing and equipage. During the last several years I have been interested in the amount of Army supplies of what seemed to be very good clothing and one thing and another, accumulated during the World War, which were apparently being disposed of and then being retailed by dealers in second-hand clothing. What has been done about that? Just because a uniform is not of the most recent design does not mean that it is not still good for men's use.

Mr. TABER. I cannot, because I have not been in a position to do so, discuss the manner in which they have disposed of what was left from the World War. I am advised that it is practically gone. We were advised that a very large quantity of it had been used by the C. C. C. Whether any of it has been sold to junkmen that should not have been sold, I am not in a position to discuss because I do not know. I have not had an opportunity to go into it. However, I am satisfied there is very little of that material around now. I am satisfied that we need to get the things that are provided here at the present time. Whether they have been too free in condemning articles as surplus and selling them, I do not know; I could not say. I am advised by those who have been on the military subcommittee recently that they do not believe those in charge have been overzealous in getting rid of the stock.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I understand there were several million uniforms left over at the end of the World War, and with proper safeguarding and care they might have been kept, it seems to me.

Mr. TABER. There were large quantities around for a long time. I understand that those are practically gone.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. As I understand, $4,000,000,000 is being provided in this measure?

Mr. TABER. Four billion nine hundred and seventy million dollars.

Mr. GIFFORD. There is a very brief report on the bill. We hear a great deal from the public that they want expeditious action. There are going to be many bottlenecks. Yesterday it was aluminum, and you got your $65,000,000. You have your 8-percent limitation on capital so that they cannot make any money. You will have your excess-profits tax. We read about these four or five men who have been appointed. Mr. Hillman has charge of one bottleneck, which will be a bottleneck, and a most important one, of course. Will this Congress dare hint that they are willing and have the courage to mention even taking away one of the hindrances that are bound to arise, and prevent us from getting into a bottleneck from which we cannot be extricated, which is what the gentleman said and everybody knows has happened in every other nation?

Mr. TABER. I may say to the gentleman that as far as I am concerned, I am ready and have been ready to vote to remove any bottleneck; I do not care what it is—Sidney Hillman or anyone else. I did not vote for the National Labor Relations Act. I was the one who demanded a roll call upon its passage. I did not vote for the wage-hour bill. I did not vote for the Walsh-Healey bill. I would not vote for any of them if they were here today, and I would vote to repeal every one of them right now.

In this bill we are attempting to remove some bottlenecks, and I hope the Members of the House will go along with us in that attempt. We are trying as best we know how, without any partisanship, as far as I am concerned, to provide what funds are asked in a fair way for national defense.

I will be perfectly frank with you. I believe the amount of money that is carried here is more than we will be able to use successfully, but I do not want to be one who has refused to provide what is needed when somebody else starts some trouble against us. When we consider the figure of $4,970,000,000, we ought to consider that this means contract authorizations for the delivery of planes and ordnance, and these two items make up two-thirds of what this bill carries. Some of these authorizations run for as long as 3 years from today. We do not want to figure that the passage of this bill means that the $4,970,000,000 is for the rest of the year 1941. It is not. It is spread out over a very considerable period, and it would not run so much if we were on a basis of full preparedness for what we have in mind might happen.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DWORSHAK. On page 6 of the bill appears an item for expediting production providing for a direct appropriation of $162,500,000, with a similar amount of contractual authority, and I observe that section 3709 of the Revised Statutes is waived. Does that mean there is absolutely no precaution provided for the prevention of profiteering?

Mr. TABER. No; it does not. The 8-percent provision of the law limiting gross profits applies to that language. The whole set-up is an emergency set-up, and while it will be possible for the people who have charge of letting these contracts to let them without competitive bids by negotiated contracts, there is no waiving in this particular spot of the question of the amount of profits that might be derived. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it is an interesting historical fact that this is the largest bill ever reported out of the Appropriations Committee in peacetime, and it is especially noteworthy and interesting that it comes before the House with a unanimous committee report, and it probably will pass the House without a roll call.

In view of the thorough explanation of this bill by the gentleman from Virginia, Judge WOODRUM, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the very able ranking members on the two sides of the aisle, any statement by me may seem repetitious, but there are certain provisions of the bill and some phases of the defense program to which I should like to invite special attention.

In the first place, I would like to point out what this bill, which I am supporting and defending, means in terms of national sacrifice. I agree that whatever the cost of adequate national defense is, it must be paid, but I think somebody should call attention to the bills that are being incurred, so that the American people may be put fully on notice that the time is coming when we must tighten our belts and make real sacrifices for the common good, sacrifices that we never have known in our lifetime and that we never expected to have to make. Money does not grow on trees and every dollar of debt that is being incurred to place our country in a safe and secure defense position must come ultimately from the sweat and toil and sacrifice of the taxpayers of our country.

The immediate problem is to get our defenses in order and no one appears to be giving any thought, or, at least, any adequate thought, to how the bills are to be paid. And yet this is a phase of the approach to national defense which must have attention if our country is to remain financially sound and vigorous to meet all of the strains of the fateful years that are immediately ahead. It would be well, I think, for our revenue-raising authorities to give immediate and careful attention to drastic measures to keep our country's financial position sound and equal to all eventualities. Heavy taxation is certain and, as much as we would all regret to see a capital levy, I am not certain that it can ultimately be avoided. The point I wish to stress is that, while we must go ahead as rapidly as possible building our defenses, we should be giving more attention to the associated problem of paying the bills so as to keep America sound and solvent.

Appropriations are being made so rapidly and in such amounts that the clerks are not able to estimate accurately the present status of our national debt. It seems to have become a very obscure and far-off consideration. For a long time our statutory debt limit was $45,000,000,000. This, as we all know, was raised some months ago to $49,000,000,000. The cash appropriated in the bill now before the House, to say nothing of the contract authorizations carried by it, will shoot the national debt far above $50,000,000,000, or more than a billion dollars above the present statutory debt limit. And apparently our national-defense appropriations have only started. If compulsory military training is approved by Congress, it will immediately add another billion dollars to our defense program, according to testimony by Gen. George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff, before our subcommittee.

The supplemental defense bill now before you appropriates and authorizes contracts amounting to $4,963,151,957. Some minds may be able to grasp this amount, but to most persons it is staggering and incomprehensible. Some idea of its magnitude may be obtained, I think, from the fact that it amounts to $2,577,300 for every year since the birth of Christ. One item in this bill appropriates $303,585,000 for the production of ordnance matériel and equipment. This involves the construction of 31 plants for the production and handling of munitions, costing from $5,000,000 to $20,000,000 each. Some of these plants for the manufacture of implements of death and destruction will cost two and three times apiece what the United States paid for the Territory of Alaska, and some of these single plants will cost much more than Jefferson paid for the Louisiana Purchase, out of which were carved several great American States.

These facts are cited to show the colossal magnitude of our defense program. What the scope of that defense is to be you will find in the testimony of Secretary of Navy Knox—page 6 of the hearings—and Secretary of War Stimson—page 113 of the hearings. Both of those gentlemen, responding to questions which I asked, said that the kind of defense we are planning is hemisphere defense, to be prepared to carry out our obligations under the Monroe Doctrine. Secretary Knox said—page 6:

Since we have indicated our intention of enforcing the Monroe Doctrine, the only kind of defense which can be hoped to be successful in a major war would be hemisphere defense.

Secretary Stimson—page 113—called attention to the resolution passed by Congress some weeks ago reaffirming the Monroe Doctrine and said:

When Congress has passed a resolution like that, it is up to the Army to try to make it good.

While the obligations we are assuming are enormous and the appropriations necessary to carry out those obligations are, and necessarily will continue to be stupendous, it is to your subcommittee a great satisfaction to know that there is supervising and regulating these vast expenditures and operations such a safe, sound, and competent governing body as the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense. William S. Knudsen and Edward R. Stettinius appeared before our subcommittee not only once, but several times, and submitted themselves to the closest examination as to their plans and purposes. I think I speak the sentiments of the entire subcommittee when I say that we were greatly impressed by the zeal, the patriotism, and the magnificent competency of both gentlemen. Mr. Stettinius' field is the procuring of raw materials. Mr. Knudsen's function is the production of finished manufactured units of defense. They work together with perfect harmony and precision and we believe that if the country had been searched with a fine-toothed comb it would have been impossible to find two men better fitted to perform the mammoth tasks assigned to them than are these two masters of industry. I will confess that I felt a lot better satisfied over the future of our defense program after I had seen them and talked with them. I could not escape the conclusion that their sphere of service might well be broadened and that they might be of invaluable aid in furnishing advice in regard to financing the great defense program, as well as in procuring and manufacturing the implements of war. I felt reassured when I learned that no one of the costly military and naval construction enterprises and munitions plants will be established until the Advisory Commission has evaluated the individual proposals and passed judgment on the necessity for each plant. On page 246 of the hearings you will find this colloquy:

Mr. TABER. From your answers I would judge that you would go over them pretty carefully before you would approve them.

Mr. KNUDSEN. I think that is my duty.

Mr. TABER. You would expect to do that?

Mr. KNUDSEN. That is my duty.

Mr. LUDLOW. Along that line might I suggest that there are estimates for 31 separate new plants which have to do with the manufacture and handling of war matériel. Will you pass on each of these?

Mr. KNUDSEN. Yes; I am passing on every one of them, or at least my organization is.

All of this, I think, is very reassuring. It means, I sincerely believe, that the national-defense program is in safe, competent hands and that it will be executed in accordance with the best business principles and with a minimum of waste. On this subject of waste in national-defense appropriations the following testimony, found on page 247 of the hearings, is interesting:

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Knudsen, I know that the entire country has confidence in you and Mr. Stettinius, and I want to ask you about just one proposition.

I get many letters from people who are wondering if we are getting ahead of the game with our appropriations, and whether the appropriations are larger than the amount that can be assimilated by the producing activities. Of course, I realize that in carrying out a program of such magnitude the time element is a very essential factor. Is it possible for you to provide for and enforce adequate safeguards against waste? Incidentally, there must be a good deal of waste connected with it.

Mr. KNUDSEN. There is waste connected with everything. It is only the degree of waste that matters. In the organization where I was myself before I came here the waste is about 3 percent, and it is a constant worry. But I could not say there would not be any excessive waste.

Mr. LUDLOW. I do not think anybody would expect that; but I wondered whether the very velocity of your operations and the expedition that is necessary would lead to much waste.

Mr. KNUDSEN. That is part of our responsibility.

Mr. LUDLOW. I was wondering whether the expedition that is necessary would not make it very difficult to avoid or abolish waste.

Mr. KNUDSEN. If there is any waste, it is generally when there is delay in the deliveries. I have men who travel around to the different plants, and I have not got a man who has not worked at his trade. I would not have anybody else.

If the same percent of waste is applied to the national-defense program as exists under General Motors, Mr. Knudsen's organization, the wastage in executing a bill such as the one before us, carrying appropriations and authorized appropriations of $4,963,151,957, would be about $150,000,000. I would be surprised if it could be held down to that amount, considering the nature of governmental operations and the speed with which the defense program must be executed. I can only give my opinion as one observer, and that is that Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius will do their very best to see that the taxpayers of America get a dollar's worth of value out of every dollar of defense money that is appropriated.

Our subcommittee on deficiencies is taking a very broad view of the defense needs of the country and is exercising great liberalism in passing upon the necessary defense items. While in ordinary, normal, everyday functioning in regard to governmental operations we are always loath to make appropriations in excess of Budget estimates, we have not hesitated to do so in instances where, on a proper showing, we have been convinced that the Budget cut defense items too deeply. An examination of defense bills in comparison with Budget estimates will show that we have raised the Budget many millions of dollars on specific items. We have felt that in these vital instances the Budget has not had the opportunity to go into the matters or has not had before it the facts to justify the estimates that we have had. At the same time we have been careful not to relinquish our grasp on appropriations or to weaken our control over the purse strings. A notable instance of our assertion of the rights of Congress in connection with appropriations was our refusal to grant a request that would have given the War Department carte blanche authority to increase its personnel in the District of Columbia to execute the duties imposed by this supplemental national-defense bill. The testimony on this subject, beginning on page 227 and running through several pages of the hearings, is very interesting. Our subcommittee felt that it would be derelict to the public interest if it granted the War Department a blank check to build up its personnel, and in order to protect the integrity of the appropriating system we declined to grant the authority asked. The sentiment in the subcommittee, very properly, I think, is against any more blank-check appropriations. We decided to give the Department a 10-percent increase for overhead, and if that does not prove adequate to provide necessary personnel the deficiencies subcommittee will always be ready to receive additional estimates and will listen attentively to the justifications offered in support thereof. This is the regular and proper way to legislate in order to preserve the integrity of the congressional appropriating system, and there is no sound reason for setting it aside even in times of emergency.

I shall not detain the House by referring to details of the bill, which are explained in the splendid committee report, and which have been and will be discussed in extenso in an illuminating way by others. If my observations have any point and applicability in this debate, it will be mainly to assure the House and the country that the execution of the preparedness program is in competent hands and is going ahead satisfactorily and that there is every reason to believe that in due time the vast appropriations we are making will materialize in units of production. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. KELLY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, like other members of the committee in charge of this bill, I rise in its support.

The bill carries with it, if we include both appropriations and contract authorizations, the sum of about $4,900,000,000. Added to the appropriations and the contract authorizations already made available for the fiscal year 1941, this brings the total for the year to approximately $10,000,000,000. This sum of $10,000,000,000 may be broken down into appropriations amounting to about $6,400,000,000, of which $2,200,000,000 is carried in this bill, and contract authorizations amounting to about $3,600,000,000, of which $2,700,000,000 is provided for in this bill.

The $6,400,000,000 of appropriations for the present fiscal year includes, of course, the sums necessary for the expenses of operation of the War Department and the Navy Department. It does not include the sums which have been carried over from the last fiscal year into the present fiscal year, beginning July 1, the exact amounts of which are not available.

Of the total of $10,000,000,000 available for the current fiscal year, the Army receives, roughly, $6,700,000,000, consisting of about $3,900,000,000 in appropriations and about $2,800,000,000 in contract authorizations. The balance of approximately $3,300,000,000 goes to the Navy in appropriations to the extent of about $2,400,000,000 and in contract authorizations to the extent of about $900,000,000.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I insert at this point a table giving a rough break-down as between the Army and the Navy and as between appropriations and contract authorizations of those sums which have been made available for the current fiscal year:

National-defense appropriations—fiscal year 1941 (approximate)

Totals:
This bill	$4,900,000,000
Previous bills	5,100,000,000
Total	10,000,000,000

	Appropriations	Contract authorizations	Total
Army:
This bill	$1,600,000,000	$2,200,000,000	$3,900,000,000
Previous bills	2,300,000,000	577,000,000	2,800,000,000
Army total	3,900,000,000	2,800,000,000	6,700,000,000
Navy:
This bill	574,000,000	483,000,000	1,057,000,000
Previous bills	1,800,000,000	313,000,000	2,100,000,000
Navy total	2,400,000,000	796,000,000	3,300,000,000
Total, Army and Navy	6,400,000,000	3,600,000,000	10,000,000,000

The policy reflected in this bill, Mr. Chairman, is a long cry from our national-defense policy of a few months ago. That policy as late as December of 1939 was reflected in a reduction in War Department requests to the extent of $564,000,000, at a still later date in a reduction in War Department requests amounting to $6,700,000, and at a still later date in a reduction in War Department requests for personnel to the extent of about 25,000 men.

All of these reductions were the result of action by the Bureau of the Budget, acting for the President of the United States, in accordance with our national-defense policy at that time.

Until May 16 our national-defense policy may be said to have been a $2,000,000,000 policy. As late as June 4 and June 5 our policy may be said to have been a $5,000,000,000 policy. It was at that time, in connection with the bill then under consideration, that both General Marshall, as Chief of Staff of the Army, and Admiral Stark, as Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, stated for the record in substance that if the appropriations then under consideration, bringing the total for the present fiscal year to about $5,000,000,000 were in fact authorized by the Congress, they would take care of the needs of the Army and Navy, and provide those things which could be obtained at the then level of industrial production, prior to the reconvening of the Congress in January 1941.

Our present policy, our $10,000,000,000 policy, presented itself for the first time about 3 weeks ago, when it appeared in the most recent national-defense message of the President, overriding the statements by the Chief of Staff and the Chief of Naval Operations to which I have just referred, and calling for additional appropriations of $4,900,000,000, or thereabouts, which are carried in this bill.

The present bill finds its justification, first, in the decision to construct a 2-ocean Navy and, second, in the decision to obtain a trained Army of 1,000,000 men with 200,000 more in reserve and equipment which it always takes time to produce for a further 800,000 men, or a total of 2,000,000 men.

Out of the $4,900,000,000 carried by this bill, the Army receives about $3,900,000,000, which may be roughly broken down into four major categories, as follows:

Army (approximate)

	Appropriations	Contract authorizations	Totals
Essential materials (1,200,000 men)	$224,500,000	$12,700,000	$237,200,000
Critical items (2,000,000 men)	669,000,000	1,002,000,000	1,671,000,000
Airplane program (14,000; 25,000 total)	606,000,000	1,072,000,000	1,678,000,000
Expediting construction (production and storage facilities)	162,500,000	162,500,000	325,000,000
Total	1,662,000,000	2,249,000,000	3,911,000,000

Of the total of $4,900,000,000 carried in the bill, the Navy receives the balance of about $1,000,000,000. This in turn may be roughly broken down into five major items, as follows:

Navy (approximate)

	Appropriations	Contract authorizations	Totals
Shipbuilding (70 percent increase in combatant ships) (combat, 200; auxiliaries, 52)	$208,000,000	$73,000,000	$281,000,000
Acquisition and conversion of auxiliaries (22)	75,000,000		75,000,000
Aviation (4,000; total, 10,000)	170,000,000	375,000,000	545,000,000
Public works	40,700,000	35,000,000	75,000,000
Miscellaneous	81,000,000		81,000,000
Total	574,000,000	483,000,000	1,057,000,000

Mr. Chairman, the expenditure called for is tremendous. It means that we are increasing our actual cash expenditure for national defense from something less than $2,000,000,000 in the last fiscal year to about $6,400,000,000 in the present fiscal year. It means that unless we produce additional revenue we may increase our deficit of over $3,500,000,000 in the last fiscal year to a deficit of $8,000,000,000 in the present fiscal year.

It emphasizes the madness of the waste and extravagance of recent years and the dangers for every American citizen which have resulted.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, I see no escape from supporting the appropriations which are before us at this time. The Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Staff, the Chief of Naval Operations, Mr. Stettinius, representing the Council for National Defense, have all testified for the record that these appropriations, in their judgment, are essential to a proper program of national defense.

Furthermore, both Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius, in the light of their wide business experience, as well as other officials of the War and Navy Departments holding responsible positions in our national-defense program, have testified for the record that, in their judgment, the unusual cash outlay called for under the combined appropriation bills for the fiscal year 1941 can and will, for the most part, be spent within that year.

Mr. Chairman, in the light of this testimony, I am supporting this bill in its entirety. I hope that the rest of the House will do likewise. I see no other course of action that can be safely pursued under the world conditions by which we are confronted at this time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I believe the gentleman said this bill will implement the Army in a sufficient manner to require 2,000,000 men. It appeals to me in this way: Suppose the gentleman and I were sitting down and making plans for financing a new factory that would call for a thousand-man personnel and we were looking ahead to the time when the factory would be ready to operate. We have no men available to operate the factory. If we are now appropriating money to build the equipment to utilize the services of 2,000,000 men, where will we be if the selective-draft bill is not enacted into law and if volunteers do not come in sufficiently to meet this mechanization as it rolls off the production line? Is not that what we are up against? In other words, we are now appropriating money to complete a plant and the personnel will not be available at the time of the completion of the plant to operate.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I will say to the gentleman that it seems to me we would be substantially in the same position that we are in today. As the gentleman states, these appropriations are intended to furnish so-called essential materials and equipment for 1,200,000 men, and over and above that to provide so-called critical items, some of which may take 2 or 2½ years to complete for an Army of 2,000,000 men. Obviously, if that equipment is to be utilized, we must, in some manner or other, raise more than the 250,000 men in the Regular Army and the 230,000 men in the National Guard that are now available. [Applause.]

Under leave to extend my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I insert at this point in the RECORD a statement made by Mr. Knudsen, under date of July 26, 1940, showing the progress made under the Council for National Defense, as reported by the Associated Press:

KNUDSEN REPORT ON PROGRESS OF NATION'S DEFENSE PROGRAM

WASHINGTON, July 26.—Here is the text of the statement by William S. Knudsen, of the National Defense Commission, on the progress of the defense program to date:

Since the Defense Commission was appointed by the President 8 weeks ago, this department has sought to lay a solid foundation upon which the resources of industry would be coordinated. At the same time, every effort has been made to expedite current contracts for defense matériel.

Progress in connection with the first objective has been substantial and, with the continuing cooperation of industry and the interested Government agencies, we can be confident of a production machine capable of attaining the definite goal specifically stated in the request now before the Congress for funds to equip completely a modern army of 2,000,000 men. This can be accomplished just as fast as the best production facilities and techniques in the world can gain momentum through favorable congressional action upon this augmented program.

Our progress toward second objective—clearance of current contracts—can be measured in dollars as follows:

Army (from June 6 through July 25)	$315,288,152.08
Navy (from June 6 through July 25)	1,412,907,677.87
Total	1,728,195,829.95

There are problems and responsibilities in mechanical production which, naturally, are not thoroughly comprehended by the general public.

BASIC PREPARATION

What may seem to some as unnecessary delay is almost always, in reality, a period of basic preparation necessary to sound achievement. For example, much has been said in the press and on the air about tanks and tank construction. I am sure, however, that few people realize that before actual production can start, months of effort must be expended upon design alone. Our tank designs are well advanced. Contracts have already been placed for the lighter type. The heavier tanks are being redesigned to take advantage of vital information gleaned from experience in the European war.

To give some idea of the engineering preparation involved in tank construction, for instance, it should be noted that approximately 2,400 individual drawings are required in the complete design of the light tanks. The 155 mm. gun carriage requires approximately 1,000 separate drawings and an additional 500 for the recoil mechanism. Even the tank guns of 75 mm. require 300 drawings and their panoramic sight, 160. This is merely to suggest the energy and time necessary before these instruments can begin to roll off a production line.

MACHINE-TOOL PROBLEM

The problem of machine tools, which is fundamental to the entire defense program, is another point where basic design must be carried on and to those unacquainted with requirements in this respect it may seem that little or nothing is being done. Tools for turning out ordnance supplies must be specially designed. The kind of work involved does not, of course, attract headlines. Very definite progress is being made, however, and no actual delay exists.

There is scarcely a defense instrument which does not depend for its production upon the machine-tool industry. This industry was the first and most important potential bottleneck which this department confronted. It was considered immediately and steps taken to work out a prompt solution.

Through the unlimited cooperation of the industry which set up its own defense committee, I am able to report that the huge planers and millers needed to work armor plate, particularly for the expanded naval program, will be available on time, according to reports to me from the industry this week. This should prevent what might have been a serious delay in naval construction.

It can also be said that the machine-tool builders are making their facilities available to the defense program on a voluntary basis as completely and effectively as though wartime priorities were in effect.

AIRPLANES AND ENGINES

Estimates have been completed on required capacities for airplanes and engines but this information must remain confidential for the present. There is every indication that the industry will be able to meet the heavy requirements placed upon it under the program calling for an annual production of 25,000 complete aircraft (engines and armor) by July 1, 1942. An analysis has been made of current and expanded rates of delivery for British account and in this connection it should be said that the British proposals for expanded procurement of aircraft in this country do not threaten interference with maximum production of our own needs inasmuch as they would be handled independent of capacity required for the maximum American program.

GREAT POWDER PLANT

Light ordnance and explosives: Contracts have been formally signed with the Du Pont Co. providing for erection and operation of Government-owned powder plant at Charlestown, Ind., with a production capacity of 200,000 pounds per day. This plant will be completed and in operation within 10 months. In 1917 the contract for construction of the first powder plant was not signed until 7 months after we had entered the war.

Negotiations for a shell-loading plant are well advanced and a contract is expected to be signed shortly.

It has been found that no serious problem exists in connection with the production of small arms and ammunition. Assurances have been received that at least 500 of the new Garand rifles will be produced daily in one arsenal by October 1 and that production at this arsenal will be doubled by early spring.

Shipbuilding: We have been working closely with the Navy Department on construction capacity in connection with the expanded program calling for a 70 percent increase in fighting ships. Detailed studies are being made rapidly in connection with the problem of expanding shipbuilding facilities.

Construction: An over-all survey has been undertaken to determine War and Navy Department requirements in the immediate future. This survey will show definitely the amount of construction contemplated by these two departments in connection with the defense program.

Food products: A preliminary survey of Army and Navy food requirements indicates that no bottlenecks exist in this field even under maximum requirements.

Trucks: No bottlenecks have been found to exist in truck production and present schedules call for delivery of 25,000 trucks to the armed services by December 31 of this year.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, an excellent article, written by Mr. Felix Morley, editor of the Washington Post, appeared in the July 13 issue of that publication. The article is entitled "Consistent Monroe," with a subheading "The doctrine works both ways." It reads as follows:

The importance of the Monroe Doctrine as a cardinal principle of American foreign policy can scarcely be exaggerated at this time. On the basis of this doctrine is being erected the whole tremendous program for hemisphere defense. All current plans for improving our relations with Latin America, and for keeping the war out of the New World have their roots in the famous message which President Monroe delivered to Congress on December 2, 1823. Without this doctrine, still fresh and vigorous in spite of its years, there would be little justification for the important Pan-American Conference scheduled to convene in Habana next week.

It seems eminently fitting therefore that the American people should refresh their memories as to the actual content and purpose of this great manifesto. If that is done, there will be much less risk of unnecessary international complications, less room for justified recriminations, and far better chance of preserving peace and democracy throughout the Western Hemisphere during the difficult days ahead.

The original Monroe Doctrine has two essential parts, which in the minds of its sponsors were absolutely inseparable. The first and most publicized part of the doctrine is that which declares that the United States would regard any attempt by European powers "to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety." This ringing assertion of policy was qualified only by the statement that "with the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power (in the New World) we have not interfered and shall not interfere."

The second part of the Monroe Doctrine is equally important but much less frequently quoted. Herein it is stated that: "In the wars of the European powers in matters relating to themselves we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do." And President Monroe, obviously desiring to emphasize this point, said further: "Our policy in regard to Europe * * * remains the same, which is not to interfere in the internal concerns of any of its powers; to consider the government de facto as the legitimate government for us * * *."

II

The complementary and inseparable character of these two parts is obvious. Indeed the only possible justification for telling other people to mind their business is an agreement, given or implied, to mind your own. And it is well to remember that this country offered no warnings to European dictatorships until American statesmanship had fully demonstrated that it had no intention of ordering the affairs of the Old World.

"Behind the Monroe Doctrine," said J. Reuben Clark in the comprehensive memorandum on the subject which he wrote in 1928, while Under Secretary of State, "is the principle of the complete political separation of Europe and the Americas." And Mr. Clark, reporting to Secretary of State Kellogg, further observed that: "The principles of the nonextension of the European political system to this hemisphere and interposition in the affairs of Latin American republics are mere corollaries of the political separation of Europe and America."

Our diplomatic record strongly supports the contention that an essential part of the Monroe Doctrine is its categorical statement that: "In the wars of the European powers in matters relating to themselves we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do."

Interesting evidence to this effect is found in a letter written by Thomas Jefferson to President Monroe when the latter asked the advice of the Sage of Monticello on the doctrine which was then being formulated. Writing under date of October 24, 1823, Mr. Jefferson said:

"The question presented by the letters you have sent me is the most momentous which has ever been offered to my contemplation since that of independence. That made us a Nation. This sets our compass and points the course which we are to steer through the ocean of time opening on us. And never could we embark upon it under circumstances more auspicious. Our first and fundamental maxim should be, never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe; our second, never to suffer Europe to intermeddle with cis-Atlantic affairs.

Nearly a generation later President Polk, reaffirming the Monroe Doctrine in his message to Congress of December 2, 1845, stated that: "It is well known to the American people and to all nations that this Government has never interfered with the relations subsisting between other governments. We have never made ourselves parties to their wars or their alliances. * * * We may claim on this continent a like exemption from European interference."

Half a century after this, in the famous note of July 20, 1895, which applied the Monroe Doctrine to the boundary dispute between Venezuela and Great Britain, Secretary of State Olney again emphasized the dual nature of this principle of American foreign policy. "Unquestionably," wrote Mr. Olney, "it was reasoned by the administration of President Monroe that 'complete European noninterference in American concerns would be cheaply purchased by complete American noninterference in European concerns.'"

The perfect symmetry of its logic gives the Monroe Doctrine its great effectiveness as a policy. But whenever that symmetry is injured, whenever the United States assumes that it can direct affairs in Europe while denying Europe any right to direct affairs in Latin America, the essential spirit of the doctrine is injured and its moral authority is undermined.

It was, for instance, wholly in accord with the Monroe Doctrine for the administration, when Italy entered the war, to serve notice that "the United States would not recognize any transfer, and would not acquiesce in any attempt to transfer any geographic region of the Western Hemisphere from one non-American power to another non-American power."

It was, however, completely at variance with the letter and spirit of the Monroe Doctrine for President Roosevelt to tell former Premier Reynaud, of France, a few days earlier, that "the Government of the United States will not consider as valid any attempt to infringe by force the independence and territorial integrity of France." As the wording of the Doctrine has it: "Our policy in regard to Europe is * * * to consider the government de facto as the legitimate government for us."

When the time comes for an effective international organization, with power to apply collective action against an aggressor, and when the United States is a member of that organization—then the Monroe Doctrine will automatically be merged in this larger system of security. Until that time the value of the doctrine in maintaining the security of a limited area depends upon attention to the self-denying, as well as to the self-assertive, side of the principle so well and truly laid down by President Monroe.

Those who appreciate the enormous importance of the Doctrine at this time have therefore welcomed Secretary Hull's statement of July 6, that "The Government of the United States pursues a policy of nonparticipation and of noninvolvement in the purely political affairs of Europe." And equally appropriate has been the President's pledge, in the defense message of July 10, that "We will not send our men to take part in European wars."

That pledge was necessary, under the Monroe Doctrine, to give full force to Mr. Roosevelt's equally categorical assertion that "We will repel aggression against the United States or the Western Hemisphere."

I wish to add that I do not agree with Mr. Morley's interpretation of the declarations made by President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull to which he refers in the last two paragraphs of his article. I propose to have more to say on this subject here in the House at a little later date. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back 4 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have no further speakers. The Clerk may read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval air station, Key West, Fla.: Purchase of land, $125,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would not like to have the opportunity foreclosed, before this bill is completed, to pay a little testimony to the former Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Louis Johnson, who resigned on July 20.

You will notice from an examination of the hearings that every so often there would appear this interjection "We will ask The Assistant Secretary of War."

I think that is great testimony to the capacity of this gentleman and the kind of service that he has rendered to the country during his incumbency as Assistant Secretary of War.

More particularly, I believe it was Louis Johnson, of West Virginia, who rendered great service to the country in pointing out the weakness in our defensive establishment. In implementation of that fact, let me read a few excerpts, first from a speech that he delivered in Boston on the 18th of November 1938. That is more than 18 months ago. That address was delivered to the industrial session of the Fourteenth Annual New England Conference of the New England Council. Let me quote:

Today we no longer make good our boast. Our air supremacy is threatened. From Europe come reports of pursuit ships and attack planes of greater speed and better performance. Even the marked superiority of our flying fortresses and our super flying fortresses is challenged. To meet the tremendous pace that the rest of the world is setting, we must double, yes, treble and perhaps even quadruple, our present air force with the best airplanes that can possibly be produced.

In the following month of December 1938, he made an address to the Motor and Equipment Wholesalers convention in the Stevens Hotel in Chicago.

Here is what the Assistant Secretary of War said on that occasion:

I say to you in all frankness and in all sincerity that if our Army were called to battle today, it would find itself short of artillery and tanks, of combat cars and airplanes, of machine guns and semiautomatic rifles, of antitank guns and ammunition, of gas masks and searchlights, of telescopes and of quadrants, and of many other items too numerous to mention.

In the short time available to me, I could hardly discuss in detail all of these shortages. I already have touched upon our needs in motors. Let me tell you a few things about our artillery, which is one of the most important arms in battle. In the World War it accounted for more than 70 percent of the gunshot casualties. If current reports are correct, it is causing 80 percent of the casualties in China.

In our field artillery today practically all of the gun carriages for our French 75's belong to an old model designed more than 40 years ago. With them, we can get a maximum range of but 9,000 yards. Of our improved modernized type, which can give us 13,500 yards, we have but 112 in the whole United States.

We have no 105-millimeter howitzers, a type which we find in foreign armies is taking the place of the lighter calibers. The modern 105 is capable of developing double the fire power of a 75 mounted on the carriages of 40 years ago, such as predominate in our service.

That was the Assistant Secretary of War speaking in Chicago on the 3d day of December 1938. We should salute Louis Johnson for having brought to the attention of the United States of America the fact that we were unprepared and that we should make haste in our mechanical preparation. I think it was rather distressing that he should have to leave the service. He had no choice, of course. You recall what was recounted in the papers and how they editorialized on the subject when Mr. Early of the White House staff finally announced to a breathless country that it had been the precedent for a Cabinet member to select his assistant. Oddly enough, that certainly was not the case as between Secretary of War Woodring and Louis Johnson, because Mr. Woodring did not select Mr. Johnson, and very often there was a very sharp divergence of opinion between these two gentlemen. But let it be said that Louis Johnson called to the attention of the country its needs in national defense. He joined in making the necessary industrial surveys, and he has rendered a distinct contribution to the whole cause of national defense. For years, Secretary Johnson and myself have lived at the same hotel, and I can personally testify to his daily habit of going to his office at 7 o'clock in the morning to begin his labors. I know of the evenings and Sundays which he has spent at his desk, and how industriously he addressed himself to his duties. He was not only a hard worker but a student, and it is fair to say that he brought a degree of ability to his task which was not exceeded by anyone in the Government.

I know nothing of the present Assistant Secretary of War, but I believe and I feel the country believes that they lost a distinguished public servant when Assistant Secretary of War Johnson was virtually compelled to resign. There was a note of bitterness; there was a note of distress in the resignation he sent to the President of the United States. I think I express the belief and opinion of many people in all sections of the country that a man who had served so well, who had done so much might very well have been retained in his position even though it may not have met with the immediate assent of the man who was appointed to the Cabinet. And so today Louis Johnson, who is enjoying a well-earned vacation, is deserving of the plaudits and acclaim of the people of the United States of America. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The first paragraph of section 2 (b) and subdivision (1) of such section 2 (b) of the act approved June 28, 1940 (Public, No. 671, 76th Cong.), are hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) After the date of approval of this act no contract shall be made for the construction or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or any portion thereof, under the provisions of this section or otherwise, unless the contractor agrees, for the purposes of section 3 of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; 34 U. S. C. 496), as amended—

"(1) to pay into the Treasury profit in excess of 8 percent (in lieu of the 10 percent specified in such sec. 3) of the total contract prices of such contracts within the scope of this subsection as are completed by the particular contracting party within the income taxable year."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: On page 26, after line 14, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"The first proviso in section 8–B of the act approved June 28, 1940 (Public, No. 671), is hereby repealed."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Georgia explain the amendment?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Certainly. The purpose of this amendment is to take out of the act of June 28 certain language which I am satisfied every Member of the House desires to have stricken. This amendment was decided upon in conference after consideration by the Naval Affairs Committee this morning on the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH], the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HESS], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DARDEN], other members, and myself. We decided that the language which this amendment strikes out is entirely too broad; that it should be repealed and taken out of the bill. I read the language that will be stricken out if this amendment is adopted:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is further authorized, under the general direction of the President, whenever he deems any existing manufacturing plant or facility necessary for the national defense, and whenever he is unable to arrive at an agreement with the owner of any such plant or facility for its use or operation, to take over and operate such plant or facility either by Government personnel or by contract with private firms.

That language is entirely too broad. There is no justification to permit the delegation of such authority to the Secretary of the Navy or to the President or anyone else under conditions such as the country is in today. If the country were involved in war, it might be necessary to confer such authority, but, the country being in a limited emergency, there is no rhyme, reason, or excuse for that language to be in the law; and at the direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs I am asking that it now be stricken out of the act of June 28, 1940.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I think the Committee of the Whole House should be proud of the statement of the able chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee. Everyone in the committee will agree that this should come out of the act, and I am sure the whole House will join in taking this language out of the act.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia strikes from the act of June 28, 1940, entitled "An act to expedite national defense, and for other purposes," the following language to be found in section 8 (b) of that act:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is further authorized, under the general direction of the President, whenever he deems any existing manufacturing plant or facility necessary for the national defense, and whenever he is unable to arrive at an agreement with the owner of any such plant or facility for its use or operation, to take over and operate such plant or facility either by Government personnel or by contract with private firms: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to fix compensation to the owner of such plant or facility.

That language confers war time powers on the Secretary of the Navy. It gives him the power to take over all of American industries and operate them. I am sure it was not the intention of the Congress that the Secretary of the Navy, acting under the direction of the President, should have such powers. I know it was not the intention of our Committee on Naval Affairs, which reported the bill to the House.

It will be recalled that last December the then Acting Secretary of the Navy, Charles Edison, wrote the Speaker of the House proposing a bill to vest in the President extraordinary war-time powers in time of peace. The recommended bill would have enabled the President, by proclamation, to commandeer all our factories and materials. Under its terms the President would control our entire industrial machinery in peacetime in the same manner as he serves as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. The proposal had possibilities of completely destroying democracy.

When our committee opened its hearings on January 8, last, on H. R. 7665 and H. R. 8026, the then Acting Secretary of the Navy was questioned concerning his recommendation of legislation to give the administration power to take over our industrial machinery. He said, "I just made a mistake in making it. It is as simple as that."

Our Committee on Naval Affairs never reported that bill. We agreed that no such power should be vested in the President and the Secretary of the Navy in time of peace. It was understood by the entire committee that the recommendation would go into the waste-paper basket.

But now we discover on the statute books the very thing which our Committee on Naval Affairs decided against. How did it happen?

The bill as reported by our committee did not contain such language. It did not confer such powers on the Secretary of the Navy and the President. If you examine H. R. 9822, as reported to the House and subsequently passed by the House, you will not discover any such terms as is now embodied in section 8 (b) of the act of June 28.

The Senate Committee on Naval Affairs amended that section. But if you examine the bill as reported by the Senate committee and as passed by the Senate you will not find the language in question.

Obviously, these far-reaching terms were inserted while the bill was in conference. The record shows that on June 21 the Senate asked for a conference. On June 22 the House and Senate agreed to a conference; and, Mr. Chairman, on the same day the conference committee made its report to the House and Senate. On the same day the House and Senate agreed to the conference report.

The conference committee report was not printed. When the House agreed to the report it relied on the explanation made by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. But nowhere in his explanation of the report will be found any mention of this very important provision inserted in the bill. I am confident he did not realize the potentialities of this new matter in the report. Somehow, by some means, in the haste of the conference committee to bring the bill back to the House and the Senate, the Navy Department advisers had the words put in the bill.

When my Committee on Naval Affairs met today I insisted upon an executive session so that I might bring this matter to the attention of the committee for the first time. That any such language was embodied in the bill as finally enacted was news to the committee. Our committee would never accept any such provision.

As a result of that executive session it was informally agreed that I should introduce a bill to repeal this particular provision of law, and it was informally understood that the committee would support the bill. I accordingly introduced the proper bill shortly after we met this noon.

It was also informally understood among committee members that the gentleman from Georgia or I would today offer the pending amendment to this bill which makes an appropriation to the Navy. Our chairman wishes to keep faith with his committee. If the House adopts this amendment, it will not be necessary for the committee to consider my bill, assuming, of course, the Senate will also agree to the amendment. If, however, this amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia should fail of enactment, either in this body or in the Senate, I will immediately proceed to obtain action on my bill.

Our people desire a strong national defense, Mr. Chairman. We intend to defend this democracy. But there will be no democracy here to defend if we permit such broad powers to rest in the hands of the President and the Secretary of the Navy. This country is not at war. It is at peace. The time has not arrived when we must give the President and the Secretary of the Navy complete control of our industrial machinery. We can establish an adequate defense without creating industrial dictators.

It behooves us to proceed carefully. This is an illustration of the kind of thing that can happen when we allow ourselves to be carried away by a hysteria and do not take the time to consider bills carefully.

I urge the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia. It is an important amendment. It is as important, even more so, than any other provision of this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I was not present to take the time allotted me before the bill was read for amendment. This bill involves a vast amount of expenditure and it does not seem proper that we pass it with so little discussion. I realize there is a unanimous opinion so far as the appropriation is concerned, but I think the country expects more than that of us. They will not criticize us because we are unwilling to vote money. No matter where it may come from, we are willing to vote it. The people probably want us to do that. They will be willing to pay additional taxes. After 2 weeks' visitation among my people I find everybody is willing that we appropriate money for preparedness. They are in a jittery condition, however. They all say they are willing to pay more taxes for defense, but I found a disturbing lack of enthusiasm in other vital matters. Perhaps I can better express it in another way. We are all willing to donate a little of our money to pay the nurse to watch with the patient but we do not care to do any of the watching ourselves. We will contribute but hesitate to serve.

They have been asking our people to enlist in the Army and Navy. There was a very strong editorial in the paper of the supposedly most patriotic town in the United States, as a matter of fact the largest town in my district. They have an armory there. Formerly a National Guard unit trained there, and the people were proud of it. Exhorters from the Army have recently been urging enlistment. Army planes have been flying over the town dropping leaflets urging enlistment, but not a single favorable response. The editorial of the local paper said, "There will not be any." In this morning's mail from that town and from many other towns comes an avalanche of letters against conscription. What are we going to do about it? There is a state of mind which is willing for us to spend billions, and willing somehow to pay for it, but not to sacrifice by personal service as enlisted men. This Congress does not dare write any suspension of New Deal legislation because the people have been told it will not be necessary. They have been told that they are not to sacrifice one iota of the social gains already made. You will confiscate capital, you will limit profits, you will take away plants but you will not demand of the people themselves as a whole any extraordinary effort or any sacrifices to break bottlenecks when necessary. All this is perfectly evident and costly delays will be suffered. That has been the great cause of the collapse of democratic nations and we should profit by such experiences.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] evidently conducted an examination far beyond what any committee of the House has done. You will remember last week that he put into the RECORD the mechanized material we have and the amount on order. We have practically nothing. It is indeed frightening. The people will learn this. Yet we will do nothing to cut the red tape and clear the way for action. I tried to start an argument 2 weeks ago by putting in the RECORD a story on red tape, and I was to take the time today—at least a half-hour—to speak on that subject. Our people will not accept explanations of delay from the Army, Navy, the Treasury, or the politicians if they do not get results and get them quickly. If the War and Navy Departments cannot decide on the kind of a gun to be used or the kind of airplane they want, it will be tragic. If they must waste a great deal of time before they decide just what to do, heaven help us. It is stated that 3 long months have already passed and practically nothing along vital lines has been done. It is easy to place contracts for textiles and woolen goods and a lot of other housekeeping material. We have already signed contracts for more than a billion dollars' worth of that sort, but they seem not to have made up their minds what they want in the way of guns and tanks, and yet in a few minutes we will appropriate more than $4,000,000,000, nearly $5,000,000,000, for items stated only in generalities. It will be claimed Congressmen have done their part. But we have not done our part. We have not even discussed many phases of our duties. We have not told the people what should be told. We need more than one Mr. MILLER, of Connecticut. We need others to fully inform our people, else we will not get them in a frame of mind necessary for personal service.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. We all recall that we went through that same experience along about 1916 and 1917, during which time the officials of the Army and Navy could not agree, and muddled things along until all of the supplies which our men used were furnished by the Allies.

Mr. GIFFORD. Heaven help us if the same situation prevails today.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I think it should be noted that when we are about to appropriate close to $5,000,000,000 for war purposes we have not even a hundred Members present in the House.

Mr. GIFFORD. I remarked that a few minutes ago. Because this has the unanimous report of the committee, there are not many here. I do not want to stand in the way of it, and I will vote for the measure, but I want the country to understand that I am not satisfied that by voting for this bill I have done my part. We represent our people, and we must assist the Army and Navy in the severing of a vast amount of so-called red tape that they can proceed to contract with private firms in a way that will insure prompt and sure delivery.

We must tell the President of the United States that he cannot reassure people that all social gains shall be continued if they hamstring the defense program. We will have to depend on more than one Sidney Hillman. It is recited that after these others perform it is Sidney Hillman who will clear the decks of any production trouble. Congress must not depart and leave it to Hillman to settle all complications, all the bottle necks that will be created by the vast amount of legislation now on the books, which is certain to bring great complications. Do not send me home to say that I left it to Sidney Hillman, and that I left no power of suspension to give opportunity for the businessman to proceed if he finds he cannot do so because of these legislative handicaps. The Congress does not dare at the moment to provide necessary suspensions. We will take his profits, we will force him to pay high taxes, but we must provide for the proper allocation of amortizing new plants erected to assist the Government and later made useless.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Has the gentleman read the hearings on this bill and the statements of Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius as to what is being done with respect to acquiring these necessary armament materials?

Mr. GIFFORD. I am satisfied with their report. I have not read it fully, but I have read plenty of comments, and I have full confidence in those particular men. I begin to have some confidence in the President that he will give them proper authority. I doubted that in the first instance. I was not criticizing them, and the gentleman knows I was not.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. From the standpoint of accomplishing something upon which you really can put your finger, I call attention of the gentleman to airplanes. In the last 12 or 18 months we have stepped up our plane production from about 1,000 a year to eight or nine hundred a month, and the output is daily increasing.

Mr. GIFFORD. Is England going to have them?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. England is getting some of them, yes; but not in any way that is detrimental to our interest.

Mr. GIFFORD. I trust not.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Does not the gentleman think that is an accomplishment?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman now comment on the other end of it, the very important end, the Hillman end? Has the gentleman confidence that it will be taken care of?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I expressed myself on the floor of the House when it was originally suggested that Mr. Hillman was to be put in charge of the youth-training program, and I disapproved, but it is a matter of record that Mr. Hillman is one of the labor leaders of the United States and this defense program has to deal with labor. An industrialist, if he wants to get production, has to deal with a group of people. The employees are the people to deal with, and he must deal with them and he must influence them. I am not so sure——

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not think the gentleman is so sure either.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman that Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius feel that they have a very valuable assistant in Mr. Hillman.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman knows what I am driving at, that we are appropriating this $4,000,000,000 cheerfully and willingly, knowing it ought to be done. A huge amount of money will be spent how, but when? You know Mr. Stettinius can do nothing until the Army and the Navy decide what they want.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is true.

Mr. GIFFORD. Up to a certain point they can do that hurriedly, as I mentioned in connection with housekeeping materials. Have they decided on the type of gun to build, does the gentleman know?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They are buying the Garand rifles and other types of weapons, large and small, just as fast as they can be manufactured. The matter of weapons, I may say to the gentleman, involves the question of changes. You cannot lay out a pattern today and say that is the best.

Mr. GIFFORD. They are better than broomsticks, are they not?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think so and the Army thinks so.

Mr. GIFFORD. Now, they want to train a great army of men and draft them with nothing but broomsticks on their shoulders.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not just understand from the gentleman what he thinks we should do that we are not doing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. I do want the gentleman to know what I think we ought to do. Have I not made myself clear that at this particular moment, in voting almost $5,000,000,000, we ought to inform ourselves and inform our people how it will be spent, and that we have removed all the barriers so that we can get the quick results which the country is demanding? We are dodging that issue completely. You have had your hearings and Mr. Stettinius may have assured you that up to date everything is going along all right, but the statement of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER], which is in the RECORD and which the people will learn about, is altogether disheartening. It takes more than voting money to accomplish early preparation for defense.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I read the report made by the gentlemen referred to, Mr. Stettinius, Mr. Knudsen, and Mr. Dunn, I believe it was, on the other bill, but I am not satisfied at all with what the gentlemen had to say.

Mr. GIFFORD. Of course the gentleman is not satisfied.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We know, as well as we know anything, that the Treasury Department is standing in the way just as much as the Army and the Navy officials are standing in the way. All three of them are in the way. Eventually this material will undoubtedly have to be produced by private plants owned by private stockholders, not by plants owned by the Government and operated by Government officials. However, the Treasury Department has not agreed, and has not said to industry what industry can expect from an excess-profits standpoint and from an amortization standpoint. Today the newspapers carry the story of the disagreement between the Treasury Department and the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Ford may say he can manufacture 50,000 planes a month, or whatever the amount he stated. He may say it, but he may back down for some reason such as the one he gave before, that he would not sell planes to England. Then they offer it to the other large automobile manufacturers and they say, "We will take the contract," but very shortly they say they cannot. A lot of others are going to say they cannot. They cannot build a new plant until the amortization plan through the Treasury is presented to them. Many such problems may need legislative action.

Who would move—who will move? Nobody will move, and yet we are supposed to move, and what are you going to tell your people about it? Are you not going to tell the Treasury that they must move and how to move?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on another point?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is not only a question of building new plants; in many cases it will take four or five times the working capital of the company to invest in new machine tools alone, and, of course, private industry is not going to take up its working capital in that way without some assurance.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; and that assurance will be slow in coming. Soon we will be asked for $500,000,000 to assist South America, although we hear Mr. Jones saying he has not much idea how he is going to use it. He states that no plans have been made, but in this war business, with everybody worried, with the draft idea before them, you Congressmen, as well as myself, will have to know these plans and the probable results. No; these boys are not willing to enlist, and we do not want to draft them. We must know what we are talking about, and we cannot know here in an hour and a half of discussion on a four and a half billion dollar measure. Spend these vast sums of money if you will, but let us know why and for what purpose we are spending it.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Getting back to the gentleman's question about aircraft production, I read today that Mr. Knudsen testified that by the end of August our production would be 895 completed combat and transport planes, of which our Army and Navy will get less than 400, England will get 236, and 85 go to other governments, and 180 of them go to the Army.

Mr. GIFFORD. Have they 5 tons of aluminum in each one of them?

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. No; they have not.

Mr. GIFFORD. No; and you will get that in 2 years from now. Everything is 2 years. The people are not talking about 2 years. The people are thinking about things that they are to get now.

Mr. BENDER and Mr. MARCANTONIO rose.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. I did not want to ask for any more time, but I will now ask for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. I want to ask two questions: First, in the New York Herald Tribune of July 19, G. Howard Ferguson, former Premier of Ontario and former Canadian High Commissioner at London, said this in a dispatch which that newspaper carried:

> The United States will be in war before Christmas.

I do not know what all of these appropriations have to do with the belief on the part of the British executives that we are going into the war. What assurances do they have on which to base that opinion?

Mr. GIFFORD. They know perfectly well we have created disturbances enough in the last month. We have passed legislation and we will be asked to enact legislation to the end that our boys may have to go to South America to fulfill those obligations. Does it fool anybody when the President wants to call out the National Guard, but only in the Western Hemisphere? We must defend ourselves quickly. We must have such defense that no nation will want to attack us. We do not expect they will, but the people demand preparedness, and our South American commitments are highly productive of real trouble.

I do not oppose this bill and I congratulate the gentleman from Virginia. He has reported the bill promptly, and I am in accord with him, but many other difficult problems face us in the proper spending of the money.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. It has been reported in the press that 3,000 airplanes a month are expected by England from the United States.

Mr. GIFFORD. I hope they get them.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Well, I do not, for you cannot keep out of war when you become a military reservoir for one side of the belligerents against the other. It has also been reported that the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, agreed to the statement that about 3,000 airplanes a month would go to England. How is this pro-war policy compatible with the alleged need for 50,000 airplanes for America?

Mr. GIFFORD. Does not the gentleman understand that English capital probably paid for the plant expansion and that they should properly go to England if England furnishes the money for such purposes? The gentleman ought not to complain about that.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. My point is that it is not compatible with our alleged need for airplanes, as such a policy is conducive to our involvement in this war.

Mr. GIFFORD. What astounds me is that some of you men who argued here on the repeal of the embargo, and said, "If you repeal we will be in great danger," although we repealed the embargo I heard one of those speakers yesterday ridicule the idea that we are in any danger of being involved. I cannot understand some men's minds. One moment, if we do this or that we are in extreme danger, and after we do it they argue that we are in no danger. Well, read the speech of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER]. Let us ponder the answer from the Army and the Navy. I trust they have made their decisions and are ready to go ahead; that they know what kind of tanks and what kind of rifles should be made. I have heard much about the Johnson rifle that can be made at a much less cost. Of course I do not know anything about it. But my people want to know about it, and they want to have, immediately, that or some other rifle, instead of a broomstick.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BENDER. To make this point. We are spending billions of dollars for defense, and we are all for it. We are all sorry that the President of the United States had not seen fit to ask for appropriations long before now for proper defenses, but the point I especially emphasize is the article that appeared in the newspapers, in the American press last week, to the effect that in Great Britain or in England, out of every dollar of the earnings of every citizen there 42 cents goes for taxes. While we are voting billions of dollars for defense, what are we doing about acquainting the American people with the cost?

Mr. GIFFORD. We are doing nothing but trying to continue the New Deal. A great increase in taxes would be fatal to them in this election. They continue only by giving largesses. That is all we are doing, and the gentleman ought to understand that. They tell you that when disarmament came on the Republicans were in power. We did disarm, and the Democrats now try to blame us for doing it, but at the time when we had the disarmament program every Democratic platform, every Democratic orator condemned the Republicans, because they did not disarm fast enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. Well, I trust I have aroused a little discussion on these vital matters.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COLE of Maryland, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10263, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made today on the bill and to insert a table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow it may be in order to consider the bill S. 3998, being the so-called Commodity Credit Corporation amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I understand that this bill comes with the unanimous report from the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is my understanding, although I am not a member of that committee.

The SPEAKER. Is any member of the committee here?

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] agreed that this bill should come up in this fashion on Monday last, but the chairman of the committee was not here.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I certainly have no objection to the bill coming up; and as a member of the committee, I made no objection to the bill being reported out of the committee, but I did reserve the right to speak against the bill, and I expect to speak against the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Then I make my request the same as I did the other day, that there be 2 hours of general debate upon the bill if it is so desired.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TABER. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what will be the program for the remainder of the week?

Mr. RAYBURN. I intend now to ask unanimous consent that following the Senate bill I have just spoken about, H. R. 10065 may be in order. There has been a rule granted, and we can save 1 hour on the rule by getting unanimous consent. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It is a bill affecting investment trusts.

Let me repeat, the industry, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Senate committee, and the House committee are in entire agreement on this amendment to the Securities and Exchange Act. There are 3 hours of general debate. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] tells me that that time will not all be taken. If we complete those two bills tomorrow, it is the intention to adjourn over until Monday.

Mr. TABER. There will be no other business but those two bills?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is true.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to fix control of the time on the Commodity Credit Corporation bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would ask unanimous consent that one-half the time be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] and one-half by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, perhaps I was not listening intently, but do I understand there will be 2 hours of general debate?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. And this carries an appropriation of $500,000,000?

Mr. RAYBURN. Frankly, I do not know what the bill provides. My understanding is that the bill is simply to implement the law as it now stands.

Mr. GIFFORD. I would like the House to understand that it is increasing the power to borrow money up to $1,900,000,000, or an increase of $500,000,000.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the gentleman that a rule has already been granted, and we are just trying to save 1 hour and heat and light. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIFFORD. I just wanted the House to understand.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the general impression that this is an authorization bill and not an appropriation bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is correct. That is the reason why I said I thought it was more of an implementing bill.

Mr. TABER. As I understand, this bill is to increase the loaning power of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS], a member of the committee, informs me that that is the fact.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that following the Senate bill about which we have just spoken, it may be in order to take up the bill H. R. 10065, and that whatever of the 3 hours' time is consumed, one-half may be controlled by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] and one-half by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made today and to include therein a recent statement made by Mr. Knudsen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the legislative program of today I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a letter from Msgr. John A. Ryan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a prize essay on peace.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made today immediately following the statement by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] and that they appear in the RECORD immediately following his statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial from the Pittsburgh Post Gazette.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Ralph D. Cole Post, No. 3, of the American Legion, Findlay, Ohio, opposing the Burke-Wadsworth compulsory military training bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include an article from the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the text of a message sent by the President today to the National Foreign Trade Convention in San Francisco on the foreign-trade situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short poem written by one of my constituents.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on the bill passed today.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT], under the previous order of the House, is recognized for 10 minutes.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, these are perilous times through which our Nation is passing and for the past 4 weeks I have remained here at my post of duty to take my share of the responsibility and work which each of us must bear, though I was facing a campaign down in Texas which had my political fate as the stake. I have not shirked nor flinched from that duty despite the worry and despair which at times filled my soul. Scurrilous and unscrupulous attacks have been made upon me; whisperings of untruths and misrepresentations have been made against my record and my personal life and I have been forced into a run-off primary. I take pride in a splendid plurality which my people gave to me while I was unable to be there and face my enemies.

It has been my privilege and pride to vote for every defense measure, for every appropriation which the President has requested of us for the strengthening of our Army and Navy in the time that I have been a Member of Congress. I am proud of that record and of the fact that the present strength of our national defense is due in some part to the efforts which I have been able to make along that line.

Today we voted on an appropriation and authorization bill which will close our efforts for the perfection of our Army and its equipment. Tomorrow, Thursday August 1, we will vote the same kind of a measure for the perfection of our Navy.

I feel that with the passage of these two bills a large part of the work will have been done. Much remains which can be done and many other measures can be acted upon, but, Mr. Speaker, I am asking the indulgence of the House for my absence for the next three weeks that I may go home and answer those unwarranted, scurrilous, unscrupulous and wholly untrue charges which have been and are being made against me and my record.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman from Texas has correctly sized up the national defense situation. It is a perilous time. As chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs I want publicly to thank him for the valuable aid and assistance he has rendered the country. He has cooperated in all the national defense programs. The great State of Texas with its distinguished delegation in Congress has every reason to feel proud of a Representative like the gentleman now addressing the House, proud of his record on national defense. Let me say also that I have closely observed the gentleman from Texas since he came here three and a half years ago and he has been very punctual in his attendance on the sessions of the House. In fact, I know of no Member who spends more time on the floor of the House when business is being transacted than does the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARRETT. I thank the gentleman from Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I have been for a strong Navy and an adequate Army. I feel that though we covet neither the lands nor the possessions of any other nation that many do covet ours. The dictator nations are rampant and on the loose. Therefore I feel that we need and must have a Navy strong enough to hold all possible aggressor nations at a distance from our shores and the shores of all the Americas until we can arm and assemble an army to defend any point on this continent.

At the end of the World War we were far along the road toward being the strongest naval power in the world. Would God that we had stayed that way but in an altruistic spirit we sank battleships and let other nations burn blueprints to bring our forces down to a ratio which was set at 5–5–3. Now we find that we need another ratio. Some cry "Two ships for one." Others want to match each navy with a single ship. Personally I am content to give the President this money and let them build to match navy for navy on ocean for ocean as long as the war drums throb and the rape of nations shall continue.

Behind this Navy which we can and will build to float in pride on our bordering seas we need an Army with the best of modern equipment, mobile, fast, and highly trained and in the air overhead swarms of planes, fast and endurable, or mighty in their power to hold the mastery of the three elements—land, water, and air.

Army and Navy problems are problems for the technician now. The best of machinery is now war machinery. The finest product of the factory with the greatest accuracy of construction which man has achieved must go into the makings of such machines. These are things which have to be built and for which we have and will vote an ever-increasing sum of money until our defense is adequate and no nation can or will threaten us in our liberties.

These machines, tanks, trucks, artillery, and other equipment for the Army would be useless without that swarm of planes which the President envisioned for our people and which has so aptly caught their fancy. He who rules the blue rules the land these days. I am proud of the Air Force which we have. I want to see it increased and more and more factories raising airplanes aloft. Our mechanics can do the work. Our natural resources are ample and our youth willing to rise on wings of steel for the defense of their land.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations in the War Department.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I have been very much interested in the gentleman's statement and I want to commend him on the attitude he has taken toward defense matters during the time it has been my privilege of knowing him. He has supported every measure of national defense that has been brought to the floor of the House. In fact, no Member of this House has been more enthusiastic in his support of national-defense measures than has the gentleman from Texas. Not only has he rendered invaluable service to the Subcommittee on Appropriations in the War Department but to the entire defense program of the Nation. We need more men of his courage, vision, and statesmanship in the Congress of the United States. I know the citizens of the district which he represents in Congress are justly proud of him and the unselfish service which he has rendered his constituents, the great State of Texas and the Nation.

Mr. GARRETT. I thank the gentleman.

But these enemies from without are not the only ones we must arm against. Within our folds are those aliens who do not love our institutions and hate our flag. We can and will deport him to his native land. But alongside him resides that man who for a mere pittance would sell the liberties of his country and in doing it betrays even himself. For 30 pieces of silver the traitor in the twelve sold the Master of Men. For even less there are those in our midst who would do the same. These subversive, traitorous, and dirty agents of foreign powers, whoever they may be, deserve to be dealt with to the full extremity of human action. We have passed a measure fingerprinting all aliens. We have laws punishing all those who work against our country. We need further laws to curb and hold them in check and it is my hope that full and proper measure will be taken before this Congress adjourns its work.

I voted for the resolution which created the Dies committee. I had no apology then to make for that action though it was stamped with a great deal of undue and unwarranted prejudice. Called witch hunters and with a snide press full of hate against the work which they were doing those men went on their way and began turning the eyes of the Nation toward these subversive and foreign influences.

I voted for their second appropriation and for their third. I knew what they wanted to do and though it was not a popular thing in many sections to do I saw what must be done to save this country from such perils as their exposures showed "fifth columns" to be.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Texas. I come from a place as far removed almost as one could be from the State of Texas, yet as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I have had the pleasure of knowing the gentleman, working with him, and observing the keen interest he has taken in the problems that have come before us. If any district in the United States has been represented well, cautiously, conservatively, yet ably, it is the gentleman's own district, the Seventeenth District of Texas. Truly, no Member of Congress is more earnest or conscientious in his efforts to serve his constituents than he.

Mr. GARRETT. I thank the gentleman from Washington.

In 1936 in my first race for Congress I pledged my people that I would never vote for a war of aggression and that I would oppose any and all foreign entanglements. I am of the same opinion still. And it was with a real thrill that only a short time ago I heard the President of these United States pledge the same thing to the people of this country. We seek no war. We want peace. But we must in these perilous and dangerous times be so strong that we cannot and will not be attacked. I have called on the War Department and the Navy Department to cut red tape. Make these weapons of defense, these planes, and build these ships in record time. I want them to do this, the Congress wants it done, and the people cry that it must be done. A day's delay in Congress is dangerous; a day's delay in preparation of plans is dangerous; and a day's delay in manufacture can be disastrous.

I have two fine sons. I know the heart of a father and what he feels toward those sons. I have seen them grow and develop into fine young men. They are now in the age when they would have to be among the first to answer their Nation's call for its defense. They would be clamoring to go should there be national peril. They represent to me the same things which millions of other fine boys represent to their parents—their hopes, their dreams, and their ambitions; the progeny of our race depends upon them for tomorrow. Give them weapons which will not bring about another retreat through Belgium when men with obsolete rifles faced tanks and diving bombers. Give them the tanks, the bombers, and the ships, and the youth of this land will hold its shores inviolate; its traditions will be their battle cry, and its freedom will continue to flaunt its happiness and success under the folds of Old Glory through the ages to come. Gentlemen of the House, I voted for this bill and expect to vote for the naval bill tomorrow, and give these fine boys their chance. [Applause.]

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. J. Res. 583. Joint resolution making an additional appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year 1941 to provide facilities to expedite the national defense.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 4037. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Theodore R. Troendle, for the Dawson Springs Construction Co.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on the following dates present to the President, for his approval, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

On July 13, 1940:

H. R. 6056. An act for the relief of Antal or Anthony or Tony Zaicek or Zaiczek;

H. R. 6884. An act to encourage travel in the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7696. An act to amend the United States Grain Standards Act, to provide for the grading of soybeans, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8372. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Chester, Ill.;

H. R. 9877. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder Power Plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10100. An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 582. Joint resolution making an appropriation to enable the United States Maritime Commission to establish the marine and war-risk insurance fund.

On July 31, 1940:

SENATE

THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1940

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everlasting God, who art always more ready to hear than we to pray, and art wont to give more than either we desire or deserve: Pour down upon us the abundance of Thy mercy and grant to us the spirit to think and do only such things as are right, that we, who cannot do anything that is good without Thee, may, by Thee, be enabled to live according to Thy will. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Tuesday, July 30, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10263) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 4037) to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Theodore R. HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 10263) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FOREIGN ACCOUNTS IN FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. ADAMS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4174) relating to foreign accounts in Federal Reserve banks, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. ADAMS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the amendment proposed by Mr. BROWN to the bill (H. R. 10127) to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING—AMENDMENTS

Mr. GREEN submitted an amendment and Mr. ELLENDER submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (S. 4164) to protect the integrity and institutions of the United States through a system of selective compulsory military training and service, which were severally referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

ACTIVE SERVICE FOR THE NATIONAL GUARD, ETC.—AMENDMENTS

Mr. BARBOUR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 286) to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment, and have it read, to put the Senate on notice. It is an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 286) to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 3 insert the following new subdivision:

"(f) Any member of the National Guard under 21 years of age who was registered in and attended any high school, junior college, college, academy, or any other educational institution of learning during the session of 1939–40 and who did not graduate or finish the course prescribed by such school shall be exempt from the provisions of this act in order that he may pursue or finish his course in such school."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi will lie on the table and be printed.

LETTER FROM THE ACTING SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR—CHIPPEWA INDIAN LANDS—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. PITTMAN, the Committee on Foreign Relations was discharged from the further consideration of a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, dated May 25, 1940, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 2 of the act of April 13, 1938, entitled "An act to provide for a flowage easement on certain ceded Chippewa Indian lands bordering Lake of the Woods, Warroad River, and Rainy River, Minn., and for other purposes," and the letter (with enclosure) was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

MILITARY CONSCRIPTION—EDITORIAL FROM DETROIT FREE PRESS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Appendix of the RECORD a courageous and invincible editorial from the Detroit Free Press entitled "Democracy, Conscription's Victim."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the editorial is printed in the Appendix of the RECORD it will not have the publicity it should have. I ask unanimous consent that it be read.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I certainly have no objection to that being done.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I was otherwise engaged. I inquire what is the article?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I merely asked that an editorial from the Detroit Free Press be printed in the Appendix. The Senator from Arizona has asked that it be read. I have no objection to having that done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona that the editorial be read?

There being no objection, the editorial was read by the Chief Clerk, as follows:

[From the Detroit Free Press of July 31, 1940]

DEMOCRACY, CONSCRIPTION'S VICTIM?

The congressional hearings on the proposed conscription bill should be deliberate enough to determine three things:

How much is the demand for a total military and civilian dictatorship over the manpower of the Nation due to a realistic attitude?

How much is it due to plain hysteria?

How much of it is due to politics?

These questions should be fully answered now so that the people may have complete understanding.

A peacetime totalitarianism is a far graver violation of tradition than any proposal for a third term.

The latter is a simple issue. The people understand it and have a right to accept or reject it as they please.

But compulsory service for all men between the ages of 18 to 64, with broad authority for the President to call on anybody as he chooses for any kind of duty, military or otherwise, is another matter. It is not easily understood.

The American people are being asked to give away their liberties with no assurance that they will ever get them back.

They are being lead to believe that war is imminent. It is characteristic of Americans to respond instinctively to any call to patriotic duty.

It is not at all surprising that one poll shows 67 percent of the people are in favor of some form of conscription. They responded in the same manner when President Wilson issued his draft call.

But are they not now voting in the same spirit in the belief that we either are already at war or are about to be plunged into one?

Is it not possible that they have been whipped into such a fever of emotionalism that they believe this is the one way to save America?

If that is the case, they have been misled.

The best of our military experts do not believe that any such massing of manpower—42,000,000 men and boys—is necessary.

At the outside figure they are interested only in an army of 750,000 soldiers. More, they would not know what to do with the 2,000,000 men Mr. Roosevelt talks about.

What of the other 40,000,000? Out of the clouds of oratory and tub thumping the idea seems to loom that they would be regimented into various industries and civic duties—regimented as was the total manpower of Germany.

As to this phase of the problem the career men in the Army have nothing to say. That is all outside their tasks. They might get 2,000,000 men, but any politically minded administration would have complete control over the other 40,000,000.

"But," the war-minded at Washington in both parties argue, "this is necessary if we are to meet the Hitler invasion when it comes."

"When it comes!" That is the spur. Yet military experts have no idea that it is coming next week or next year or the year after, if ever. The career men cannot talk. However, the Free Press here offers quotations from three world-famous writers on military matters who are not given to hysterics, who are not running for office, and who strive hard to see things as they are.

First, there is Col. Frederick Palmer, recognized as one of the greatest living authorities on war. He was the official press representative for the A. E. F. in France and was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal for his work. For years, though an American, he was the military expert for the London Times.

Is he excited? Not a bit! He says:

"Whence and in what strength will any attack upon us come? * * * Will our impatience for speed in our vast preparations defeat the very object for which we are striving?"

Japan? He points out that Japan has its hands full right now with China and will have for some years to come without taking us on. "This," he says, "dismisses any immediate danger on the Pacific coast."

But there is the Atlantic—and Hitler? Palmer calls attention to the simple fact that neutral military observers now agree that Germany had no "wonder army that wrought a military miracle." Germany really had no opposition, with France collapsing before a real fight started.

"Consequently there is no reason why we should be scared or overimpressed by German might as touched by some kind of hellish totalitarian magic."

Palmer even questions that Hitler can possibly defeat England across those 22 miles of turbulent waters. But supposing he does? What then?

"Hitherto Hitler's sea tactics have been negative and destructive. Now he must have surface sea command himself. His position is reversed. He must protect his convoys across the Atlantic."

Palmer first predicts the failure of the British campaign and then shows how utterly impossible it would be for Hitler to bring his army across to our shores. The danger is not immediate. "Our danger is," he concludes, "that we shall get an extravagant, unbalanced preparedness whose continuance we shall neglect when we are lulled into security, with the result that one day an enemy, or group of enemies, will get the jump on us."

This is taking the long view—a consideration of the years and not the days.

The whole program for conscription could go over until after the fevers of the coming election without in any way endangering America—as long as industry maintains equipment production. Then we might think more sanely.

The President has asked that the National Guard be mobilized to meet some immediate danger, the nature of which he does not state. If the guard is called out, it will take 6 months at least to furnish it sufficient equipment to put it on a battle-worthy basis.

The Presidential campaign will be over in 3 months. So what could be done with 2,000,000 raw civilians in that time?

This rush program does not make sense.

Second. There is Hanson W. Baldwin, military expert for the New York Times. How could Germany land a sufficient number of troops on this continent to require such a vast standing army to overcome them? He says:

"The maximum initial force that could be transported, even if control of the sea were wrested from us, would not be much larger than 50,000 men. The transportation of such a force would require 375,000 tons of shipping—perhaps 40 ships—about the largest force that could conveniently be convoyed in a single operation.

"To supply such a force might require from 650,000 tons of shipping to 2,000,000 tons monthly; in other words, perhaps half the tonnage of the German merchant marine would have to be devoted solely to the job of supplying 50,000 soldiers. If this force were to be doubled, the shipping tonnage necessary would be doubled; to supply an army of 1,000,000 men in this hemisphere would require at the very least 13,000,000 tons of shipping.

"Economically and commercially the problem seems impossible; not even Britain or a combination of Britain and Germany has sufficient shipping to divert such an enormous amount of it from their ordinary and vital trade routes to military purposes."

The third of this triumvirate of famed military authorities is Maj. George Fielding Eliot, war expert for the New York Herald-Tribune and Life Magazine, and author of the widely read book on American preparedness, the Ramparts We Watch.

"Nothing could be worse," he writes, "than to give our own people and the peoples of the rest of the world the idea that we are going to have, or are even on the point of creating, a vast citizen army of millions. We cannot do this for a long time.

"We ought not to try to build up such an army on any half-baked basis. If we have learned anything from the present war, it is the need of ample training. * * * Let us all know exactly what we are doing—let us all know, not just the White House coterie and the general staff.

"Let us not forget that we are primarily a sea power. * * * There may be other ways of improving the national morale besides spending more than is necessary on an army which, if it passes the size needful for hemisphere missions, may well become an instrument useful only for overseas adventures—perhaps for a ghastly holocaust in Europe.

"We should be quite clear on one point: That we do not propose to furnish the manpower for any invasion of the European continent. It will be much better not to create any instrument of war which can be useful for that purpose.

"It all gets back to the lack of any coordinated, well-weighed plan for our defense. * * * We should do our thinking now while we have the time. And we should appoint able and experienced experts to do the job of translating thought into concrete and complete plans upon which to base our expenditures and our labors."

By common public acceptance these three men know what they are talking about. They are nonemotional and nonpolitical students of military preparedness and the arts of warfare.

The free press does not question the sincerity of President Roosevelt in his drive for preparedness, but it is forced at times to question his judgment because, in the very ardor of his cause, he lets his enthusiasm and his emotions run away with him—as is well evidenced by that "stab in the back" speech at Charlottesville and his proposal to "quarantine aggressor nations" in his Chicago address in 1937.

The issue involves too vital a change in our whole concept of American life not to speak out bluntly about it.

The American people should not be lulled to sleep by grandiose talk. Our dangers from abroad are not one-half so real as the danger within our own borders. It may well be that the very life of democracy itself is at stake here.

Why, then, all the mad, precipitate rush?

If the Members of the United States Congress do not weigh carefully all the factors involved, if they do not permit the people full and open hearings so that they will have complete understanding, then they will be derelict in their duty and recreant to a sacred trust.

Let the people know that once they have bent their necks to the yoke of regimentation there is no turning back. The bands will play martial music, the flags will fly—and we, a once free people, may march to the goosestep under a totalitarian government.

SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have received from the noted military writer, Maj. George Fielding Eliot, a letter which states opinions on the question of procuring men for our Army which I think would be of great interest to the Senate. I should like to point out that the writer of the letter favors fixing the size of the Army at a figure of 750,000, which is what I have advocated for some time, and Major Eliot makes the following statement about the bill which I introduced some weeks ago:

> Your bill, as compared with the Burke-Wadsworth bill, has the virtue of simplicity and clarity of objective—the creation of a regular army of definite size.

Mr. President, yesterday I was courteously accorded a hearing by the Military Affairs Committee on the bill which I have introduced. I may remind the Senate that this bill not only set a definite limit to the total number of men in our Army, but also provided, in effect, that only about 400,000 would have to be raised by selective draft. I gathered at the meeting yesterday that the bill now being considered by the committee is undergoing many fundamental changes, and so I will not make any comment on the provisions of the bill which may eventually be reported. I should, however, like to compare my bill with the proposals which have received so much attention in the press by showing what my bill is and what it is not.

My bill is a simple defense bill. Its aim is to bring our Army up to its top strength, always in harmony with our existing program for procuring weapons.

It is not a bill capable of causing far-reaching internal, social, and economic changes, having little, if any, relation to national defense.

It is a bill aimed at peace and defense. It seeks to make the United States sufficiently strong so that no foreign power will dare to molest us.

It is a peacetime bill. It is not a bill which assumes that we are already at war, and which accordingly seeks to create a nation in arms.

It is a 1940 bill, to provide a highly selected personnel for a relatively small standing army, in the hope and belief that this will avert the need for mass conscription later on.

It is not a 1917 bill which seeks to place every able-bodied man in the military service in some capacity or other.

If I may make a comparison, it is a modern, well-tooled, automatic rifle, and not a blunderbuss.

My bill would involve directly about 1 out of every 3,250 American citizens—not enough to dislocate anything, threaten democracy, or bring any danger of totalitarianism. Its burden would fall chiefly on those relatively well to do.

There is no point in registering 42,000,000 men if all we want is 400,000 soldiers. There is waste and offense to our democratic system of things if we draft every able-bodied man instead of drafting able-bodied men only in such numbers as can be effectively utilized for the national defense, having due regard to the amount of equipment available.

A bill which takes the short emergency view of this matter should limit itself to providing a sufficient number of men for our existing needs, and should not seek to plan the entire future.

A bill which seeks to lay down a long-term policy on military training should not take all men from 18 to 64, but should give every young man a certain period of training when he reaches a certain age. The proposals I have seen described do not fall into either classification.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter from Major Eliot be printed in the RECORD in full.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, July 29, 1940.

The Honorable HENRY CABOT LODGE, Jr.,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LODGE: I have read with great attention the bill which you sent me, and have just finished reading the committee draft of the Burke-Wadsworth bill as it has finally received the approval of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate.

Your bill, as compared with the Burke-Wadsworth bill, has the virtue of simplicity, and clarity of objective—the creation of a Regular Army of definite size. The Burke-Wadsworth bill has the following defects, as I see it:

(1) It leaves to the President the power to call out any number of men he sees fit, in time of peace. In my opinion the size of the Regular Army in time of peace ought to be definitely limited by statute. I do not believe that limitation by appropriation is sufficient.

(2) It places upon the War Department the responsibility for ill-defined home-defense forces. Such forces as are required for local defense purposes as a part of the defense plans of the country (antiaircraft, harbor defense, etc.) ought to be part of the Regular Army or National Guard. Temporary forces for the maintenance of internal order, guarding bridges, factories, etc., should be State forces such as the proposed New York Guard.

(3) The period of training is too short (also in your bill). Two years would be ideal; 18 months is in my opinion the minimum: Six months for induction and individual training; a year for unit and field training. But I realize that as a practical matter this may not be possible, so I think voluntary extension of service ought to be made attractive.

(4) It is provided that men who enlist in the Regular Army or National Guard for 2 additional years are relieved from the Reserve service provided by the bill. This flies directly in the face of the need for having a fully trained Reserve. It ought to be provided that a 2-year enlistment in the Regular Army should cut the Reserve service from 10 to 5 years; and that National Guard service should merely be reckoned as reducing the Reserve service by that much.

(5) The bill provides specifically that conscripted men shall have an opportunity to qualify for promotion. This ought not to be enacted into law. In general, specialists and noncommissioned officers should be men who have volunteered for longer periods of service. There should be no barrier to specially qualified conscripts qualifying for promotion, but a rigid legal requirement that they shall have such an opportunity will only make trouble.

(6) The National Guard provision in the preamble of the bill is just a concession to the political strength of the guard, and if strictly construed might require the guard to be called into service before the Regular Army Reserve. This is ridiculous.

(7) Finally, it seems to me this bill takes in too much territory. It will produce illusions in the mind of the average American. It is likely to permit the creation of a huge army for which we have no need, and which we could not use except in overseas adventures. We ought to concentrate, we must concentrate on building up an army equipped, trained, and officered to fight on modern battlefields. This army cannot be very large, must be limited by the need for providing for the Navy and other essentials of national defense. The Burke-Wadsworth bill does not draw a fine enough sight, which is language you will well understand. We need a fine weapon of precision, not a shotgun, for this job.

We have, I think, to keep in mind that we have two lines of thought which must constantly be coordinated: First, to prepare as quickly as possible for an imminent emergency; second, to lay the foundations for a long-range military policy.

Under either your bill or the Burke bill we can call up as many men for immediate training as the Regular Army and the National Guard can possibly absorb. But the Burke bill seems to fasten upon us a tremendous burden, both from the financial and administrative point of view, which to my mind is not only wholly unnecessary, but may become a positive danger by absorbing too great a proportion of the funds and resources available for the national defense—which after all are not unlimited.

May I suggest certain features which I believe ought to be incorporated in whatever compulsory service bill is enacted.

(1) Fix the size of the Regular Army in time of peace at a maximum of 750,000, exclusive of reservists called back for temporary periods of training.

(2) Provide for voluntary enlistments (both direct and from conscripts who have completed their compulsory training).

(3) Provide for registration of all men from 20 to 45 years of age, as a sort of survey of manpower resources, and for morale purposes.

(4) Provide for calling up annually of a class of conscripts, carefully selected, sufficient to maintain the Regular Army at 750,000 men; the period of service to be 1 year (if no more can be had).

(5) Provide for such men to serve thereafter 10 years in the Reserve; except that they may extend their period of service in the Regular Army for 1 year, and knock off 2 years' Reserve service; or for 2 years, and knock off 5 years' Reserve service. Minimum period of Reserve service to be 5 years for all classes of enlistment, including volunteers.

(6) National Guard service to count as Reserve service.

(7) The annual class to be called from men between 20 and 25 years of age. This will permit of deferred classifications to men with temporary impediments to service of a personal or physical nature.

(8) Reservists during the first 5 years of Reserve service should be liable to be called up for three refresher periods of 30 days each, and one such period subsequent to their fifth year.

(9) There should be provision for a specialist reserve of men for such duties as clerks, truck drivers, hospital attendants, cooks, and other jobs for which their civilian occupation qualifies them; enlistment in this reserve should be either voluntary or made by selection from the annual class of recruits after selecting the men for combat training. As far as possible such duties should be performed entirely by men of this reserve on active duty for periods of 1 year or more. The training period for this reserve should be originally 90 days.

(10) Pay to be equalized with the Navy, subject to the following provision: That all conscripts during their first year of service shall receive the minimum pay of $21 per month, except that such as qualify for appointment as noncommissioned officers and specialists shall receive a bonus of $3 per month. Volunteers to receive $21 per month during their recruit training, $36 on qualification as fully trained privates, $54 when promoted to private first class. Conscripts extending their enlistment to be immediately placed on the same pay status as volunteers. Pay of noncommissioned officers: Corporal, $60; sergeant, $72; staff sergeant, $84; master sergeant or first sergeant on acting appointment, $99, on permanent appointment, $126. This abolishes the grade of technical sergeant and brings Army pay to the same basis as Navy pay. It will make the service attractive and bring us a good grade of volunteer enlistments.

The objective should be to maintain a Regular Army of about 50-percent volunteer long-service soldiers and 50-percent conscripts, with a reserve of fully trained men capable of immediately bringing the Army to full war strength, plus 10 percent immediate replacement cadres with each unit and a depot establishment capable of providing a reservoir of replacements and of training additional recruits in time of emergency.

This is the long-range objective. But we have not yet taken care of the immediate emergency. For this purpose let the bill provide that for a period of 2 years from its passage the number of men called into active service under its provisions shall not be restricted as to number, provided that no more than 1,000,000 such conscripts shall be on active service at any one time exclusive of those who may have volunteered to extend their period of enlistment, notwithstanding the provision that the Regular Army shall not ordinarily exceed a total of 750,000, including conscripts. During this 2-year period of initial preparation and organization it should be lawful to induct conscripted men into any units of the National Guard which might be in the Federal service for the time being. This will enable the guard to be used for training men, as well as the Regular Army, and will get the guard off to a good start, insofar as Congress shall during that time authorize the ordering of the guard into Federal service. Recruits trained in the guard units should, of course, pass into the Reserve in just the same manner as those trained in Regular Army units.

What will be the practical results of such a bill?

First of all, the War Department will be able to carry out its present plans for calling in 400,000 men on October 1, 1940; 400,000 more on April 1, 1940; and 600,000 on October 1, 1941. On October 1, 1941, the status of the Army will be as follows:

Regular Army:
Volunteers	375,000
Conscripts of the class of Oct. 1, 1940, who have extended their enlistments (estimated at 10 percent)	40,000
Conscripts of the class of Apr. 1, 1941	335,000
Total	750,000
National Guard (presuming it to be all in Federal service):
Volunteers	238,000
Conscripts of class of Apr. 1, 1941 (remainder)	65,000
Total	303,000
Army Reserve (remainder of class of Oct. 1, 1940)	320,000

At this point the War Department plans to bring in an additional 600,000 men, most of whom (on the above basis) would have to be trained by the National Guard. On October 1, 1942, the National Guard could be returned to State control, and there would thereafter be an ample Regular Army Reserve. This, presuming no emergency arises in the interim. But it would be much better if 2 years' service could be had—at least at first.

Of course, as the number of fully trained reservists (those with 2 years service or more) grows, the size of the Regular Army actively employed can be reduced. The law ought to provide that no more than 60 percent of the Regular Army in active service shall be volunteers, thus assuring the steady annual increment for the Reserve.

Units of the Regular Army ought to be maintained on the following basis at all times:

(1) Reinforced strength (war strength plus 10-percent immediate replacements): The garrisons of Hawaii, Alaska, and such other outlying points as cannot be immediately reinforced.

(2) War strength: All other garrisons outside the continental United States; all combat formations of the Air Corps; armored troops; Cavalry.

(3) Peace strength: All other formations.

There should be a clear division of function between the Regular Army and the National Guard. The former should have all M-day tasks, except certain antiaircraft and harbor-defense missions in the continental United States and Puerto Rico. The National Guard should supply the bulk of the harbor-defense and antiaircraft troops in the United States (other than antiaircraft troops with mobile formations), certain corps and Army units, and should form a second-line force to take the place of the Regular Army when the latter might have to be sent out of the country or require eventual reinforcement.

What would be the effect of this bill on the National Guard? It would benefit greatly. To begin with, presuming it is now ordered out (as seems essential) for training purposes, it would start with 2 years' active service. Its recruits would then come in large part from men who had already had a year's training (although direct enlistment should be permitted). It would never lack for such number of raw recruits as it might require, as many men would enlist to avoid being conscripted into the Regular Army. Its officers would, of course, have to be a lot better than they are now. Original appointments as second lieutenants in combat units might be restricted to graduates of approved R. O. T. C. units, graduates of the Military Academy, enlisted men with 1 year Regular Army plus 2 years' guard service, or enlisted men with 5 years' guard service. The professional requirements for appointment should be kept very high, and Federal confirmation after appointment might be conditional on a 3 months' course at the school of the arm.

It seems to me that such a bill would make use of all existing facilities for training—of course, Reserve officers would be ordered out to serve with the Regular Army and National Guard in such numbers as might be desirable—and would provide us as quickly as possible with a battle-worthy army. It would also lay the foundations for a military system of limited objective, adequate to our needs, and able at any time to put the whole Regular Army into the field without delay, and to back it up with a National Guard of much better quality than we now possess.

I should look forward to a time when the Regular Army on active service would consist of 450,000 men, of whom 250,000 would be long-service volunteers and 200,000 conscripts under training. There would be an Army Reserve of approximately 1,200,000, of whom about 25 percent would be fully trained, the rest with 1 year's training. On mobilization, 200,000 fully trained and 100,000 partially trained reservists would be required to bring the Regular Army to war strength; 75,000 partially trained reservists would form the 10 percent immediate replacement groups; 100,000 fully trained and 150,000 partially trained reservists would form the depots for the Regular Army; there would still be available 575,000 partially trained reservists as replacements, or to bring the National Guard to war strength. With such an organization, the Nation would have a military establishment costing comparatively little, yet fully ample to discharge any duty which might be laid upon it other than one calling for a new American expeditionary force to Europe or Asia.

I hope you will forgive me for troubling you with so long a letter, but I feel very deeply that we must get under way with a workable plan and one within our means and adapted to our needs.

If you think it desirable, I should be very glad to come to Washington to talk this matter over with you at greater length. I am most anxious to do anything I can to promote the cause of true preparedness for this country, as I know that you are. Understanding the problems of the Army as well as you do, it seems to me that if any Senator can bring some sense and logic into our military plans, you are the one to do it. Please feel free to command me in any way.

With best wishes, I am

Very sincerely yours,

GEORGE F. ELIOT.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD, in connection with the discussion which has just taken place, a short editorial which appeared in the Christian Science Monitor on July 24, 1940, entitled "Democracy and the Draft," from which I read a paragraph or two:

If properly carried out, the selective draft is the most democratic way the responsibility for the common safety can be distributed. There are, of course, many kinds of sacrifice involved in national defense. Ultimately the selective policy should extend also to training for certain noncombatant and industrial services. And stringent taxation should assure that no excessive profits are made out of the arming effort but that financial contributions are made according to ability.

* * * * * * *

The important point about the selective draft is that it should be genuinely selective. It should not be a mere drawing of numbers so much as careful sorting of the Nation's manpower into classifications for service.

* * * * * * *

With these guiding policies, a compulsory selective-service law should be enacted promptly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor of July 24, 1940]

DEMOCRACY AND THE DRAFT

Action is getting under way on the Burke-Wadsworth bill for selective compulsory military training in the United States. Approval of a revised version of it by the Senate Military Affairs Committee means apparently that the subject will come to the floor of the Senate next week.

The 12 months' training period now proposed is more adequate from the military point of view than the 8 months previously contemplated. More satisfactory also, from the standpoint of the trainee, is the basic Army pay of $21 a month instead of $5 a month.

If properly carried out, the selective draft is the most democratic way the responsibility for the common safety can be distributed. There are, of course, many kinds of sacrifice involved in national defense. Ultimately the selective policy should extend also to training for certain noncombatant and industrial services. And stringent taxation should assure that no excessive profits are made out of the arming effort but that financial contributions are made according to ability.

The Burke-Wadsworth bill now would provide for registering all male citizens from 18 to 64. Originally it would have drawn men for the Army and Navy from the broad age group between 21 and 45, leaving others to home-guard or other work. Unfortunately one amendment by the committee narrows selection for the active services to those under 31 instead of up to 45.

One of the merits of the bill in its first form was the distribution of the call on a basis of fitness rather than of arbitrary age limits. Drawing from a class of more than 20,000,000 instead of 11,500,000 might be slightly more cumbersome, but it would also be more selective with reference to the man's employment, ability, and family situation. Furthermore, the broader age limit would help answer the charge that young men were being drafted to fight older men's wars.

Col. William J. Donovan, commander of the Fighting Sixty-ninth Regiment in the last war, has been reiterating the thesis that mature men rather than youths should be called to the colors first. His is expert testimony that the tasks of modern warfare call at least equally if not in greater degree for the cool judgment of maturity as compared to the robust energy of youth.

There is a further consideration. If today's youth is to be convinced that events call for preparedness rather than pacifism, this will be more effectively done by example than by precept. One further step to draw more middle-aged men into the service would be to raise the maximum voluntary enlistment age from 35 to 45. Another would be to schedule more training camps open to men in their forties.

The important point about the selective draft is that it should be genuinely selective. It should not be a mere drawing of numbers so much as careful sorting of the Nation's manpower into classifications for service. Besides suitable exemptions for conscientious objectors, men necessary to industry, and men with family responsibilities, the draft boards should undertake studious evaluation of men's usefulness and intelligent direction of human resources.

With these guiding policies, a compulsory selective service law should be enacted promptly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to express the very strong hope to the able Democratic leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], that the Senate will not proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 286 today. A number of Senators have stated to me that they desire time to study the measure and the report. Therefore, I now request that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution about the first of next week.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had already informed the Senator from Oregon that, after conferring with the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I had no intention of bringing the joint resolution up for consideration today. While it is true it was reported Tuesday, and has been printed and is available, a number of Senators have expressed the desire to have a day or two to study the measure, and, in my opinion, that is not an unreasonable request. It had been my intention to announce that we would not take up the National Guard measure until Monday, but we will take it up on Monday for consideration.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the purpose of the Senator from Kentucky to have the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar today?

Mr. BARKLEY. When we reach that order in our proceedings, it is my purpose to ask that the calendar be called for the consideration of unobjected-to bills, beginning where we left off at the last call of the calendar, order of business No. 2040.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the intention of the Senator to have a session of the Senate tomorrow and Saturday?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I intend to move that the Senate adjourn until Monday, after the call of the calendar shall have been concluded.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator.

SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I wish to submit an amendment to the selective-service bill. The amendment proposes to increase the base pay of soldiers. The entire schedule is set out in the amendment. The essence of it is that it increases the pay of soldiers from $21 a month to $30, with prorated increases in the base pay of soldiers for the entire schedule. I ask that the amendment be printed and lie on the table, and at the proper time I shall offer it to the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense and to increase and train the personnel of the armed forces of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, in connection with the amendment I have just presented, I notice in the publication, P. M., of Wednesday, July 31, this headline:

Steel waits law for arms work.

In the article it is explained that one of the biggest steel mills in the United States has not turned a wheel or done a thing toward the defense program because those in control do not have the tax law written to suit them. I read this quotation from the article:

STEEL WAITS LAW FOR ARMS WORK

(By Nathaniel S. Keith)

Among the 120 big plants operated by the United States Steel Corporation is one of the 3 mills in the United States of America that can produce heavy armor plate for battleships. The capacity of those mills falls far short of what will be needed in the next 4 or 5 years to equip the two-ocean Navy.

To meet its share of the administration's defense program, United States Steel has been planning to expand its armor-plate plant. But it also wants Congress to pass a bill permitting the cost of those facilities to be written off against profits within 4 or 5 years, thus reducing income taxes.

LAW'S DELAY

"We've delayed buying additional equipment for our armor-plate program until the bill is passed," said Irving S. Olds, new chairman of Big Steel. This corporation, he explained, had expected Congress to vote for rapid write-offs of new arms output facilities several weeks ago. He didn't know what had caused the delay; perhaps it was only that Congress always needed a long time to pass tax laws. In the meantime, United States Steel is on the side lines.

Mr. President, I saw in the paper just lately also that the limitation of 8-percent profit had been raised to 12-percent profit on some of the war contracts. Certainly in the light of such an attitude on the part of manufacturers and businessmen, I think it is fair that we should raise the soldier's pay at least to $30 a month.

If a soldier in the trenches should take the same attitude that has been taken by Mr. Olds, that is to say, that he would not advance until his pay was raised, he would be court-martialed. But no soldier is going to take such an unpatriotic attitude as that.

Again I call the attention of the Senate and the people of the United States to the fairness and the justice of the program of the soldiers who fought in the last war—that if we are going to draft men we should draft money and materials in the same manner. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.] A program of universal service that shall call upon everyone to do his proportionate part in case of war. I think the only fair, just, and democratic manner of raising an army when we really get into a war emergency is by a selective draft, and by the same token it is right and just that we should call upon the financial resources in this country and the material resources in this country, and the men who control those resources, by the same mandatory power by which we call men to the colors.

THE THIRD-TERM TRADITION

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, we have been repeatedly told, frequently by individuals who should and in some cases do know better, that there is a sacred tradition against a third term for any President of the United States.

Some of those who are most vocal in this respect have, I regret to say, apparently operated on the assumption that constant repetition will make it so.

Naturally, if the American people could be brought to believe that such tradition existed the immediate end of such partisans would be gained, regardless of historical fact.

The whole truth is that the alleged tradition against a third term for any President is a political fiction.

There is no such tradition. There never was any such tradition.

Nothing in the Constitution restricts the number of terms any President may serve.

That was not an accident. It was deliberate. The question of Presidential tenure was thoroughly debated by the founding fathers in the Constitutional Convention.

Guided by George Washington as its chairman, the Convention finally accepted Washington's own view that any restriction would be unwise if not actually dangerous.

I can see no propriety—

Washington wrote—

in precluding ourselves from the services of any man, who, in some great emergency, shall be deemed, universally, most capable of serving the public.

Alexander Hamilton, Gouverneur Morris, John Jay, Rufus King, James Otis, and other great leaders of the day agreed with Washington.

There can be no doubt whatever that George Washington withdrew after two terms because he was tired and wanted to go home.

He had accepted a second term only because of the then critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations.

With his country at peace, he felt he had earned his retirement.

At no time, either publicly or privately, did he ever assert as a political maxim that no President should serve more than two terms.

Thomas Jefferson had more definite views.

As Ambassador to France, he had seen the degeneracy of royal families and was determined to prevent every danger to American freedom from continuing too long in office.

His view in this respect was overruled by the Constitutional Convention and has since been overruled by history, for he advocated a single 6-year term for Presidents and a single limited term for Representatives and Senators, with 4- or 6-year terms for Justices of the Supreme Court.

Jefferson favored a single term for the President, but served two terms himself and in addition dictated Presidential policy for four additional terms through Madison and Monroe.

Although favoring restricted tenure, he had been in favor of Washington continuing almost indefinitely as Chief Executive, and admitted his own willingness to serve a third term if division over his successor should lead to a danger of monarchy.

While at the height of his popularity as President he might easily have secured a constitutional amendment prohibiting a third term, but he made no effort whatever to do so.

We have seen that George Washington did not consciously establish a two-term precedent.

His successor, John Adams, served only one term.

Jefferson was personally responsible for restricting not only his own terms but also the terms of his political protégés, Madison and Monroe.

It is clear that Jefferson attempted to establish a two-term tradition and succeeded in maintaining it by his own political power under the two administrations that followed his.

The question is whether the new policy died with its author or was followed by those who came after the Virginia Presidents—Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe.

Monroe's successor, John Quincy Adams, assailed "the practice which the Virginia Presidents have taken so much pains to engraft upon the Constitution," and added that "this is not a principle of the Constitution, and I am satisfied that it ought not to be."

Of the 27 Presidents after Monroe, only 4 up to President Roosevelt's time served a full 8 years.

In addition, Theodore Roosevelt and Calvin Coolidge, serving unexpired terms, fall technically within the definition of two-term Presidents.

Jackson, Grant, Cleveland, Theodore Roosevelt, Wilson, and Coolidge were the six Presidents who might have challenged the tradition.

Jackson believed in a single term of 4 to 6 years, and so told the Congress no less than six times in annual messages, yet he served two terms and rejected a third on the single ground that "the time has now come when advanced age and a broken frame warn me to retire from public life."

At no time did he give any intimation that tradition played any part in his decision.

It was almost 100 years after Washington's day before this tradition was advanced publicly against any candidate.

The victim was Grant, who took the position that the only way to prevent a third term was to amend the Constitution, and that—

It may happen in the future history of the country that to change an Executive because he has been 8 years in office will prove unfortunate, if not disastrous.

His political opponents quickly rushed an anti-third-term resolution through Congress, but Grant went into the Republican convention of 1880 without patronage or organized support and led the balloting for 36 consecutive votes before the stop-Grant minorities united on the dark horse, Garfield.

Grant was the first President who had an opportunity to reject the tradition.

He did so, and was thwarted only through a political cabal which defeated him in convention maneuvering.

The next two-term President was Grover Cleveland, who was so wearied of political attack that after 2 years of a second term he was longing for retirement.

Years later, when the 1904 elections were looming, political leaders started a boom for his nomination.

He raised no question of tradition, but rejected the suggestion with the comment that he wanted nothing so much as a retreat to give him freedom from nagging annoyance and exhausting importunities.

Theodore Roosevelt was the first President in American history to bring the issue to the people themselves.

Denied a Republican third-term nomination by political chicanery, he formed his own Bull Moose organization and soundly trounced the regular Republican nominee, but so split the Republican strength that Woodrow Wilson, with a minority vote became President.

Many who now profess conscientious objections to a third term supported Theodore Roosevelt in that fight.

Had his health not been wrecked by his fight for the League of Nations, Wilson might have been a candidate for a third term.

In any event he had no opposition in principle.

The people might more likely be cheated than served by further limitations of the President's eligibility—

He wrote—

His fighting power in their behalf would be immensely weakened.

Calvin Coolidge ended a movement to draft him, headed by many individuals now opposing a third term, by his enigmatic "I do not choose" declaration—in which there was no reference whatever to tradition.

Hence it is clear that not one of the Presidents following Jefferson who might conceivably have had a third term withdrew because of any objection in principle—yet if any tradition were to be established they were the only men who could have established it, for they alone had the opportunity to make a choice.

It cannot be argued that they were deterred by any public sentiment against a third term. Washington and Jefferson could have been reelected almost indefinitely, and Jefferson could have brought about extension of the terms of Madison and Monroe had he wished.

Jackson could have served as long as he chose.

Grant was a third-term contender solely because the people clamored for him.

Politicians urged renomination upon Cleveland because of his record.

Factionalism, not tradition, defeated Theodore Roosevelt.

Wilson would have been elected or defeated solely upon the basis of the policies he advocated and the principles he represented.

The same is true of Coolidge.

Not one two-term President from the days of Thomas Jefferson refused a third term on principle; not one expressed opposition in principle to a third term.

Although their views can be considered merely academic, most of the one-term Presidents raised no objection to a third term, and many strongly urged it.

The people themselves have never been given an opportunity to vote on the issue in a clean-cut test.

The "tradition," therefore, must be seen for what it is, an artificial, fictitious contrivance of politicians, used heretofore in our political history solely to thwart popular will by denying renomination to a popular President.

Had our political history been different—had the policy of the "Virginia Presidents" become the "tradition" of the people—the theory that something should not be done because it was not customary would still be a mischievous theory, for it would establish an extraconstitutional, invisible Government of precedent and usage foreign to the spirit of the American people.

It would substitute a system of taboos, based upon no consideration except custom and habit, for the Constitution and the laws of the land.

The founding fathers felt, and many Presidents reiterated, that the American people should be free to choose their Chief Executive without legal or other hindrance apart from the Constitution.

The American people have a right to resent attempts to tell them what they shall or shall not do in exercising this legal right.

They should resent it, for history is on their side.

I believe they will.

RESERVE AND RETIRED ARMY PERSONNEL—AMENDMENT

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask that there lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD an amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 286.

There being no objection, the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. OVERTON was ordered to be printed and lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. OVERTON to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 286) to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of Reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service, viz after section 3, to insert the following new section:

"SEC. 4. (a) The benefits of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, aproved March 8, 1918, are hereby extended to all National Guard, Reserve, and retired personnel ordered into the active military service under authority of this joint resolution, so long as such personnel are in such service and for 60 days thereafter, and, except as hereinafter provided, the provisions of such act shall be effective for such purposes.

"(b) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) The following provisions of such act of March 8, 1918, shall be inoperative: Section 100; and paragraphs (1), (2), and (5) of section 101; article 4; article 5; paragraph (2) of section 601; and section 603.

"(2) The term 'persons in military service,' when used in such act, shall be deemed to mean persons ordered into the active military service under the authority of this joint resolution.

"(3) The term 'period of military service,' when used in such act, when applicable with respect to any person, shall be deemed to mean the period beginning with the date on which such person is ordered into such active military service and ending with the date on which he is relieved from such service."

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the amendment undertakes to apply the benefits of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of March 8, 1918, to all National Guard reserves and retired personnel ordered into active military service under the authority of the joint resolution, with certain exceptions which, in my judgment, are either inapplicable or unnecessary, insofar as the joint resolution is concerned.

For the information of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that, following the printing of the amendment which I have sent to the desk, there be printed in the RECORD the provisions of the act of March 8, 1918, which, by the terms of the amendment, are to be made applicable to the joint resolution; that is, to except from the printing the provisions which, by the terms of the amendment, are excepted from the joint resolution, and to include only the provisions which are made applicable to the joint resolution under the terms of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

There being no objection, the provisions referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Public—No. 103—65th Cong.—H. R. 6361]

An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war

Be it enacted, etc.—

ARTICLE I

GENERAL PROVISIONS

* * * * * * *

(3) The term "person," as used in this act, with reference to the holder of any right alleged to exist against a person in military service or against a person secondarily liable under such right, shall include individuals, partnerships, corporations, and any other forms of business association.

(4) The term "court" as used in this act shall include any court of competent jurisdiction of the United States or of any State, whether or not a court of record.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 102. (1) That the provisions of this act shall apply to the United States, the several States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and all territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and to proceedings commenced in any court therein, and shall be enforced through the usual forms of procedure obtaining in such courts or under such regulations as may be by them prescribed.

(2) When under this act any application is required to be made to a court in which no proceeding has already been commenced with respect to the matter, such application may be made to any court.

SEC. 103. Whenever pursuant to any of the provisions of this act the enforcement of any obligation or liability, the prosecution of any suit or proceeding, the entry or enforcement of any order, writ, judgment, or decree, or the performance of any other act, may be stayed, postponed, or suspended, such stay, postponement, or suspension may, in the discretion of the court, likewise be granted to sureties, guarantors, indorsers, and others subject to the obligation or liability, the performance or enforcement of which is stayed, postponed, or suspended.

When a judgment or decree is vacated or set aside in whole or in part, as provided in this act, the same may, in the discretion of the court, likewise be set aside and vacated as to any surety, guarantor, indorser, or other person liable upon the contract or liability for the enforcement of which the judgment or decree was entered.

ARTICLE II

GENERAL RELIEF

SEC. 200. That in any action or proceeding commenced in any court if there shall be a default of an appearance by the defendant the plaintiff before entering judgment shall file in the court an affidavit setting forth facts showing that the defendant is not in military service. If unable to file such affidavit plaintiff shall in lieu thereof file an affidavit setting forth either that the defendant is in the military service or that plaintiff is not able to determine whether or not defendant is in such service. If an affidavit is not filed showing that the defendant is not in the military service, no judgment shall be entered without first securing an order of court directing such entry, and no such order shall be made if the defendant is in such service until after the court shall have appointed an attorney to represent defendant and protect his interest and the court shall on application make such appointment. Unless it appears that the defendant is not in such service the court may require as a condition before judgment is entered that the plaintiff file a bond approved by the court conditioned to indemnify the defendant, if in military service, against any loss or damage that he may suffer by reason of any judgment should the judgment be thereafter set aside in whole or in part. And the court may make such other and further order or enter such judgment as in its opinion may be necessary to protect the rights of the defendant under this act.

(2) Any person who shall make or use an affidavit required under this section knowing it to be false shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by imprisonment not to exceed 1 year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

(3) In any action or proceeding in which a person in military service is a party if such party does not personally appear therein or is not represented by an authorized attorney, the court may appoint an attorney to represent him; and in such case a like bond may be required and an order made to protect the rights of such person. But no attorney appointed under this act to protect a person in military service shall have power to waive any right of the person for whom he is appointed or bind him by his acts.

(4) If any judgment shall be rendered in any action or proceeding governed by this section against any person in military service during the period of such service or within 30 days thereafter, and it appears that such person was prejudiced by reason of his military service in making his defense thereto, such judgment may, upon application, made by such person or his legal representative, not later than 90 days after the termination of such service, be opened by the court rendering the same and such defendant or his legal representative let in to defend; provided it is made to appear that the defendant has a meritorious or legal defense to the action or some part thereof. Vacating, setting aside, or reversing any judgment because of any of the provisions of this act shall not impair any right or title acquired by any bona fide purchaser for value under such judgment.

SEC. 201. That at any stage thereof any action or proceeding commenced in any court by or against a person in military service during the period of such service or within 60 days thereafter may, in the discretion of the court in which it is pending, on its own motion, and shall, on application to it by such person or some person on his behalf, be stayed as provided in this act, unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of plaintiff to prosecute the action or the defendant to conduct his defense is not materially affected by reason of his military service.

SEC. 202. That when an action for compliance with the terms of any contract is stayed pursuant to this act no fine or penalty shall accrue by reason of failure to comply with the terms of such contract during the period of such stay, and in any case where a person fails to perform any obligation and a fine or penalty for such nonperformance is incurred a court may, on such terms as may be just, relieve against the enforcement of such fine or penalty if it shall appear that the person who would suffer by such fine or penalty was in the military service when the penalty was incurred and that by reason of such service the ability of such person to pay or perform was thereby materially impaired.

SEC. 203. That in any action or proceeding commenced in any court against a person in military service, before or during the period of such service, or within 60 days thereafter, the court may, in its discretion, on its own motion, or on application to it by such person or some person on his behalf shall, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the defendant to comply with the judgment or order entered or sought is not materially affected by reason of his military service:

(1) Stay the execution of any judgment or order entered against such person, as provided in this act, and

(2) Vacate or stay any attachment or garnishment of property, money, or debts in the hands of another, whether before or after judgment, as provided in this act.

SEC. 204. That any stay of any action, proceeding, attachment, or execution, ordered by any court under the provisions of this act may, except as otherwise provided, be ordered for the period of military service and 3 months thereafter or any part of such period, and subject to such terms as may be just, whether as to payment in installments of such amounts and at such times as the court may fix or otherwise. Where the person in military service is a codefendant with others the plaintiff may nevertheless by leave of court proceed against the others.

SEC. 205. That the period of military service shall not be included in computing any period now or hereafter to be limited by any law for the bringing of any action by or against any person in military service or by or against his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, whether such cause of action shall have accrued prior to or during the period of such service.

ARTICLE III

RENT, INSTALLMENT CONTRACTS, MORTGAGES

SEC. 300. (1) That no eviction or distress shall be made during the period of military service in respect of any premises for which the agreed rent does not exceed $50 per month, occupied chiefly for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or other dependents of a person in military service, except upon leave of court granted upon application therefor or granted in an action or proceeding affecting the right of possession.

(2) On any such application or in any such action the court may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, on application, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the tenant to pay the agreed rent is not materially affected by reason of such military service, stay the proceedings for not longer than 3 months, as provided in this act, or it may make such other order as may be just.

(3) Any person who shall knowingly take part in any eviction or distress otherwise than as provided in subsection (1) hereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punishable by imprisonment not to exceed 1 year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

(4) The Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, is hereby empowered, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, to order an allotment of the pay of a person in military service in reasonable proportion to discharge the rent of premises occupied for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or other dependents of such person.

SEC. 301. (1) That no person who has received, or whose assignor has received, under a contract for the purchase of real or personal property, or of lease or bailment with a view to purchase of such property, a deposit or installment of the purchase price from a person or from the assignor of a person who, after the date of payment of such deposit or installment, has entered military service, shall exercise any right or option under such contract to rescind or terminate the contract or resume possession of the property for nonpayment of any installment falling due during the period of such military service, except by action in a court of competent jurisdiction.

(1a) Any person who shall knowingly resume possession of property which is the subject of this section otherwise than as provided in subsection (1) hereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by imprisonment not to exceed 1 year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

(2) Upon the hearing of such action the court may order the repayment of prior installments or deposits or any part thereof, as a condition of terminating the contract and resuming possession of the property, or may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, on application to it by such person in military service or some person on his behalf, order a stay of proceedings as provided in this act unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the contract is not materially affected by reason of such service; or it may make such other disposition of the case as may be equitable to conserve the interests of all parties.

SEC. 302. (1) That the provisions of this section shall apply only to obligations originating prior to the date of approval of this act and secured by mortgage, trust deed, or other security in the nature of a mortgage upon real or personal property owned by a person in military service at the commencement of the period of the military service and still so owned by him.

(2) In any proceeding commenced in any court during the period of military service to enforce such obligation arising out of nonpayment of any sum thereunder due or out of any other breach of the terms thereof occurring prior to or during the period of such service, the court may, after hearing, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, on application to it by such person in military service or some person on his behalf, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the obligation is not materially affected by reason of his military service—

(a) Stay the proceedings as provided in this act; or

(b) Make such other disposition of the case as may be equitable to conserve the interests of all parties.

(3) No sale under a power of sale or under a judgment entered upon warrant of attorney to confess judgment contained in any such obligation shall be valid if made during the period of military service or within 3 months thereafter, unless upon an order of sale previously granted by the court and a return thereto made and approved by the court.

ARTICLE VI

ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES

SEC. 600. That where in any proceeding to enforce a civil right in any court it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that any interest, property, or contract has since the date of the approval of this act been transferred or acquired with intent to delay the just enforcement of such right by taking advantage of this act, the court shall enter such judgment or make such order as might lawfully be entered or made the provisions of this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 601. (1) That in any proceeding under this act a certificate signed by The Adjutant General of the Army as to persons in the Army or in any branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Army, signed by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department as to persons in the Navy or in any other branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Navy, and signed by the Major General Commandant, United States Marine Corps, as to persons in the Marine Corps, or in any other branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Marine Corps, or signed by an officer designated by any of them, respectively, for the purpose, shall when produced be prima facie evidence as to any of the following facts stated in such certificate:

That a person named has not been, or is, or has been in military service; the time when and the place where such person entered military service, his residence at that time, and the rank, branch, and unit of such service that he entered, the dates within which he was in military service the monthly pay received by such person at the date of issuing the certificate, the time when and place where such person died in or was discharged from such service.

It shall be the duty of the foregoing officers to furnish such certificate on application, and any such certificate when purporting to be signed by any one of such officers or by any person purporting upon the face of the certificate to have been so authorized shall be prima facie evidence of its contents and of the authority of the signer to issue the same.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 602. That any interlocutory order made by any court under the provisions of this act may, upon the court's own motion or otherwise, be revoked, modified, or extended by it upon such notice to the parties affected as it may require.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 604. That this act may be cited as the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act.

Approved, March 8, 1918.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar to which there is no objection, beginning at the end of the last call, which means beginning with Calendar No. 2040.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar to which there is no objection. The clerk will state in order the bills on the calendar, beginning with Calendar No. 2040.

NATIONAL AVIATION DAY

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 245) authorizing Government employees' participation in the celebration of National Aviation Day, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I notice that the Secretary of War recommends that the joint resolution be not enacted into law. I have no information in regard to the merits or demerits of the joint resolution. I am merely wondering whether or not the committee took into account the adverse position taken by the Secretary of War in regard to the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution was reported by the Senator's colleague the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], who seems to be absent from the Chamber. Does the Senator wish to object?

Mr. KING. I shall not object. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that the Secretary of War has reported adversely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That those in charge of Government establishments are hereby authorized to participate in such celebrations, and Government equipment, including flags, insignia, and models, may upon application by responsible parties be loaned to local communities for the purpose of such celebration, and service bands and other units of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and National Guard may likewise be permitted to appear at such celebrations if held in the cities where such service bands and other units are stationed: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the Government in carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution.

The preamble was agreed to.

CITIZENSHIP OF CERTAIN ENLISTED MEN OF THE ARMY

The bill (H. R. 9158) to amend the act entitled "An act for the protection of certain enlisted men of the Army," approved August 19, 1937, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, this bill was presented by the War Department. It passed the House on May 20. Under existing law enlisted men in the Army are required to be citizens of the United States. By reason of the fact that there were in the Army a number of men who were not citizens of the United States, but who had been in the Army for many years, some of whom were World War veterans, on August 19, 1937, Congress passed an act authorizing such persons in the Army to perfect their citizenship within 3 years. The 3-year period expires August 19, 1940. Unless the bill is enacted prior to that time it will be necessary to separate from the service between 300 and 500 men who have been in the Army for some time, and who, for various reasons, have not perfected their citizenship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment on page 2, after line 18, to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the body of the act entitled "An act for the protection of certain enlisted men of the Army", approved August 19, 1937 (50 Stat. 696), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That, notwithstanding the language contained in the second proviso under the subheading 'Pay, and so forth, of the Army' of the act of July 1, 1937 (50 Stat. 446), and similar provisos of other acts heretofore or hereafer enacted, any alien otherwise eligible for enlistment in the Regular Army, who shall have been an enlisted man therein for any period subsequent to June 30, 1937, who shall have made a valid and still effective declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, or shall have furnished prima facie evidence of his eligibility for admission to such citizenship without prior formal declaration of intention, and shall have agreed in writing to complete his naturalization without unnecessary delay, shall, up to and including June 30, 1943, be deemed eligible (1) if in the service, for continuance therein until expiration of current enlistment, for reenlistment, and for continuance in the service under such reenlistment not later than June 30, 1943; (2) if not in the service, for reenlistment and for continuance in the service under such reenlistment not later than June 30, 1943; and (3) in either case for receipt while so serving of the pay of his grade and length of prior service: Provided, That Filipinos who were serving in the Army on July 1, 1937, may be retained in the service under current enlistments and may be reenlisted without regard to their citizenship status, and may receive their proper pay and allowances under such enlistments and reenlistments.

"SEC. 2. Hereafter, service in the Regular Army honorably terminated shall be credited for purposes of legal residence under the naturalization laws of the United States, regardless of the legality or illegality of the original entry into the United States of the alien, the certificate of the honorable termination of such service or a duly authenticated copy thereof made by a naturalization examiner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service being accepted in lieu of the certificate from the Department of Labor of the alien's arrival in the United States required by the naturalization laws; and service so credited in each case shall be considered as having been performed immediately preceding the filing of the petition for naturalization."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WIDOW OF DONALD D. ELLIOTT

The bill (S. 4044) for the relief of the widow of Donald D. Elliott was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that Senate bill 4044, Calendar No. 2042, is similar to House bill 8774, Calendar No. 2046. Is there objection to the substitution of the House bill for the Senate bill and the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 8774) for the relief of the widow of Donald D. Elliott was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4044 will be indefinitely postponed.

FOREIGN ACCOUNTS IN FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

The bill (S. 4174) relating to foreign accounts in Federal Reserve banks was announced as next in order.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this bill came up some weeks ago. At that time the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] was looking after the measure. I had suggested an amendment which he then thought might be appropriate, but there was not adequate time to consider it fully, and the bill went over. I should like to have the bill go over until the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] may be here, so that I may inquire of him whether it is agreeable to submit the amendment which I had in mind.

I will say to the Senate the purport of the amendment I had in mind. The bill protects the Federal Reserve banks by providing that if they have money of foreign governments they may pay the money out safely upon the finding of the Secretary of State as to proper authority. It seems to me we ought to afford the same protection to National and State banks.

I do not wish to interfere with the passage of the bill, but I should like to have it go over until the Senator from New York may be present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On request, the bill will be temporarily passed over.

LANDS ACQUIRED BY THE UNITED STATES SUBJECT TO TITLE INFIRMITIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9736) to amend section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to authorize the Attorney General to approve the title to low-value lands and interests in lands acquired by or on behalf of the United States subject to infirmities, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I reported the bill after due consideration, but I was advised several weeks ago, before the recess, that there were some suggested amendments by the Department of Agriculture. I ask that the bill be passed, but I shall enter a motion to reconsider, so that if the Department of Agrculture has any proper amendments to present, I shall ask to have the bill taken up again and the amendments considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 355 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 733; title 34, sec. 520; title 40, sec. 255; and title 50, sec. 175) be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 355. No public money shall be expended upon any site or land purchased by the United States for the purposes of erecting thereon any armory, arsenal, fort, fortification, navy yard, customhouse, lighthouse, or other public building of any kind whatever, until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title.

"Notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other law whenever the average value of any lands or interests in land to be acquired by or on behalf of the United States under a single option or contract of sale or by exchange or donation does not exceed $10 per acre (hereinafter referred to as "low-value lands"), the title may be accepted subject to such infirmities as, in the opinion of the Attorney General may, without jeopardizing the interests of the United States, be left for removal by condemnation or other appropriate proceedings, if and when necessary: Provided, The total value of any lands or interests to be acquired under a single option or contract of sale subject to an infirmity does not exceed $3,500. No public money shall hereafter be expended for the acquisition of such low-value lands or interests in land by or on behalf of the United States for any purpose, nor in cases of donation and exchange shall grants be accepted until the written opinion of the Attorney General has been had approving the title subject, if expedient, to infirmities as herein provided. However, no money in excess of $2,500 shall be expended for the construction of buildings, works, or other improvements (except roads, trails, and fire-protection improvements) on any site, tract, or parcel of land the title to which is subject to infirmities, until the written opinion of the Attorney General in favor of the validity of the title has been had as in the case of other lands. For the purpose of this act values of lands and interests in land shall be determined in cases of purchase by the consideration paid or to be paid and in cases of donation and exchange by the acquiring authority's appraisal.

"The Attorney General is hereby authorized to approve the title to easements or rights-of-way to be acquired by or on behalf of the United States, subject to such infirmities as, in his opinion, will not jeopardize the interests of the United States.

"Nothing in this act shall be construed to limit the authority now or hereafter delegated to any officer in exercising the power of eminent domain for or on behalf of the United States, to take title to or possession of or to expend money for or upon any land or interest in land, or to expend money as security for an ultimate award in advance of final judgment in any proceedings to determine just compensation; nor shall this act be construed to preclude any acquiring agency from expending money for the erection of any preliminary and temporary structure upon any land.

"The head or other authorized officer of any department, independent establishment, or agency, shall procure any evidence of title which the Attorney General may deem necessary, and the expenses of procurement, except where otherwise authorized by law or provided by contract, may be paid out of the appropriations for the acquisition of land or out of the appropriations made for the contingencies of the acquiring department, independent establishment, or agency.

"The Attorney General may, in his discretion, base any opinion as to title required either by this act or any other law upon either or both of the following: Certificates of title of title companies or such evidence of title as he may deem satisfactory.

"The foregoing provisions of this section shall not be construed to affect in any manner any existing provisions of law which are applicable to the acquisition of lands or interests in land by the Tennessee Valley Authority. Nor shall the foregoing provisions of this section, or the provisions of any other law, be construed to require any opinion of the Attorney General in connection with the acquisition or improvement of easements and rights-of-way for military or naval purposes or for the acquisition or improvement of easements and rights-of-way by the Department of Agriculture for forest and other conservation purposes where the cost of any such easement of right-of-way acquired under a single instrument of conveyance and the cost of any improvement thereon does not exceed $2,500; and the Attorney General may, in his discretion, waive the requirement for his opinion in connection with the acquisition or improvement of easements and rights-of-way for other purposes when, in his opinion, such waiver will not jeopardize the interests of the United States.

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the obtaining of exclusive jurisdiction in the United States over lands or interests therein which have been or shall hereafter be acquired by it shall not be required; but the head or other authorized officer of any department or independent establishment or agency of the Government may, in such cases and at such times as he may deem desirable, accept or secure from the State in which any lands or interests therein under his immediate jurisdiction, custody, or control are situated, consent to or cession of such jurisdiction, exclusive or partial, not theretofore obtained, over any such lands or interests as he may deem desirable and indicate acceptance of such jurisdiction on behalf of the United States by filing a notice of such acceptance with the Governor of such State or in such other manner as may be prescribed by the laws of the State where such lands are situated. Unless and until the United States has accepted jurisdiction over lands hereafter to be acquired as aforesaid, it shall be conclusively presumed that no such jurisdiction has been accepted."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 3900 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. BILBO subsequently said: Mr. President, not knowing the calendar was to be called, I was engaged in conference on the price of cotton and therefore was absent from the Chamber. I am informed that Calendar No. 2047, House bill 9736, passed without objection. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed, and I ask to have the bill go over, because I have an amendment that has been agreed upon which it is desired to insert in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Mississippi to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senate passed House bill 9736. I indicated at the time that I understood one of the departments had an amendment which it desired to have incorporated in the bill. The amendment is being considered and put into shape by the legislative drafting service. I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and I ask now that the motion to reconsider be acted upon and that the bill be restored to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] moved that the vote by which Calendar No. 2047, House bill 9736, was passed be reconsidered. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be restored to the calendar.

ISSUANCE OF BONDS BY SITKA, ALASKA

The bill (S. 3940) to authorize the incorporated town of Sitka, Alaska, to purchase and enlarge certain public utilities and for such purpose to issue bonds in the sum of $200,000 in excess of present statutory debt limit was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the bill, the title of which has just been stated, is identical with House bill 9571, Calendar No. 2093. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill and will now be considered.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 9571) to authorize the incorporated town of Sitka, Alaska, to purchase and enlarge certain public utilities and for such purpose to issue bonds in the sum of $200,000 in excess of present statutory debt limit was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 3940 will be indefinitely postponed.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920

The bill (H. R. 10014) to amend the Transportation Act, 1920, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I observe the presence of the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I should like to have a brief explanation of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask that the bill be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the request of the Senator from Montana, the bill will be temporarily passed over.

Mr. WHEELER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert to Calendar 2053, House bill 10014, to amend the Transportation Act, 1920, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10014) to amend the Transportation Act of 1920, as amended.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me say this bill is recommended by the Treasury Department because of the fact that they found themselves in such a position during the war and after the war, that as to certain bonds and certain preferred stocks of railroads when they matured under a ruling by the Attorney General, the Treasury could not accept new bonds in place of them. This bill simply provides an amendment to correct the law as interpreted by the Attorney General so as to give the Treasury Department the right to exchange the old bonds for new bonds or to make settlement of some of the bonds with the railroad companies. They have found, for instance, that where railroads were in the hands of receivers or were about to be reorganized the reorganization was held up because under this ruling the Treasury Department could not accept new bonds in lieu of old bonds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That title II of the Transportation Act, 1920 (41 Stat. 457), as amended, is hereby further amended by adding at the end of that title the following new section:

"SEC. 213. With respect to any bonds, notes, or other securities acquired on behalf of the United States under the provisions of this act, including, without limitation of the foregoing, any securities acquired as an incident to a bankruptcy, receivership, or reorganization proceeding, or by assignment, transfer, substitution, or issuance, or by purchase, default, or other acquisition (whether at a foreclosure sale or otherwise) of collateral given for the payment of obligations to the United States, the President, or any officer, agent, or agency he may designate, is authorized to sell, exchange, or otherwise dispose of, any such bonds, notes, or other securities, or to enter into arrangements for the extension of the maturity thereof, in such manner, in such amounts, at such prices, for cash, securities or other property, or any combination thereof, and upon such terms and conditions as the President or any officer, agent, or agency so designated may deem advisable and in the public interest."

NATIONAL CEMETERY, PORTLAND, OREG.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3163) to provide for a national cemetery in the vicinity of Portland, Oreg., which is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to establish and maintain, in accordance with the provisions of law governing national cemeteries, a national cemetery in the vicinity of Portland, Oreg. The Secretary of War is authorized to acquire by donation, purchase, condemnation, or otherwise such suitable lands as are in his judgment necessary for the establishment and maintenance of such cemetery.

SEC. 2. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for the purposes of this act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I inquire of the able Senator from Oregon if this new cemetery to be located in his State has any political repercussions or implications?

Mr. McNARY. I will yield to my colleague to answer that question, if he cares to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF FACILITIES IN MARJORIE PARK, TAMPA, FLA.

The bill (S. 4106) to authorize the construction of certain facilities in Marjorie Park, Davis Island, Tampa, Fla., and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal Works Administrator be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States of America, without cost, title to a tract of land in Marjorie Park, Davis Island, Tampa, Fla., suitable for use for the site of a United States quarantine station.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $76,000 to be expended by the Federal Works Administrator for the construction and installation of such buildings, utilities, and appurtenances thereto on the tract of land herein authorized to be acquired to replace the existing United States quarantine station adjoining MacDill Field, Fla.

SEC. 3. Upon completion of the construction above authorized, the Federal Works Administrator is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the control and jurisdiction of the Secretary of War as an addition to MacDill Field, Fla., or for use for other military purposes, the land and improvements now comprising the United States quarantine station adjoining MacDill Field, Fla.

LAND IN OREGON FOR BOY SCOUTS' SUMMER CAMP

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2644) to set aside certain lands in the State of Oregon for a summer camp for Boy Scouts, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the words "to the", to insert "city of"; in line 8, after the word "City", to strike out "Lions Club as a summer camp for the Boy Scouts of Junction City, Oreg., and vicinity" and insert "for park or summer camp purposes"; in line 11, after the words "to the", to insert "city of"; and in the same line, after the word "City", to strike out "Lions Club", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to lease the lands included within the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter, section 34, and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, section 35, township 15 south, range 6 west, Willamette meridian, Oregon, to the city of Junction

City for park or summer camp purposes. Such lease shall be without cost to the city of Junction City for a term of 50 years and under such other terms and conditions, including provisions for the care, removal, and disposition of timber by the United States, as the Secretary of the Interior deems advisable to safeguard the interests of the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Oregon with regard to this measure? My attention has been called upon several occasions to the fact that the Department of the Interior is exacting where such summer camps are established or where any camps are established in the forest reserves that certain actions shall be performed and certain control shall be exerted, and that such requirements are very harmful and very oppressive to the residents of the States. I was wondering if that question had been looked into? To give a concrete illustration, in my own State at a place where a number of farmers are ready to build a small reservoir at their own expense, the Federal Government has decided that in and about the little reservoir which they desire to build there ought to be recreation camps, recreational facilities, and things of that sort. So Federal authorities are exacting of those who are willing themselves to construct that little reservoir that it shall be built in conformity with the demands of the Forest Service. Such a heavy obligation is imposed that the farmers are not able to build the reservoir. I was wondering if the committee had considered that question as to whether or not too much power was given to the Department of the Interior in establishing such recreational facilities on the public domain?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I do not recall that that particular question was discussed in the committee, but I have before me the report of the committee wherein the Director of the Bureau of the Budget advises that he has no objection to the presentation of this report. It is signed by E. K. Burlew, Acting Secretary of the Interior.

There was considerable discussion of this bill and it was finally agreed to by the committee. Since it was similar to legislation that had been enacted for the accommodation of other groups in other States, since it will provide recreational facilities without cost to the Government, and inasmuch as over half the area of the State of Oregon is Government land, it seemed to me we might well permit a small portion of it to be used by the public in the community in Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments having been agreed to, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to set aside certain land in the State of Oregon for park or summer camp purposes."

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to know whether it is planned, when the last item on the calendar has been reached, to cease the consideration of the calendar, or whether it is planned to start in at the beginning again?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is not planned to start in at the beginning. The Senator from Montana has a bill, however, on which he desires to have action when the consideration of the calendar shall have been concluded; but we will not go back and call the calendar for bills that have been heretofore called.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator.

WILSON A. KRAMER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

The bill (H. R. 6823) for the relief of Wilson A. Kramer was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL AMERICAN-SCANDINAVIAN EDUCATIONAL WEEK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2691) to designate the week of October 9 to October 16, each year, as National American-Scandinavian Week, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, in line 5, after the word "of", to strike out "our", and in line 9, after the word "authorized", to strike out "and requested", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all Americans might gain a greater inspiration from the high ideals of citizenship and the spirit of intelligent cooperation which are characteristic of American citizens of Scandinavian extraction, the week from October 9 to October 16 each year is hereby designated as National American-Scandinavian Educational Week, and the President is authorized to issue a proclamation so designating such week.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 9024) relating to the status of retired officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard of the United States, and to amend section 113 of the Criminal Code, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill, please?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who reported the bill, seems to be absent at the moment. I ask that the bill go over for the time being.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be temporarily passed over.

DEPOSIT OF COLLECTIONS FOR OVERTIME IMMIGRATION SERVICES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5403) to provide for the deposit of certain collections for overtime immigration services to the credit of the appropriation chargeable with the payment for such services, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That", to strike out "hereafter", and in the same line, after the word "collected", to insert "on or after July 1, 1941", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That moneys collected on or after July 1, 1941, as extra compensation for overtime service of inspectors and employees of the Immigration Service pursuant to the act of March 2, 1931 (46 Stat. 1467), shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the appropriation for the payment of salaries, field personnel of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and the appropriation so credited shall be available for the payment of such compensation.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

UTILIZATION OF CERTAIN LANDS ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN

The bill (H. R. 9389) to more effectively utilize certain lands of the public domain, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I understand that Calendar No. 9092, House bill 9389, has now been reached on the calendar.

This bill is a sort of an omnibus measure. For example, on page 3 we find that the text refers to a number of tribes of Indians, as follows:

First, the Shoshone Nation; second, the eastern division; third, the northwestern division; fourth, the Indians living on the Fort Hall Reservation; fifth, the Piute Indians; sixth, the western bands of the Shoshone Nation. Then we have the Shoshone-Goship Bands of Indians; and next, we have the mixed bands of Bannocks and Shoshones; and last, we have the northwestern division of the Shoshone Nation.

Mr. President, this bill purports to grant each of these Indian tribes, with certain exceptions, the right to go into the Court of Claims to assert their claims against the Government. The record shows that some of these different tribes have heretofore had introduced for them jurisdictional bills.

For example, Senate bill 72 was introduced on January 4, 1939, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The committee considered the bill, reported it favorably, and it passed the Senate on May 19, 1939.

A similar bill, not entirely identical but quite similar, is designated as House bill 9705. The bill has for its purpose almost identically the same end. This bill was passed by the House of Representatives on June 17, 1940, more than 1 year after the House of Representatives had sent to it the Senate bill.

Then the bill before the Senate at this time (H. R. 9389) has attached to it an amendment which embodies the provisions of Senate bill 3083. That was a bill introduced by the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and by that committee the bill was referred to a subcommittee. The subcommittee held extensive hearings on the bill, and I exhibit to the Senate a copy of the hearings.

Mr. President, the Judiciary Committee has made no report upon that bill. I cannot say whether or not the subcommittee made a report to the main committee; but the record shows that the main committee has not made a report upon that bill.

The bill now before the Senate seems to be all-embracing, and seeks to give a number of these bands of Indians the right to go into the Court of Claims under the provisions of Senate bill 3083, a bill which has not as yet been reported to the Senate by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. President, the whole subject matter, in my opinion, should have gone to the Indian Affairs Committee of the House but because of the wording of the title of the bill it was sent, not to the Indian Affairs Committee, but it was diverted to the Public Lands Committee. When the bill reached this body the title was so worded that the secretary no doubt thought the bill should go to the Public Lands Committee; and, not having examined the text of the bill, the bill was referred to the Public Lands Committee.

I make no criticism of the Public Lands Committee. The bill went to that committee in regular order, and it does have to do with public lands in a sense; but, in the main, the bill is an Indian bill, purporting to grant jurisdiction to numerous tribes to go into the Court of Claims under the provisions of the text of a bill which has not been reported on by the Judiciary Committee.

The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], the chairman of the Public Lands Committee, is present, and I shall be glad to yield to him if he has any statement to make as to what should be done with this bill. It deals with public lands in one particular, it deals with Indian Affairs in many particulars, and it deals with the judiciary in another particular. All I want is to make a proper disposition of the measure; but it is not in shape for the Senate to pass upon it as it stands before the Senate at this hour.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. The statement of the Senator from Oklahoma is correct. The bill is one which might appropriately go to either of the committees named; and I think if matters could be so arranged that the two committees could cooperate in working out the problem involved in the bill it would be to the advantage of the bill.

The amendment suggested in the Public Lands Committee in reference to the jurisdictional feature, which was really the part which should more appropriately have gone to the Indian Affairs Committee, was put in because we felt that the limitations and restrictions which came to us in the House bill did not adequately protect the Government. The Senator is correct that the bill as prepared by the Attorney General's office was drawn upon as the basis for the amendment.

While I am on my feet I wish to make a comment upon a practice of the House. The Senator referred to Senate bill 72. Senate bill 72 was a bill introduced by myself for the sole purpose of correcting a typographical error in a bill which was passed. By error, the word "range" had been used where the word "township" should have been used. The bill passed the Senate and went to the House. When it came back 26 pages had been added to it, establishing a right to go into the Court of Claims.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs has heretofore referred a number of these bills to the Comptroller General for a report, and I have a copy of one of these reports. It is found in the report submitted by the chairman of the Public Lands Committee. The particular part to which I refer is on page 4. The Comptroller General reports that House bill 9705 and Senate bill 72 are in substance practically identical, although the two bills are arranged differently.

The last paragraph of the report submitted by the Comptroller General is as follows:

> The third and fourth provisos of H. R. 9389 are similar to the provisions of S. 72 regarding set-offs, and for reasons stated in my report of June 13, 1940, on the latter bill, both provisos are considered undesirable and, it is believed, should be eliminated from the bill.

So the Comptroller General reports adversely upon at least two provisions of the bill. For the present, I am forced to object to the consideration of the measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

The last measure on the calendar, Senate Joint Resolution 286, Calendar No. 2094, has been heretofore passed over.

INSURANCE BENEFITS FOR CERTAIN PERSONS ENGAGED IN COAL-MINING OPERATIONS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4070, Calendar No. 1828.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I did not understand from the reading clerk what happened to Calendar No. 2094, Senate Joint Resolution 286.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the National Guard bill, which, under the agreement, will come up on Monday.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

Mr. McNARY. Has request been made to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4070?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. There is a measure on the calendar which was passed over and which should be considered.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me dispose of this bill, and then I shall have no objection.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the character of the proposed legislation?

Mr. WHEELER. I think there is no opposition whatsoever to it.

Mr. McNARY. I am not myself indicating any opposition.

Mr. WHEELER. It has been held that captive mines come under the Railroad Retirement Act. This bill merely attempts to correct the interpretation which has been put upon the law by the Retirement Board. The Board is in favor of the proposed legislation, the railroads, the mining companies, and the railroad brotherhoods are all in favor of it.

Mr. DAVIS. The miners are also in favor of it.

Mr. WHEELER. The miners are in favor of it; so everyone interested is in favor of it.

Mr. McNARY. Did the committee favorably report the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; the bill was unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4070) to provide for the more uniform coverage of certain persons employed in coal-mining operations with respect to insurance benefits provided for by certain Federal acts, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments, in section 2, page 2, line 11, after the words "end of", to insert the word "each"; in section 3, page 2, line 22, before the word "Fifth", to strike out "Paragraph" and to insert "paragraph"; in section 4, page 3, line 22, to insert a comma between "Act" and "but"; in line 23, after the word "service", to strike out the comma and the word "or" and to insert the word "of"; in section 5, page 5, line 17, after the word "after", insert a comma, and after the word "Act", to strike out the comma, so as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 (a) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, section 1 (a) of the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937, section 1532 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code, and section 1 (a) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act are amended, effective in the case of each such act as of the date of its enactment, by adding at the end of each such section the following new sentence: "The term 'employer' shall not include any company by reason of its being engaged in the mining of coal, the supplying of coal to an employer where delivery is not beyond the mine tipple, and the operation of equipment or facilities therefor, or in any of such activities."
> SEC. 2. Section 1 (a) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 and paragraph First of section 1 of the Railway Labor Act, as amended, are amended, effective in the case of each such act as of the date of its enactment, by adding at the end of each such section and paragraph the following new sentence: "The term 'carrier' shall not include any company by reason of its being engaged in the mining of coal, the supplying of coal to a carrier where delivery is not beyond the mine tipple, and the operation of equipment or facilities therefor, or in any of such activities."

SEC. 3. Section 1 (b) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, section 1 (b) of the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937, section 1532 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code, the first paragraph of section 1 (d) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, section 1 (b) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935, and paragraph Fifth of section 1 of the Railway Labor Act, as amended, are amended, in the case of each such act as of the date of its enactment, by adding at the end of each such section and paragraph the following new paragraph:

"The term 'employee' shall not include any individual while such individual is engaged in the physical operations consisting of the mining of coal, the preparation of coal, the handling (other than movement by rail with standard railroad locomotives) of coal not beyond the mine tipple, or the loading of coal at the tipple."

SEC. 4. (a) The laws hereby expressly amended, the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, and all amendments thereto, shall operate as if each amendment herein contained had been enacted as a part of the law it amends, at the time of the original enactment of such law.

(b) No person (as defined in the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937) shall be entitled, by reason of the provisions of this act, to a refund of, or relief from liability for, any income or excise taxes paid or accrued, pursuant to the provisions of the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937 or subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code, prior to the date of the enactment of this act by reason of employment in the service of any carrier by railroad subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, but any individual who has been employed in such service of any carrier by railroad subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, as is excluded by the amendments made by this act from coverage under the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937 and subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code, and who has paid income taxes under the provisions of such act or subchapter, and any carrier by railroad subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act which has paid excise taxes under the provisions of the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937 or subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code may, upon making proper application therefor to the Bureau of Internal Revenue, have the amount of taxes so paid applied in reduction of such tax liability with respect to employment, as may, by reason of the amendments made by this act, accrue against them under the provisions of title VIII of the Social Security Act or the Federal Insurance Contributions Act (subchapter A of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code).

(c) Nothing contained in this act shall operate (1) to affect any annuity, pension, or death benefit granted under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, prior to the date of enactment of this act, or (2) to include any of the services on the basis of which any such annuity or pension was granted, as employment within the meaning of section 210 (b) of the Social Security Act or section 209 (b) of such act, as amended. In any case in which a death benefit alone has been granted, the amount of such death benefit attributable to services, coverage of which is affected by this act, shall be deemed to have been paid to the deceased under section 204 of the Social Security Act in effect prior to January 1, 1940, and deductions shall be made from any insurance benefit or benefits payable under the Social Security Act, as amended, with respect to wages paid to an individual for such services until such deductions total the amount of such death benefit attributable to such services.

(d) Nothing contained in this act shall operate to affect the benefit rights of any individual under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act for any day of unemployment (as defined in section 1 (k) of such act) occurring prior to the date of enactment of this act.

SEC. 5. Any application for payment filed with the Railroad Retirement Board prior to, or within 60 days after, the enactment of this act, shall, under such regulations as the Social Security Board may prescribe, be deemed to be an application filed with the Social Security Board by such individual or by any person claiming any payment with respect to the wages of such individual, under any provision of section 202 of the Social Security Act, as amended.

SEC. 6. Nothing contained in this act, nor the action of Congress in adopting it, shall be taken or considered as affecting the question of what carriers, companies, or individuals, other than those in this act specifically provided for, are included in or excluded from the provisions of the various laws to which this act is an amendment.

SEC. 7. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 1605 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code, no interest shall, during the period February 1, 1940, to the eighty-ninth day after the date of enactment of this act, inclusive, accrue by reason of delinquency in the payment of the tax imposed by section 1600 with respect to services affected by this act performed during the period July 1, 1939, to December 31, 1939, inclusive, with respect to which services amounts have been paid as contributions under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act prior to the date of enactment of this act.

(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 1601 (a) (3) of the Internal Revenue Code, the credit allowable under section 1601 (a) against the tax imposed by section 1600 for the calendar year 1939 shall not be disallowed or reduced by reason of the payment into a State unemployment fund after January 31, 1940, of contributions with respect to services affected by this act performed during the period July 1, 1939, to December 31, 1939, inclusive, with respect to which services amounts have been paid as contributions under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act prior to the date of enactment of this act: Provided, That this subsection shall be applicable only if the contributions with respect to such services are paid into the State unemployment fund before the ninetieth day after the date of enactment of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOREIGN ACCOUNTS IN FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. House bill 10127, to amend the Federal Reserve Act, was passed over when reached on the calendar. Is any action desired on the bill?

Mr. ADAMS. The bill which went over was Senate bill 4174, relating to foreign accounts in Federal Reserve banks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate bill went over.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; and I was about to ask the Senator from Kentucky, who is also a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, what he thought should be done. I desire to offer an amendment, and the other members of the committee may not concur in the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this bill was almost passed before the recess prior to the Chicago convention, but because of some misunderstanding in the language of the bill which was passed by the House the consideration of the measure was not completed. It is very desirable to have the bill acted upon, but the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] are both temporarily absent, and I am not in a position to urge that the bill be considered today.

Mr. ADAMS. It will be agreeable to the Senator from Kentucky to have the bill go over?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. I suggest that the Senator from Colorado offer his amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. If I may, I will offer the amendment so that it may be pending when the bill is taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending at this time, one offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. ADAMS. That is a different amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment presented by the Senator from Colorado will be printed and will lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations (and withdrawing a nomination), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received and nomination withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HARRISON (for Mr. BAILEY), from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of LINDSAY C. WARREN, of North Carolina, to be Comptroller General of the United States, for a term of 15 years, vice Fred H. Brown, resigned.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion, and several doctors for appointment, in the Public Health Service.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Fred H. Brown, of New Hampshire, to be a member of the United States Tariff Commission for the remainder of the term expiring June 16, 1941.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Brig. Gen. Mervin Gilbert McConnel, Idaho National Guard, to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States, under the provisions of law.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of George P. Baker, of Massachusetts, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board in the Department of Commerce for the remainder of the term expiring December 31, 1943, vice Robert H. Hinckley.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nomination of Walter A. Foote, of Texas, now a Foreign Service officer of class 4, and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service, to be also a consul general.

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Fay L. Bentley, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the juvenile court for the District of Columbia.

NOMINATIONS OF FRED H. BROWN AND LINDSAY C. WARREN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, two reports have been made today from the Committee on Finance, one of the nomination of Mr. Fred H. Brown, of New Hampshire, to be a member of the Tariff Commission, and one of Mr. LINDSAY C. WARREN, a Member of the House of Representatives from North Carolina, to become Comptroller General. In view of the proposed adjournment until Monday, I ask unanimous consent that the two nominations be now considered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, are there favorable reports on both nominations?

Mr. BARKLEY. Both were reported favorably.

Mr. McNARY. Was the report unanimous in each case?

Mr. BARKLEY. It was unanimous.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I hope that consent for the immediate consideration of these nominations will be given. They were both reported unanimously by the Finance Committee.

I should like to take occasion to say, with respect to Mr. LINDSAY C. WARREN, long a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of North Carolina, that his departure from the legislative branch of the Government is a matter of genuine regret to his friends, not only in the State of North Carolina but throughout the country. Mr. WARREN is eminently well fitted for the responsible position of Comptroller General, an office in which very stern and high qualities are demanded at this time. Mr. WARREN is undoubtedly today one of the ablest men in public life in the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to join the Senator from Georgia in the sentiments he has expressed concerning Mr. LINDSAY WARREN, a Member of the House of Representatives from North Carolina. We have all come in contact with him during his long membership in the House, both as Members of the House and in committees of the Senate and the House, and I think there is no more conscientious, able, industrious, or devoted public servant in either branch of Congress than LINDSAY WARREN. While I share the regret that he is leaving the legislative branch, I congratulate the President and the Government on the prospect of his service in the important position to which he has been appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the nominations.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Fred H. Brown, of New Hampshire, to be a member of the United States Tariff Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL

The legislative clerk read the nomination of LINDSAY C. WARREN, of North Carolina, to be Comptroller General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the President be notified immediately of both these confirmations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be immediately notified.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, August 5, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Reverend Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou God of all goodness we thank Thee for the blessings with which Thou dost crown our lives.

We pray that in the thought and work of this day we may have an eye single to Thy glory. May we have a larger share in ministering to the welfare and happiness of mankind. Fill us with a sincere desire to bring about a more ethical and equitable distribution of the necessities of life.

Wilt Thou bless Thy servants in their endeavors to find a way out of the dark valley of tribulation and depression in which our world is groping? May all the nations of the earth be brought back to the spiritual moorings from which they have drifted. We know that Thou art standing with outstretched arms waiting to welcome their return.

God grant that the heart of humanity may be attuned to a willing obedience to the spirit of the Christ, in Whose name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on three subjects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I have been granted permission to speak to this body this afternoon. Unfortunately I have not been able to gather all the information I need for an address of that kind and I therefore ask unanimous consent that I may be given the same time next Monday instead of this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes on next Monday after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARE asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a statement from the Commissioner of Education and the Administrator of N. Y. A.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a statement that Secretary Stimson made yesterday before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes on Tuesday next after disposition of any business on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial written by Sedgwick Kistler, for the Lock Haven Express of July 30, 1940. I may say that Mr. Kistler is former Democratic chairman of the State of Pennsylvania, and this editorial is in reference to the third term.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Harrisburg Patriot.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in opposition to Resolution 576 that has been introduced in the House and to include therein a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from one of the local papers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Boston Herald.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY]?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have leave of absence from August 5 to August 26, inclusive, to serve in the United States Army at the Army maneuvers to be held at Plattsburg, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the genteman from New Jersey [Mr. VREELAND]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief but very interesting letter from Major General Rivers, retired.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, recently two patriotic citizens, constituents of mine, tried to volunteer as soldiers in the United States Army. One was rejected because a portion of one of his toes was missing. The other was rejected because he was half an inch too short. If these rigid requirements are to continue when and if the proposed draft legislation is enacted into law, there will certainly be a notable increase of caudal malformations, both artificial and congenital. I hope the good news that a deformed toe is complete insurance against military service will not get out until something is done to meet the situation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the remarks I hope to make on the bill under consideration today a copy of the text of the Habana declaration on inter-American economics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROMJUE asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short article by Mr. Jesse S. Cottrell.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

AFTER MOBILIZATION—WHAT?

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, in the Appendix of the RECORD, on page 14818 I have an extension of remarks entitled "After Mobilization—What?" This outlines a plan which has been worked out by Col. Albert H. Stackpole, of the Pennsylvania National Guard, in conjunction with some other members of the guard. I believe this plan should receive the careful study of all the Members of the House while we are about to consider the military conscription bill. I merely wish to call it to your attention and urge you to read it carefully.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short newspaper article, and also a letter from a resident of my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from Colonel Rutherford of the Planning Branch of the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, supplementing the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON], I may say that the Army refused me because I am too old. I am 37.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein two articles, one on national defense and the Republican Members of the House of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and the other, an article from the Inglewood Daily News by Assemblyman Jack B. Tenney, of California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the reception to Secretary Hull this morning, and also to include an article by Monsignor Ready.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from the President of our State University.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed the proceedings of the American Forum of the Air participated in by the gentlemen from Illinois, Mr. EVERETT M. DIRKSEN and Mr. T. V. SMITH, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. FRED L. CRAWFORD, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. SAM HOBBS.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3998) to increase the credit resources of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3998, with Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into yesterday, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] is entitled to recognition for 1 hour and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] is entitled to recognition for 1 hour.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides additional lending power in the amount of $500,000,000 for the Commodity Credit Corporation. The Commodity Credit Corporation was established as an independent branch of the Government for the purpose of protecting the farmers of the Nation in the marketing of their crops. Later, the Corporation became a part of the Department of Agriculture of the United States.

Under an act passed in 1938, the capital of the Corporation was fixed at $100,000,000, and under the provisions of that act the Treasury of the United States is required to have an audit and appraisal annually to ascertain the status of the capital structure of the Corporation. In the event the capital structure of the Corporation should become impaired, the Treasury is required to restore the capital to $100,000,000. In case the assets of the Corporation disclose a surplus above the capital structure of $100,000,000, the excess is to be paid into the Treasury of the United States by the Commodity Credit Corporation. An accounting was had under the provisions of the act of 1938, on March 31 of this year, and it was ascertained that the Corporation was due the Treasury an amount of $43,756,731.01. It is estimated that there will be needed for the operations of the Corporation in connection with the 1940 crop, an additional amount of $500,000,000.

Of course, there is no way to ascertain in exact dollars and cents what these requirements will be, but it is certain that with the crop prospects now indicated and world conditions and world markets upset and disturbed as they are, and which will necessarily continue to be during the coming months, there will be an unusual and urgent need for loans by the Corporation if we are to protect the farmers of the Nation against the sacrifice of their crops and the destruction of their purchasing power.

The estimate of requirements for loans during 1940 are as follows: On cotton, 3,300,000 bales, $150,000,000; corn, 260,000,000 bushels, $150,000,000; wheat, 140,000,000 bushels, $90,000,000; tobacco, $40,000,000; and other crops, $60,000,000, making a total of $490,000,000.

I have a letter from the President addressed to the Speaker. The letter is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, July 1, 1940.

The SPEAKER, THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a letter dated June 27, 1940, from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to the provisions of the act approved March 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 107), an act to maintain unimpaired the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation at $100,000,000, and for other purposes, an appraisal of all the assets and liabilities of the said Corporation as of March 31, 1940.

On the basis of such appraisal the Commodity Credit Corporation has been directed to deposit in the Treasury the sum of $43,756,731.01. During the fiscal year 1938 it was necessary for the Congress to appropriate $94,285,404.73 to maintain unimpaired the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and it was necessary for the Congress to appropriate for the fiscal year 1939 a further amount of $119,599,918.05 to maintain unimpaired the capital of the Corporation. There has been appropriated $213,885,322.78 for this purpose, and after giving effect to the recovery of $43,756,731.01 during the current fiscal year, the net expenditures for the last 3 years amount to $170,128,591.77.

The policy adopted by the Congress and incorporated in the act approved March 6, 1938, providing for an annual appraisal of the assets of the Commodity Credit Corporation, makes it possible to include currently in each annual Budget the expenditures necessary to support the program which that Corporation is engaged upon or the receipts which the Government receives from that activity.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

I have a letter from the president of the American Farm Bureau Federation that I should like also to include in my remarks. The letter is as follows:

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C., June 6, 1940.

Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL,
Chairman, House Committee on Banking and Currency,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CHAIRMAN STEAGALL: I want to endorse and urge the passage of H. R. 9931, a bill to increase the credit resources of the Commodity Credit Corporation, by increasing the borrowing power of that Corporation from $900,000,000 to $1,400,000,000.

Since the Commodity Credit Corporation was established in 1933, it has been a major factor in protecting and aiding virtually all branches of American agriculture. Its loans on cotton, corn, wheat, rye, tobacco, peanuts, prunes, raisins, hops, pecans, figs, dates, butter, naval stores, wool, and mohair have prevented chaotic market conditions for these commodities and have been of untold benefit to farmers throughout the United States. These loans are fundamental to the agricultural production, marketing, and ever-normal granary programs.

I know that you have observed the drastic price declines that have resulted from the recent war developments. No one can foresee what further changes may occur between now and harvesttime. From present indications, however, it appears that agriculture needs the services of the Commodity Credit Corporation more than ever in the past. Changes in the war situation now occur with much greater speed than they did in 1914, and certainly American agriculture should not be abandoned to such ineffective efforts as the "buy a bale" movement which had to be adopted for cotton when the war broke out in the fall of 1914. It would be a historic injustice if agriculture were left without effective protection during the marketing period this fall and prices should subsequently rise as they did during the first World War.

The American Farm Bureau Federation therefore urges the immediate passage of H. R. 9931 to enable the Commodity Credit Corporation to function effectively during this emergency.

At the meeting of the board of directors of the federation held in Chicago on June 3 and 4 the effect of the war upon American agriculture was given very thorough consideration and a number of recommendations to meet this situation were adopted. I enclose a copy of the recommendations of our board with respect to the surplus problems growing out of the present emergency.

Sincerely yours,

EDW. A. O'NEAL, President.

EMERGENCY RESERVES

Hundreds of thousands of homeless and starving people are now cut off from their normal supplies of food and clothing; American farmers, who have hitherto supplied these people are now faced with disastrously low prices for the farm commodities that are dependent upon these markets; they are also faced, if the experience of the past is repeated, with enlarged demands in the post-war period and the prospect of inflated prices leading to disruptive expansion of farm plant; and as a nation we should now avoid wastage or loss in all essential food supplies and positive steps should be taken to store our surpluses against the time when they may be urgently needed either for our own use or for a hungry world.

Immediate steps should therefore be taken by the Federal Government to (1) make available to the Red Cross or other agencies funds for the purchase of such food and fiber supplies as can now be used to relieve distress in war areas; and (2) within the framework of the present agricultural program to take steps to acquire in volume such stocks of meat and dairy products and tree and field crops both in raw and processed form as will prevent demoralization of domestic markets and constitute a full reserve against any world need which we may be called upon to meet.

For the carrying out of the above policy, we now urge appropriation of $100,000,000 to be used by the American Red Cross for present distribution of food and fiber to victims of war and that complete provision be made as necessary for acquisition of raw or processed farm crops for storage against future needs.

EFFECT OF THE WAR ON AGRICULTURE

The present war, and also large expenditures on our own defenses, and peace settlements the nature of which cannot be foreseen, will all have a profound effect on our agriculture. It may be that some domestic outlets will improve temporarily, but we must expect that both our domestic and foreign markets will suffer violent disturbance. Perhaps some of our present foreign markets will be lost forever. We insist upon the following measures to meet this situation:

1. The use of loan and storage operations and marketing agreements to cushion the shock of these disturbances as they affect producers of distressed commodities.

2. The continuation, perfecting, and as may be necessary, the great expansion of present machinery for moving surpluses into domestic and foreign consumption.

3. Use of all reasonable safeguards against speculation in agricultural land with its attendant, disastrous effects on farm debt and family ownership and tenure.

4. Discourage bringing of new lands into production or breaking up of range lands where nothing can result save the eventual distress of the individuals concerned and the wastage of the lands involved.

5. Preparation for the sudden withdrawal of war demand or armament expenditures with measures which will cushion the shock of depression and restore the flow of peacetime purchasing power of all kinds.

I wish also to incorporate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, May 18, 1940.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is a recommendation that consideration be given to an urgent need for legislation to increase the credit resources of the Commodity Credit Corporation of the Department of Agriculture.

It is necessary that the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation—under the provisions of section 4 of the act approved March 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 107), as amended by the act of March 4, 1939 (53 Stat. 510)—be increased somewhat in order to make it possible for the Corporation to perform the various essential functions authorized and directed by the Congress: To carry out the mandatory loan provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 with respect to corn, cotton, and wheat; to continue to provide reasonably adequate and commensurate services with respect to other crops; to meet emergencies arising as a consequence of abnormally large crops, such as occurred in cotton in 1937, or as a consequence of war, such as occurred in the case of tobacco during the past season; to make, whenever authorized and directed by the Congress, such temporary advances to other agencies of the Department of Agriculture as may be required for short-time seasonal needs; and to make payments into the Treasury of the United States (a payment of $75,000,000 is now estimated for this spring), representing any surplus of the Corporation's net worth over its stated capital, as directed by the Congress in section 2 of the act.

In order that the Corporation will have the minimum credit resources to perform these essential and desirable requirements, it is recommended that the aggregate amount of obligations which the Corporation may issue and have outstanding at any one time, under the provisions of section 4 of the act, be increased to not less than $1,400,000,000.

As required by Budget Circular 344, this matter was referred to the Bureau of the Budget, and under date of May 13 the Director thereof advised this Department that there would be no objection to the submission of this proposed legislation to the Congress.

Sincerely,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

In addition, I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to which is attached a statement of the figures and all desirable information in connection with the audit and appraisal of the accounts of the Corporation had on the 31st of March 1940. I am sure this information will be valuable to Members of the House and I ask that it be incorporated in the Appendix to the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the Commodity Credit Corporation must have an increase in its credit resources if it is to be enabled to serve American agriculture this fall. I want to call attention to a few pertinent facts which show the value of loan programs and the efficiency with which they are handled for the benefit of American agriculture. The Commodity Credit Corporation makes loans to farmers and farm organizations for the purpose of protecting farm incomes and avoiding the disastrous effects of undue and unnecessary declines in market prices. By reason of these loans it is no longer necessary for farmers to sacrifice their crops on temporarily depressed markets. In place of dumping their products into the hands of unwilling buyers and bringing about chaotic conditions which have characterized our markets for agricultural products in the past, producers are now able to secure adequate loans on their products and sell them in an orderly manner. These loans are made without recourse upon the producer-borrower except in case of fraud, and therefore effectively serve their purpose as a major form of price protection to American farmers. Naturally such loans could not be made by private banking institutions. Private institutions have been enabled to participate in the larger loan programs of the Commodity Credit Corporation, however, by means of offers made by the Corporation to buy paper obtained by private agencies in connection with these loan programs. As a result, the services of the commercial banking institutions in the country have been utilized and the purely administrative expenses of the Commodity Credit Corporation have been very small.

During the 7 years that it has been in operation, the Commodity Credit Corporation has made over 10,000,000 separate loans to farmers, totaling in excess of $1,500,000,000. These loans have been made on 17 different commodities, namely, cotton, corn, wheat, rye, barley, tobacco, peanuts, prunes, raisins, hops, pecans, figs, dates, butter, naval stores, wool, and mohair. These loans are made available only when market conditions are unsatisfactory.

In the past 2 years the appraisals made by the Treasury have shown a paper loss totaling $213,000,000. This year it is expected that the audit now being made will show a paper profit of between thirty-five and one hundred million dollars. On the liquidations of approximately $650,000,000 worth of loans to date, actual losses have amounted to less than $25,000,000, or about 4 percent. Certainly this is a small cost for the protection these loan programs have given to American agriculture.

One of the most important aspects of any governmental program is the administrative costs. The administrative expenses of the Commodity Credit Corporation have amounted to only two-fifths of 1 percent of the loans handled.

We have all seen the development of unsatisfactory conditions in the markets for our various agricultural products from time to time over the past 7 years, and have seen those conditions met promptly and effectively by these loan programs. In the spring of 1938, wool fell to a level far below the world price plus tariff. No one knows how much lower it would have gone in the absence of a commodity-loan program. The loan program stopped the decline immediately and later on in the year growers redeemed their wool and sold it at a profit.

The withdrawal of British buyers on the outbreak of war last fall necessitated the closing of the flue-cured tobacco markets in mid-season. Prompt action by the Commodity Credit Corporation permitted these markets to reopen and farmers were able to market their crop.

In 1937 this country produced the largest cotton crop in its history, approximately 19,000,000 bales. If the Commodity Credit Corporation's loan program had not been available, cotton prices would probably have fallen to the levels of 1932 and several years' work in building up the purchasing power of the South would have been largely destroyed. Although the Commodity Credit Corporation still owns, or has loans on, approximately 9,000,000 bales of cotton, these stocks have been reduced by 2,000,000 bales in the current year.

No one can tell with certainty how large this year's production will be. We do know, however, that almost every year some crops are overproduced and others are underproduced. Weather hazards must always be reckoned with in agricultural production.

In recent weeks the "blitzkrieg" in Europe has eliminated a large part of the farmer's export market. No one can foretell how much of it will remain by the time the American farmer brings his crops to market this fall. The present export situation is far worse than it was in 1932. Unless the Commodity Credit Corporation is permitted to continue its loan programs, American farmers will face ruin during the coming year. Commodity-loan programs will be needed this fall as they have never been needed before. The only serious question in connection with this bill is whether an increase of $500,000,000 in the credit resources of the Commodity Credit Corporation will be sufficient.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I know how difficult it is to present this bill in its true light so that there can be anything approaching an understanding of the issues involved, because unfortunately, we have a lion by the tail and think we cannot let go.

There is nothing of a defense nature in this bill. There is nothing in this bill which involves South American cartels or the export or import of crops, except as the domestic market is further demoralized by the continuance of the practice which the Commodity Credit Corporation has engaged in since its inception.

This Corporation was set up by Executive order under authority contained in the National Industrial Relations Act. It first had a capital of $3,000,000, all paid in by the Treasury. Sometime later the amount of capital and the amount of loans became so grossly out of balance that we raised the capital $97,000,000 to make a total of $100,000,000. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation subscribed for this additional $97,000,000, and up until the reorganization bill was passed, by which this Corporation was transferred to the Department of Agriculture, the Commodity Credit Corporation has been administered by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. When we had made approximately $284,000,000 of cotton loans against the original $3,000,000 of capitalization we increased the capital by $97,000,000 to make a total of $100,000,000. All we did was to effect a paper transaction whereby we transferred from loan to the purchase of capital the $97,000,000. At the present time therefore the Commodity Credit Corporation has a capital of $100,000,000.

We have authorized loans on agricultural commodities against that hundred million dollars, in the aggregate, to the amount of $900,000,000. This bill increases the amount the Commodity Credit Corporation may loan against that capital to $1,400,000,000, or an increase in the loan authorizations of $500,000,000.

We have heard a great deal of criticism on the Democratic side of the House of the manner in which the old Farm Board functioned. I have listened to speech after speech made on this floor and have read numerous articles condemning the Farm Board as impractical, because it cost the Government so much money. There was a limitation on the amount of money which the old Farm Board could lose of $500,000,000. They did not lose anywhere near that, but the manner in which the assistance was to be given by the Farm Board was a thing which was most roundly condemned. The Commodity Credit Corporation is doing exactly the same job in connection with the removal of surpluses from the market that the old Farm Board tried to do, and would have been successful in doing, if there had not been a change of administration, with this exception that, instead of losing a possible $500,000,000, we may lose much more than that through the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation. In this bill we are asking for an authorization to loan another $500,000,000, which will result in an increase in their losses. It cannot be otherwise.

I shall confine most of my remarks to the question of cotton. We cannot attack the fundamental reason why we are not moving the cotton crop in this bill. You have already loaned hundreds of millions of dollars and already taken hundreds of millions of dollars of losses on cotton, and you are going to continue to do it until we find the fundamental reason for the failure of our Department of Agriculture to find ways and means of moving our cotton crop. At the present time the Commodity Credit Corporation owns—actually owns—6,500,000 bales of cotton. In addition to this, they have under loans another 2,500,000 bales of cotton, which in the course of time will become the property of the Government, because the farmer is given the loan above the market prices and loses all interest in the cotton when he gets his money. When the loan matures he must repay or it is liquidated by foreclosure and the Government takes title to the cotton.

So at the present time the Government has in warehouses 9,900,000 bales of cotton. The average yearly cotton production in this country is approximately 12,000,000 bales. This program as outlined for us authorizes the Commodity Credit Corporation to loan on another 3,300,000 bales of cotton. The 1940 program provides that they may loan on 3,300,000 bales of cotton because that is the estimated surplus, so at the end of the 1940 program, if this bill is passed, the Government will own 12,300,000 bales of cotton, or more than 1 year's production of cotton. Two years ago we exported only 3,000,000 bales of cotton. We usually exported 8,000,000 bales of cotton. We produce ordinarily about half the cotton which is consumed in the world. Roundly about 24,000,000 bales of cotton are consumed in the world. We produce half of that and we used to export more than half of the amount we produce. The same year that we exported these 3,000,000 bales of cotton, instead of our usual 8,000,000 bales, the world consumption of cotton increased 3,000,000 bales to approximately 27,000,000 bales of cotton. Because of the activity of the Triple A and the Commodity Credit Corporation, we have largely destroyed our export market for cotton. The only solution of that problem which is offered to us is another $500,000,000 to take the surplus cotton off the market and put it into warehouses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I shall take an additional five minutes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. In a moment. Because of this there has grown up in the South a new industry, that of warehousing Government-owned cotton. It was called to our attention when the so-called barter bill was presented, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] made a detailed study of that matter and opposed that bill on the floor; and I am given to understand from a reliable source that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is directly responsible for reducing the warehouse charges on this cotton from 25 cents a bale per month to 10 or 12 cents a bale per month, saving the Government of the United States and taxpayers literally millions of dollars. [Applause]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman referred to the activities of the A. A. A. in connection with the loss of our cotton market. I might say, in addition to that, the activities of the New Deal and the A. A. A. not only lost us our foreign market for cotton, but it also encouraged additional foreign production of cotton, so that our foreign cotton market is permanently lost.

In 1933 and prior to 1933 our average exports of cotton were 8,000,000 bales, but after the New Deal went into operation under the farm program of curtailed production, our exports dropped gradually until they amounted to three and one-half million bales last year. I want to ask the gentleman a question referring to this six and one-half million bales of cotton that the Government now holds. How much did the Government pay for that cotton?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Most of this cotton was pegged at 12 cents a pound. Interest charges and warehouse charges against this cotton which is now in the warehouses, in addition to the loan, presents a situation where the Government would have to sell this cotton at 16½ cents, or something like 7 cents above the market price to even get its money out of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. COLE of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. COLE of New York. Can the gentleman advise us what proportion of the $900,000,000 of the capital of the corporation has been used to buy cotton?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I can tell you the amount outstanding at the present time, I believe. The dollar value of this 6,650,000 bales of cotton is approximately $380,000,000. That is, it is carried on the books of the Commodity Credit Corporation at that figure.

Mr. COLE of New York. And the next largest crop is what?

Mr. WOLCOTT. We have 90,000,000 bushels of corn at a value of $55,000,000; 176,000,000 pounds of tobacco valued at $36,500,000. The estimated loss on this cotton at the present time is $148,625,000.

Mr. COLE of New York. But the fact is that nearly half of the authorized capital of this Corporation has been used to buy up the surplus cotton crop?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is right, and the authorization in this bill will be necessary in order to carry this cotton, because these interest and storage charges are pyramiding every year against it. As I say, we have a lion by the tail, and it seems we cannot let go at this particular time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman spoke a moment ago about curtailed production. Can the gentleman tell us how much we curtailed our production when we plowed under the cotton——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the gentleman must have misunderstood me. I did not say anything about curtailed production.

Mr. RICH. But the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] spoke about it. How much did we pay the farmers for not raising cotton?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not know. I know that we have paid the farmers already $380,000,000 on their cotton crops, and at present we have taken a paper loss of $148,625,000, and we stand to take a loss of almost half of the amount which has been loaned on cotton.

Mr. RICH. And, notwithstanding that loss, we have curtailed the production of cotton and the Department of Agriculture is now paying the farmers for not raising cotton?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RICH. So we are going to take a loss there?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman is correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 17 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple bill. The Commodity Credit Corporation was organized in 1933 with a capital stock of $100,000,000. If there is less than $100,000,000 Congress must, under the law, appropriate enough to make it $100,000,000. If there is more than $100,000,000, then the surplus is carried to the Treasury Department. This year we will place into the Treasury a surplus of nearly $50,000,000. That is the testimony of witnesses. That is the testimony of the officials of the Commodity Credit Corporation. I do not understand where my good friend, Mr. WOLCOTT, got his figures. I think the figures that you can rely upon are the figures from the people who handle this department. I brought it out on examination myself. It is in the record. I asked them, "In your 7 years' operation how much money have you loaned?" The reply was "$1,500,000,000." "Give amount you have liquidated." The reply was, "We have liquidated $650,000,000." "What are your losses on all farm commodities?" The answer is in the record. "Less than $25,000,000."

I know of no agency of this Government that has helped the distressed farmers as much as this agency. The testimony shows this. It cannot be refuted. This is the testimony of the men who operate the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I will ask the gentleman if the record shows any foundation for the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], who stated a moment ago that the losses were $500,000,000?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Absolutely none.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I do.

Mr. STEAGALL. The testimony will be found on page 9 of the hearings, where it is specifically stated by Mr. Robbins that less than $25,000,000 covered the total losses on transactions that have been closed.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. That is the answer to the question. The pending bill empowers this agency to borrow $500,000,000 additional. It cannot now borrow over $900,000,000. We all know it is important on account of our loss in export trade in cotton and other agricultural commodities that we make some preparation to offset this loss. Under present world conditions it seems that our exports will be further curtailed.

Some way must be provided to peg the prices of these commodities, and therefore it is very necessary to increase the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation from $900,000,000 to $1,400,000,000. If further loans are not made on our basic commodities, no harm will be done by passing this bill, and, in the words of Hon. Jesse Jones, we will be ready with a shotgun in the corner.

It may be soon, or when this war is over, we will have to depend on home markets and those to the north and south of us. Therefore I repeat it is imperative that we loan to producers enough money so they will be in position to hold their products if the prices are materially reduced.

In a discussion on the reciprocal trade agreements legislation I stated, and I am more convinced now than ever, that we must have an efficient tool for dealing scientifically and realistically with international commercial problems in a war-torn world and rebuilding when peace comes a world economy that will permit men and groups and nations to exchange their products to their mutual advantage.

Commodity Credit Corporation has an authorized and paid-in capital of $100,000,000. The Congress has also provided the Corporation with a borrowing power of $900,000,000 on the credit of the United States Government. This would be increased to $1,400,000,000 under the provisions of H. R. 9931.

The Congress has also provided for readjusting the net worth of Commodity Credit Corporation to the amount of its $100,000,000 capital once each year. This was done by requiring that the Corporation's assets and liabilities be appraised as of each March 31, on the basis of the market prices prevailing on that day, and providing (a) that any deficiency of its net worth under $100,000,000 be restored by congressional appropriation, and (b) that any excess in its net worth over $100,000,000 shall be paid into the general fund of the United States Treasury. The total amount appropriated heretofore for this purpose has been $213,000,000. The actual losses realized by the Corporation to date, however, are less than $25,000,000. This is a small loss in view of the number of distressed and helpless farmers the Corporation has undertaken to benefit and has benefited. It is estimated that the net worth of the Corporation as of March 31, 1940, which is now being determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, will exceed its $100,000,000 capital and require a payment of "surplus" into the United States Treasury this spring of something between $35,000,000 and $100,000,000.

Since the hearings I have been informed that this agency will pay at least $50,000,000 into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman from Michigan, in his remarks a few minutes ago, stated that there never had been any cotton loans paid, that the farmers never paid them. On page 10 of the testimony, the statement of Mr. Robbins, the head of the Corporation, is that the cotton loans liquidated total $376,000,000. Does that not show that considerable cotton loans have been repaid?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. It certainly does.

The Commodity Credit Corporation was formed pursuant to the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act. It was incorporated in October 1933 under the laws of the State of Delaware. All its capital stock is owned by the United States Government. The exclusive voting rights of the stock were vested in the Secretary of Agriculture last August by an Executive order of the President. Prior to that time the Commodity Credit Corporation was an independent agency of the Federal Government. It was managed and operated, however, in close affiliation with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and its loans were made, as required by law, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture. The Corporation has now become, under the President's reorganization order effective July 1, 1939, an integrated part of the Department of Agriculture and, except for certain legal technicalities attributable to the corporate form of organization, operates as a regularly established bureau of the Department under the control and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The Commodity Credit Corporation has made loans on cotton, corn, wheat, rye, tobacco, turpentine, rosin, wool, mohair, figs, dates, prunes, raisins, pecans, and butter. All loans made by the Commodity Credit Corporation are secured by commodities pledged as collateral under either warehouse receipts or chattel mortgages; and in all instances the rate of interest charged the borrowing producer is 3 percent per annum.
